Mr. M L. Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was practically a suit for a declaration that the adoption of the defendant Jang Bahadur Rai, alleged to have been made by Deo Saran Rai, did not, in fact, take place and that Jang Bahadur is not the adopted son of Deo Saran Rai. The plaintiff is the brother of Deo Saran Rai, who is now dead. Musammat Parmati defendant is Deo Saran's widow. She executed a document in which she declared that her husband had adopted Jang Bahadur Rai son of another brother of Deo Saran Rai and that Jang Bahadur was Deo Saran's adopted son. The plaintiff's allegation was that he and Deo Saran were joint and that in fact Deo Saran never adopted any boy. The Court of first instance held in favour of the adoption and dismissed the claim. The lower Appellate Court was of opinion that no adoption took place and that the allegation of an adoption is untrue. It, however, held that the two brothers were separate and not joint as alleged by the plaintiff. The defendant Jang Bahadur has preferred this appeal, and the main contention is that the Court below was not justified in examining the defendant Musammat Parmati, who in the Appellate Court gave evidence contrary to her allegations in the Court of first instance. In our opinion the Appellate Court was competent to examine any of the parties, if it considered it necessary for the ends of justice to do so. Musammat Parmati was a party to the suit and the learned Judge had the power, in our opinion, to examine her for the purpose of ascertaining the facts. He, however, did not decide the case solely or mainly on the evidence of Musammat Parmati but on other evidence to which he refers in his judgment. His finding upon the question of adoption is a finding of fact and must be accepted by us in second appeal. In this view the appeal fails. We dismiss it with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s 73, applicability of, to non-transferable occupancy holding—Landlord and tenant—Transferor of non-transferable occupancy holding, liability of, for rent—Adverse possession of limited interest acquired by transferee—Transferor, whether jointly liable for rent to landlord.

The provisions of section 73 of the Bengal Tenancy Act can not be extended by analogy to the case of a non-transferable occupancy holding. [p. 290, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where the transferor of a non-transferable occupancy holding has acquired the title of a tenant by adverse possession of the limited interest, the transferor is not liable for rent to the landlord. [p. 290, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Burdwan, dated the 4th January 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at that place, dated the 30th November 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose, for the Appellants.—The lower Appellate Court has found that the transferee has acquired the title of a tenant against the landlord by adverse possession. Though the land is in possession of the transferee, the defendant, Binode Behari, is liable nevertheless for the rent. There is several liability. The defendant transferor and the transferee are jointly and severally liable for the rent due. It does not matter that the transferee has obtained adverse possession against the landlord. Refers to section 73 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which says that 'when an occupancy Raiyat transfers his holding without the consent of the landlord, the transferor and the transferee shall be jointly and severally liable to the landlord for arrears of rent, etc.' On the analogy of this section, I submit that the defendant cannot escape his liability for rent. Though I cannot cite any authority for my contention, the principle underlying section 73 is a well-established one. There will be no extension of the application of the section, if the defendant in the present appeal is held liable for rent. The fact that the holding in the present case is a non-transferable one does not make much difference.

Babu Brojo Lal Chuckerberty (with him Babu Susil Coomar Bose), for the Respondent, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

BEACHCROFT, J.—The learned Subordinate Judge has returned the finding after remand that the transferee has acquired the title of a tenant against the landlord by adverse possession of the limited interest. That concludes the case. But the learned Pleader for the appellant argues that in spite of the possession of the transferee the defendant is also liable for the rent. That appears to me to be an impossible proposition. The transferee having acquired his title against the landlord, I cannot see how the transferee and the transferor should be jointly liable for the rent, nor do I see, considering how the transferee has acquired his interest against the landlord, how there can be a several liability. The learned Pleader for the appellant refers to section 73 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That obviously has no application, because it refers to the case of a transferable occupancy holding whereas the holding in the present case is non transferable. Nor do I think that we can extend the principle recognized in section 73 by analogy to the case of a non-transferable holding. Analogies are always dangerous and particularly so in this case. Section 73 is a very natural provision for the protection of the landlord because otherwise a ryot, having a right of transfer, would not be liable for the rent, even if the transfer were not notified to the landlord. It seems to me that the position of the transferee having acquired a limited interest against the landlord is quite inconsistent with the position of the defendant remaining on the land. Therefore, the defendant is not liable for the rent and the appeal ought to be dismissed with costs of all the hearings in all Courts.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Monghyr.

Mr. Muhammad Hasan Jan, for the Appellant.

Mr. Rai Guru Saran Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—The plaintiff instituted the suit for declaration of title and recovery of rent, and after various adjournments the 26th of April 1917 was fixed for the decision of the suit. On that day the Court recorded the following order:—"The Pleader for the plaintiff states that he is unable to adduce any evidence. The plaintiff is also present in Court but does not adduce any evidence in support of his case. The defendant is ready. Ordered, that the suit be dismissed for default of the plaintiff. The defendant will get costs of the suit."

The plaintiff thereupon appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who on the 6th September 1917 held that no appeal lay, as the dismissal was one for default under the provisions of Order IX of the Civil Procedure Code read with rule 2 of Order XVII.

The present second appeal is lodged by the plaintiff against the aforesaid order passed by the Subordinate Judge.

Now the question is whether any second appeal lies.

Order IX relates to procedure on the first day of hearing; rule 3 of that Order states that if neither party appears, the Court may make an order that the suit be dismissed. Rule 8 directs that when the defendant appears and the plaintiff does not appear when the suit is called on for hearing, the Court shall make an order that the suit be dismissed unless the defendant admits the claim or part thereof, in which case the Court shall pass a decree against the defendant upon such admission. Order XVII relates to procedure after the first day of hearing. Rule 2 of that Order enacts that if on the adjourned date parties fail to appear, the Court may proceed to dispose of the suit in one of the modes directed in that behalf by Order IX, or make such other order as it thinks fit; that is to say, if the plaintiff fails to appear, the Court may dismiss the suit under Order IX or fix another date for hearing. If the Court fixes another date for hearing and the plaintiff still fails to appear, the Court may dispose of the suit under rule 2 of Order XVII read with Order IX. If, however, the plaintiff does not fail to appear but fails to produce his evidence or to perform any other act necessary for the progress of the suit, the Court may proceed to decide the suit, forthwith.

In the present case it is contended that the Court has acted under the last part of the rule, that there was an appearance by the plaintiff, and that the Court, refusing further adjournments, has decided the suit forthwith. The order itself does not state under which rule the Court has acted; that is to say, whether under rule 2 or rule 3 of Order XVII. We have, therefore, to look at the facts, so far as they appear in the paper-book, to judge whether or not the order of dismissal was a decision of the suit within the meaning of rule 3; in that case the appeal would lie.

It is contended that because the plaintiff's Pleader did not inform the Court that he had no instructions, the order of dismissal cannot be one under Order IX and that it must be a decree under the latter part of rule 3 of Order XVII.

I am unable to accept this argument. In my opinion what occurred was this, the Pleader who was appearing for the plaintiff said that he had no evidence and thereupon the Court, without applying its mind to the merits of the case or in any way adjudicating upon the rights and liabilities of the parties, dismissed the suit for the default of the plaintiff. That clearly was an order under rule 2.

The personal appearance of the plaintiff in this case makes no difference, for he had engaged a Pleader and was, therefore, not competent so long as his Pleader was acting for him to be heard by the Court. In order that there may be appearance within the meaning of Orders IX and XVII by a Pleader, I think it must be shown that the Pleader was duly instructed and able to answer all material questions put by the Court. There is nothing to show in this case, in fact the indications are quite to the contrary, that the Pleader, when saying that he had no evidence to produce, was duly instructed and able to answer any material questions. In order to apply rule 3, I think, it must be shown that there was something upon which the Court could bring its judicial mind to bear in the shape of either evidence or pleadings and that the Court did before making its decision duly apply its mind. We cannot assume in this case that the Court did so, and we think that it is a safe rule to lay down that unless the facts clearly indicate that there was an adjudication, an order of dismissal, whether it be for want of evidence or not, should be treated as an order under Order IX of the Civil Procedure Code. In this connection I think it advisable to make some reference to the case of Naurang Ram Sahu v. Bhakhori Mandar (1), in which I had occasion to observe that in recording orders of dismissal for laches on the part of the plaintiff, the Court should be careful to state whether he is acting under rule 2 or rule 3 of Order XVII. In that case on the adjourned date of hearing the plaintiff after obtaining time for that purpose failed to amend the plaint, and the Court recorded an order that the suit was dismissed because no steps had been taken for its prosecution. I was of opinion that the Court had not acted under rule 2 because it was the duty of the Court, notwithstanding the failure to amend the plaint, to proceed with the trial of the suit, and because the plaintiff's Pleader being apparently anxious to proceed it could not be said that there was any failure to appear.

In the present case there is no indication that the plaintiff's Pleader was either willing to have the suit decided on the merits or that the Court in any way applied its mind to the rights and liabilities of the parties.

The appeal, therefore, does not lie and the order must be treated as an order under rule 2. The appellant's proper remedy was an application for restoration under Order IX.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908*), O. XVII, r.* 3, scope of—Dismissal of suit for default, legality of—Court, duty of.

Rule 3 of Order XVII of the Civil Procedure Code is an enabling rule and not a mandatory one. [p. 293, col. 2.]

A mere order of dismissal based on default is not a proper or legal order under this rule. The Court should proceed with the disposal of the suit on the materials before it and, if the circumstances are such that it cannot decide the suit forthwith on the materials before it, it should not avail itself of the provisions of that rule. [p. 293, col. 2; p. 294, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, it appeared at the first hearing of a suit that certain defendants had not been served and the Court passed orders adjourning the case and directing issue of summons to all absent defendants on receipt of process-fees, or a proclamation by beat of drum at the expense of the plaintiff, but the plaintiff took no action whatever in respect of the order and on the date of hearing gave no reasons for his default and pleaded no extenuating circumstances but asked for forgiveness and indulgence and the Court dismissed the suit under Order XVII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code:

Held, that under the circumstances rule 3 of Order XVII was inapplicable and should not have been applied. [p. 294, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 15th June 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Class, Shakargarh, District Gurdaspur, dated the 13th February 1918, dismissing the claim.

Mr Abdul Razaq, for the Appellant.

Lala Hari Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are that at the first hearing of the suit, the 11th January 1918, it appears that certain defendants had not been served. The Court passed orders, whether suo motu or at the request of the plaintiff does not appear from the record, to the following effect:—

Summons to issue to all absent defendants on receipt of process-fees, a proclamation by beat of drum to be made for the next hearing, the plaintiff to pay five annas and four annas respectively for the proclamation in the local Tahsil and in the canal colony, the plaintiff to file particulars and addresses of defendants.

respondents in the canal colony by the next day and summons to issue also to them, the defendants present to file their written statements of defence on the 13th February."

The hearing was adjourned to the 13th February.

The plaintiff took no action whatever in respect of the above order but appeared in Court on the 13th February. He then gave no reasons for his defaults and pleaded no extenuating circumstances but asked for indulgence and forgiveness. Some of the defendants were present. The Court dismissed the suit under Order XVII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, and the District Judge dismissed the appeal.

For the appellant it is submitted that Order XVII, rule 3, applied only to an adjournment applied for by a party and not ordered suo motu by a Court as in the present instance. Reliance is placed on Pearee Mohun Bera v. Shama Churn Mytee (1), that the words "any other act" mean some act subsequent to those previously mentioned in the rule and that the Court could proceed only to decide the suit and not dismiss it. The following decisions were relied on: Sitara Begam v. Tulshi Singh (2), Ram Narayan v. Jagdeo Missir (3) and Nagendra Kumar Bose v. Nabin Mandal (4). It is also contended that the suit could not proceed alone against the defendants present in Court as the land was in the joint names of all defendants and that, therefore, the suit was rightly dismissed. The contention that the words "any other act" mean some act subsequent to those previously mentioned is untenable, is not pressed and need not be further dealt with.

For the respondents it is briefly contended that Order XVII, rule 3, does not by its terms indicate that it is applicable only to adjournments granted at the request of a party, that if the rule be held inapplicable the suit might be regarded as dismissed under Order IX, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, and finally, that if the appeal be accepted, costs should be allowed to the respondents throughout.

(4) 1 Ind. Cas. 741; 36 C. 189.

There are a number of judicial decisions dealing with the subject-matter of Order XVII, rule 3, chiefly on the construction of section 158 of Act XIV of 1882, which is the corresponding section. The rule itself provides that in the event of certain defaults a Court may "proceed to decide the suit forthwith." This has been construed in Nagendra Kumar Bose v. Nabin Mandal (4), as meaning that the Court is not empowered to proceed to dispose of the suit by recording further evidence or otherwise proceeding with the suit, but that the Court is merely empowered to decide the suit forthwith. The learned Judges referred to the decisions in Mariannissa v. Ramkalpa Gorain (5) and Cooke v. Equitable Coal Company (6) as laying down the general principles applicable to section 158, Civil Procedure Code. In the former case it was held that the meaning of section 158 was that the Court is to proceed with the disposal of the suit on the materials before it. The decision in Sitara Begam v. Tulshi Singh (2) is to the same effect and is an authority for holding that the suit cannot be summarily dismissed, but apparently the learned Judges in that case were of opinion that the Court could take further evidence and dispose of the suit in a normal way. In Nagendra Kumar Bose v. Nabin Mandal (4), already referred to, the learned Judges held that such a construction of that decision did not necessarily follow and if that had been intended, they were not prepared to place the same construction on section 158. They held, therefore, that under that section the Court was merely empowered to decide the suit forthwith.

It may be urged how can the suit be decided forthwith if there are no materials on the record for a decision as in this case except by dismissal. Any such difficulty is, I think, solved by bearing in mind that rule 3 of Order XVII is an enabling rule and not a mandatory one. If the circumstances are such that the Court cannot decide the suit forthwith on the materials before it, it should not avail itself of the provisions of that rule. It is clear, as pointed out in Sitara Begam v. Tulshi Singh (2), that a mere order of dismissal based on a default is not a proper or legal order under section 158. Had that been the intention of the Legislature, it could have easily provided for the dismissal of the suit as a penalty. This has not been done and, on the contrary, the Court is empowered, if it desires to avail itself of Order XVII, rule 3, to decide the suit on the materials already before it.

(5) 34 C. 235; 5 C. L. J. 260.
(6) 8 C. W. N. 621.

In the present case the first Court was not in a position to decide the suit. It had no materials for decision before it. The written statements of defence had not even been filed. Under these circumstances I think Order XVII, rule 3, was inapplicable and should not have been applied. This Court is not concerned now with the orders of dismissal or otherwise which the first Court might have passed under other rules and orders but did not.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and remand the suit to the Munsif at Shakargarh and direct him to proceed according to law. Costs in the lower Appellate Court and in this Court shall be costs in the case. This appeal will, for the same reasons, dispose of the connected Second Appeal No. 2558.

Appeal accepted.

THE FIRM KNOWN AS BEDHA RAM DEVI DIAL, THROUGH DEVI DIAL—DECREE HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 5—Execution of decree—Duty of Court—"Striking off" application, whether permissible—Order releasing property from attachment, effect of— Decree-holder, whether can subsequently apply for execution by arrest of judgment-debtor.

In execution of a decree the decree-holder attached certain property of the judgment-debtor and the same was made over to a sapurdar. Certain attempts at sale proving abortive, the bailiff reported on 1st May 1916 that the sapurdar had left and the goods were in possession of the judgment-debtor who, however, presented a written statement denying that he was in possession. Owing to the non-attendance of parties, the execution proceedings were consigned to the record room on the 7th June 1916. A year later, the decree-holder made a fresh application for execution on the 27th July 1917 and a specific order was recorded that the goods were released and the application was again consigned to the record room. In November 1917 the decree-holder applied for execution by the arrest of the judgment-debtor:

Held, (1) that the Court was not justified in "striking off" the application for execution on the 7th June 1916, which should either have been dismissed or adjourned, as the Court was not legally competent to do anything else; [p. 296, col. 1.]

(2) that it must be held that the application was not dismissed and that the attachment continued to subsist; [p. 296, col. 1.]

(3) that the order of release must be regarded as one involving and implying the dismissal of the second application and that that application should be held as having been dismissed; [p. 296, cols. 1 & 2.]

(4) that, consequently, the attachment ceased on the 27th July 1917 and the goods were thereafter at the disposal of the judgment-debtor; [p. 296, col. 2.]

(5) that, in any event, the judgment-debtor was a party to the disappearance of the property and the decree-holder was entitled to execute the decree by the arrest of the judgment-debtor. [p. 296, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 18th February 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Class, Lyallpur, dated the 18th December 1917, issuing a warrant for the arrest of the judgment-debtor appellant.

Lala Ram Chand Manchanda, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mu'and Lal Puri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent, the decree-holder, obtained a decree against the appellant, the judgment-debtor, and in execution of the decree he attached certain property of the latter and the same was made over to a sapurdar, or care-taker, who gave the usual receipt and undertaking. It is a very common practice in such cases for the goods seized to remain in the possession of the judgment debtor. Certain attempts at sale proving abortive, the bailiff reported on the 1st May 1916 that the care-taker had left the town and that the goods were in the possession of the judgment-debtor who was responsible for the failure. The judgment debtor, however, presented a written statement in Court denying that he was in possession and suggesting collusion between the decree-holder and the care-taker, and the execution proceedings were consigned to the record room on the 7th June 1916 owing to the non-attendance of the parties. A year later the decree holder made a fresh application for execution of the decree. On the 27th July 1917, owing to the absence of the decree-holder, a specific order was recorded that the goods were released, and the application was again consigned to the record room. In each of the orders the Munsif uses the word "dakhil daftar." In November 1917 the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree by the arrest of the judgment-debtor. The Munsif wrote a very confused order, but he issued a warrant for the arrest of the judgment-debtor on the ground that the property had been released. On appeal the lower Appellate Court held that no attachment subsisted after the first application for execution had been dismissed in default, that Bhana Mal v. Ganpat Rai (1) relied on by the judgment-debtor was inapplicable, inasmuch as the property had not been released in that case, and that the judgment-debtor had his remedy against the care taker and he, therefore, dismissed the appeal. The care taker is alleged to be a man of straw and to have disappeared.

The judgment debtor appeals to this Court and on his behalf it is argued that the report of the bailiff is not evidence, that there is no evidence on the record to show that the goods remained in his possession, that the mere dismissal of the applications for execution and the specific order of release did not in fact release them, that nothing was done to give effect to the order of release, that the judgment-debtor never recovered the goods, that they must be regarded as still actually seized and in the possession of the care taker and that the principles enunciated in Bhana Mal v. Ganpat Rai (1) were applicable to the case. No other authorities have been referred to.

It is convenient to give the following extract from the judgment relied on, which is of a Division Bench of the Chief Court: "in Chitty's Archbold's Practice of the Queen Bench Division, Edition 14, Chapter LXXV, 16 and 17 (page 869), authorities are cited for the following rules: as soon as the Sheriff seizes the debtor's goods under the writ he is thereby absolutely discharged to the extent of the levy, whether the Sheriff sell the goods or return the writ or not, or though they afterwards be rescued from him; and the debtor may plead this to an action on the judgment, or, if another writ be sued out against him for the same debt, he may be relieved upon motion. The Sheriff is liable to the execution creditor for the amount of the levy. Applying these rules our answer to the second question is that the decree-holder cannot further execute his decree against the person or property of the judgment debtor, other than that attached and made over to the care-taker unless it be proved that the judgment-debtor was a party to .the disappearance of the property attached."

On behalf of the respondent it is contended that the goods were released, that thereafter the decree-holder could not demand their sale or otherwise put forward any right or claim in respect of them without fresh execution and attachment, that, till he did so, he was in no way concerned with the goods, that, on the contrary, the goods having been released the care-taker was no longer entitled to possession of them and was relieved of all obligation except to return them to the judgment-debtor if they were not in the latter's possession already, that the goods were no longer attached and were at the disposal of the judgment-debtor who alone had any rights in respect of them and that, therefore, the judgment in Bhana Mal v. Ganpat Rai (1) was inapplicable and that the decree-holder was entitled to take out fresh execution, but no authorities have been referred to. It was also stated that the rules of English Law adopted and followed in Bhana Mal v. Ganpat Rai (1) were not applicable to India but, here again, no reasons or authorities were given for this contention.

The Civil Procedure Code of 1882 did not provide for cases where the application for execution could not proceed for default of the decree-holder and a practice arose of "striking off" or shelving the application. Such a practice was not justified by that Code and the proper order was one either granting or dismissing the application in whole or in part. The effect of "striking off" was discussed in numerous cases and it was held that no general rule was applicable, that the attachment was not necessarily put to an end and that the effect would depend on the circumstances of the case. A full discussion of this subject is to be found in Woodroffe and Ameer Ali's Commentary on the Code, 2nd Edition, page 960. The defect in the old Code was pointed out by Edge, C. J., in Dhonkal Singh v. Phakkar Singh (2) and in the present Code the situation is dealt with by Order XXI, rule 57, which provides that where any property has been attached in execution of a decree, but, by reason of the decree-holder's default, the Court is unable to proceed, it shall either dismiss the application, or adjourn it and that, upon such dismissal, the attachment shall cease. The present rule, however, does not indicate whether a dismissal for default can be set aside and whether, if not set aside, a fresh application for execution is, or is not, barred. In Nomuna Bibi v. Roshun Meah (3) it was held that on the dismissal of an application under this rule the attachment ceases even if the Judge intended to continue it.

Coming to the facts of the present case, it is clear that the Munsif was not justified in "striking off" the application for execution on the 7th June 1916. He did not dismiss it as assumed in arguments in this Court. In accordance with Order XXI, rule 57, he should either have dismissed it or adjourned it. He was not legally competent to do anything else. The intentions of the Munsif cannot be considered. In my opinion, therefore, it must be held that the application was not dismissed and that the attachment continued to subsist. The order of the Munsif, dated the 27th July 1917, is similar except that he specifically released the property. I think the order of release must be regarded as one involving and implying the dismissal of the application, and that the application should be held as having been dismissed and, to this extent, I am prepared to follow the conclusions to be gathered by the decisions of the Courts under the old Code when dealing with applications which had been "struck off."

The result of this finding is that the attachment ceased on the 27th July 1917. Thereafter the goods were at the disposal of the judgment debtor. Whether the goods had been all along in his possession or not, it is not denied that he took no steps whatever to recover them. It is incredible that if he had not been in possession of the attached property, or was not in collusion with the care-taker, he would not have taken very prompt steps to recover it. I hold, without taking the report of the bailiff into consideration, that the property attached had either been left in the possession of the judgment-debtor, or that he subsequently obtained possession of it, or that the judgment-debtor has been in collusion with the care-taker and that he was a party to the disappearance of the said property. This last finding brings the case within Bhana Mal v. Ganpat Rai (1).

I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

THE BRITISH INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION CO LTD—RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 151—Carriage by sea—Carrier, liability of, extent of—Negligence, liability for, whether can be contracted out of.

A carrier by sea cannot, under the Indian Law, contract out of liability for the negligence of himself or of his servants. Section 151 of the Contract Act lays down an irreducible minimum of liability for common carriers as well as for other bailees. [p. 302, col. 2, p. 303, col. 2.]

Mr. T. R. Das (with him Mr. Munshi), for the Appellant.

Mr. McDonnell, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

ORMOND, J.—The plaintiff was the consignor of 227 bundles of dry beef conveyed by the defendants' S. S. Bharata from Calcutta to Rangoon. 52 bundles were damaged by tar and had to be destroyed and the plaintiff sues for damages. The defendants rely on the clauses in their bill of lading. The bill of lading sets out: "The company shall not be liable for loss, damage or delay directly or indirectly resulting from any of the following causes or perils, howsoever occasioned * * * * * breakage or leakage * * * * * injurious effect of other goods whether by contract or otherwise howsoever, perils, dangers and accidents of the sea * * * * any act, neglect or default whatsoever of pilot, masters, officers, mariners, engineers, stevedores or other servants or agents whatsoever of the company on board or elsewhere in the management, navigation or otherwise of the steamer * * * * or in the loading, stowing, carriage, unloading or delivery of the cargo." The learned Judge on the original side dismissed the suit on the ground that the defendant company could contract themselves out of all liability including liability for the negligence of their servants.

The question is, can a common carrier by sea, who is not governed by the Indian Carriers Act, contract himself out of liability for negligence?

It is not disputed that the defendant company is governed by the common law of England relating to common carriers by sea as applied in India. And it is admitted that under the present English Law the defendant company could contract itself out of liability for negligence.

Mr. Das for the appellant contends (1) that although under the English Common Law, as it is now expounded, a common carrier by sea can contract out of all liability; yet in India he is bound under sections 151 and 152 of the Indian Contract Act to take ordinary care of the goods and cannot contract himself out of such liability; (2) that the law applicable to the case is the common law of England before the English Carriers Act, 1830, was passed and that under the common law, as it then was, a carrier by sea could not contract himself out of liability for negligence; and (3) that it was in consequence of the English Carriers Act (which applies only to inland carriers) that the English Courts held that carriers by sea could contract themselves out of liability for negligence; and that the Indian Courts should in like manner apply to carriers by sea the law applicable to inland common carriers under the Indian Carriers Act, which declares that an inland carrier shall be liable for the negligence or criminal act of himself or any of his agents or servants notwithstanding any special contract to the contrary.

Mr. McDonnell for the respondent company contends (1) that the Contract Act does not deal with the law relating to common carriers and he relies on Irrawaddy Flotilla Co. v. Bugwandas (1), and (2) that the common law does not change but is only elucidated by judicial decisions and that the common law of England, as it is now, is the law applicable to the present case.

In theory, no doubt, the common law does not change but is merely elucidated. But if under the law as it stood when it was introduced into India, a common carrier could not contract himself out of liability for negligence, the defendant company could not do so now, unless the law in India has been altered in this respect. In Advocate-General of Bengal v. Ranee Surnomoye Dossee (2) Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., in delivering the judgment of the Supreme Court says:—"It is a well recognised doctrine, and one which has been acted upon by this Court for more than half a century, that speaking generally, the first introduction of English Law into Calcutta was effected by the Charter of George the First, by which in the year 1726, the Mayor's Court was established. It is unnecessary to cite authorities in support of that position; indeed, it was admitted by the learned Advocate-General in his argument in this case". And at page 426, in the judgment of the Privy Council, the following passage occurs:—"The English Law, civil and criminal, has been usually considered to have been made applicable to natives, within the limits of Calcutta, in the year 1726, by the Charter, 13th George I. Neither that nor the subsequent Charters expressly declare that the English Law shall be so applied, but it seems to have been held to be the necessary consequence of the provisions contained in them." See also Freeman v. Fairlie (3).

In Moothora Kant Shaw v. India General Steam Navigation Co. (4) it was held by the Full Bench that at the time of the passing of the Indian Carriers Act in 1865, the English Law relating to common carriers was in force in this country. Sir Richard Garth at page 181 says: "It seems only reasonable to suppose that, as common carriers were introduced into India by the English, and under English rule, the law by which their duties were regulated was the English Law applicable to that class of persons." But it does not follow that the English Law as it is altered from time to time, whether by Statute or judicial decisions, is the law applicable to common carriers in India.

I think we may take it that the law applicable to the question in this case is the common law of England as it was at the time of the passing of the English Carriers Act (1830), unless it has since been altered in India.

In Peek v. North Staffordshire Ry. Co. (5) Blackburn, J., cites with approval a passage from Story on Bailments taken from paragraph 549 in the 9th Edition and says:— "Mr. Justice Story, in his Commentaries on the Law of Bailments published in 1832, after the Carriers Act, states, as I think accurately, what was the effect of the decisions up to that time. 'It was', says he, 'formerly a question of much doubt how far common carriers on land could by contract limit their responsibility, upon the ground that, exercising a public employment, they are bound to carry for a reasonable compensation, and had no right to change their common law rights and duties. And it was said that, like innkeepers, they were bound to receive and accommodate all persons, as far as they may, and could not insist upon special and qualified terms. The right, however, of making such qualified acceptances by common carriers seems to have been asserted in early times. Lord Coke declared it in a note to Southcote's case (6) and it was admitted in Morse v. Slue (7). It is now recognised and settled beyond any reasonable doubt.'...So far I think this, according to the decisions subsequent to 1832, still remained law in 1854, when the Railway and Canal Traffic Act was passed. But Mr. Justice Story proceeds to say: 'Still, however, it is to be understood that common carriers cannot by any special agreement exempt themselves from all responsibility, so as to evade altogether the salutary policy of the common law. They cannot, therefore, by a special notice exempt themselves from all responsibility in cases of gross negligence and fraud, or, by demanding an exorbitant price, compel the owner of the goods to yield to unjust and oppressive limitations of their rights. And the carrier will be equally liable in case of the fraud or misconduct of his servants, as he would be in case of his own personal fraud or misconduct.'" And in Hinton v. Dibbin (8), Lord Denman, C. J., when reviewing the state of the law at the time of the passing of the English Carriers Act, 1830, at page 659 says:—"It had been decided by all the Courts that a carrier is liable for the loss of articles above the amount, mentioned in the usual (carrier's) notice though not paid for accordingly, where he is guilty of what in so many cases is called 'gross negligence.'"

From early times, a common carrier could by a special acceptance exempt himself from liability for loss or damage caused otherwise than by the misconduct or negligence of himself or his servants. Sir Edward Coke in a note to Southcote's case (6) says:—"Nota reader, it is good policy for him who takes any goods to keep, to take them in special manner, scil. to keep them as he keeps his own goods, or to keep them the best he can at the peril of the party: or if they happen to be stolen or purloined, that he shall not answer for them, for he who accepteth them ought to take them in such or the like manner, or otherwise he may be charged by his general acceptance. So if goods are delivered to one to be delivered over, it is good policy to provide for himself in such special manner, for doubt of being charged by his general acceptance, which implies that he takes upon him to do it." Later on, carriers gave notice that they would not be responsible for loss of or damage to goods above a certain value, unless declared and paid for accordingly; and the notice if brought home to the person tendering the goods had the effect of a special acceptance or contract. The carrier under such a notice claimed total exemption from liability; but the Courts held that the contract did not absolve him from liability for misconduct or for negligence. In some cases it was held that the consignor could not have intended that the carrier should not exercise any care at all of the goods; and in other cases it was held that the carrier could not free himself from the liability which attached to him as an ordinary bailee i.e., liability for misconduct or negligence. Thus in Batson v. Donovan (9) Best, J., says: "A carrier was at liberty to make a special acceptance of the goods, and to introduce into the terms of such acceptance any reasonable condition not inconsistent with his duty to the public....The carrier must take the same care of the goods that a prudent man would take of his own property. This is the law with respect of all the bailees for hire or reward." In Garnett v. Willan (10) decided in 1821, Bayley, J., at page 59, with reference to the special contracts or notices of carriers, says: "The Courts have put a sound construction upon those words 'lost or damaged,' (as not including loss or damage arising from the negligence or misfeasance of the carrier or his servants) by which the carrier will receive all the protection which he ought to receive, for he will thereby be exempt from those peculiar liabilities which attach to him in his character of carrier, but not from the consequence of his own misfeasance, for which every bailee is responsible," and Holroyd, J., in the same case says: "A carrier, notwithstanding his notice, is responsible for any loss or damage arising in the course of the trust reposed in him, either from his own personal misconduct or that of his servants," and in the same case Best, J., says: "I cannot see with reference to the question of the responsibility of the carrier that there is any sound distinction between negligence and misfeasance. I am of opinion that by the common law a carrier is answerable for the negligence, as well as the misfeasance of his servants. I am of opinion, that by these notices the carrier is only protected from that responsibility which belongs to him as insurer."

It seems to have been assumed that an ordinary bailee could not contract out of liability for negligence or misfeasance; possibly because the bailee, having accepted the bailment and charge of the goods, could not shelter himself under a stipulation that he should take no care at all of the goods, such a position being repugnant to and inconsistent with the fact of the bailment—and, therefore, a carrier, who by special contract had tried to exempt himself from all liability, was still liable as an ordinary bailee for negligence and misconduct. A common carrier was one who professed to carry for all persons indiscriminately; he could not refuse to carry goods according to his profession, unless he had a good excuse, e.g., want of room, etc. He could, however, by special contract divest himself of all the peculiar liability which otherwise would have attached to him as a common carrier. And if by his profession or by special contract, he refused to accept any responsibility, there seems to be no reason why he should not have been allowed to do so, if a private carrier or an ordinary bailee could do so. If he professed to carry only parcels below £10 in value, he would not be liable as a common carrier for the loss of a parcel which was above that value; and he could refuse to carry such a parcel in the same way as an ordinary bailee could refuse a bailment. If in contravention of the carrier's notice, a consignor handed in a parcel which exceeded the prescribed value and omitted to state its real value, although the carrier had stipulated that in such a case he would incur no liability whatever, the Courts held that the carrier's liability was that of an ordinary bailee and that he was, therefore, liable for negligence and misconduct.

The Carriers Act was passed in 1830. It did not empower a carrier to contract himself out of liability for negligence, but section 1 enacts that a carrier shall not be liable for the loss of or injury to goods of a certain description if the parcel exceeded £ 10 in value, unless the value and nature of such goods was declared and an increased charge (if any) paid or agreed to be paid. It was not, however, until 1842 in Hinton v. Dibbin (8) that this statutory exemption was held to include loss occasioned by the negligence of the carrier or his servants. In Owen v. Burnett (11), a case under section 1 of the Act, the judgments of the Court proceeded upon the assumption that the carrier would have been liable notwithstanding section 1 of the Act, if the damage had been caused through gross negligence on the part of the carrier's servants.

After Hinton v. Dibbin (8) there came a series of six Railway cases, from 1849 to 1853, in respect of damages to horses or cattle, which did not come under section 1 of the Act. The condition made by the Railway Company was that the horses or cattle were to be carried at the entire risk of the owner and that the Company would not be responsible for any damage, however caused. All six cases were decided in favour of the carrier, although the damage had resulted from the negligence of the Company's servants. The decisions in the first two cases proceeded upon a variance of the contract alleged and the contract proved. In the third case of Chippendale v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co. (12) the plaintiff claimed on the ground that the defendant had failed to supply a proper truck. The plaintiff himself had loaded some of the cattle, and judgment was given for the carrier, because the plaintiff had seen the truck and because the cattle were at his risk. In Austin v. Manchester Sheffield & Lincolnshire Ry. Co. (13) Cresswell, J., quoted only the first part of the extract from Story referred to above, and assumed that carriers could contract out of liability for negligence. In Carr v. Lancashire & Yorkshire Ry. (14) Parke, B., says (at page 711): "It is perfectly clear that since the passing of the Carriers Act it is competent for a carrier to make a special contract to convey goods and chattels; and it is clear that the liability of the latter may be made to depend upon the terms of that contract, into which both parties had entered". And in Walter v. York & North Midland Ry. (15) Wightman and Coleridge, JJ., referred to section 6 of the Act as saving special contracts, and they assumed that the carrier could by a special contract exempt himself from all liability including liability for negligence. In 1858 in Phillips v. Edwards (16) in the course of the argument (the case was decided on other grounds), Pollock, C. B., doubted whether a common carrier could have extinguished his liability altogether. And even so late as 1875, in Nugent v. Smith (17), Brett, J., says: "It seems impossible to account for the almost universal use of bills of lading by all seagoing ships if a great number of them, viz., all who were not common carriers, would only be answerable for negligence, for which they are answerable notwithstanding the bill of lading." In 1869, however, in The Duero (18), the Court had upheld the shipowner's stipulation not to be liable for loss or damage occasioned by the negligence of his servants

Section 6 of the Act states that the Act does not in anywise affect special contracts made for the conveyance of goods. If the carrier could not, before the Act, exempt himself by a special contract from liability for the negligence of himself or his servants, the Act did not empower him to do so and as pointed out in Baxendale v. General Eastern Rail.

way (19), section 6 refers only to contracts which modify the Company's exemption under section 1

In 1854, the Railway and Canal Traffic Act was passed which declared that the Company shall be liable for the loss of or injury to any animals or goods occasioned by the neglect or default of such Company or its servants, notwithstanding any notice, condition or declaration contrary thereto or anywise limiting such liability; but the Act allowed special contracts if signed by the person delivering the cattle or goods and if adjudged by the Court or Judge to be just and reasonable.

In Peek v. North Staffordshire Ry. Co. (5) the question arose whether a condition by the Company that they would not be responsible for damage to the goods (marble chimney pieces) unless their value was declared, was just and reasonable within the meaning of that Act. Blackburn, J., at page 511 says: "I think that a condition exempting the carriers wholly from liability for the neglect and default of their servants is prima facie unreasonable. I do not go so far as to say that it is necessarily in every case unreasonable and void. A carrier is bound to carry for a reasonable remuneration, and if he offers to do so, but at the same time offers in the alternative to carry on the terms that he shall have no liability at all, and holds forth as an inducement a reduction of the price below that which would be reasonable remuneration for carrying at carrier's risk, or some additional advantage, which he is not bound to give, and does not give to those that employ him with a common law liability, I think a condition thus offered may be reasonable enough. For the terms of a special contract entered into by a person who has the option of employing the carrier on the terms of the contract, or on the terms of his undertaking the common law liability, are necessarily reasonable as regards the person having that option."

Such was the state of the law in England when the Indian Carriers Act was passed in 1865. There can be no doubt I think that down to 1852, if not later, a common carrier under the common law of England could not contract out of liability for negligence. The change of the law in this respect by judicial decisions was due indirectly to the Carriers Act and apparently was not due in any way to change of view as regards public policy.

The Indian Legislature, I think, recognised that under the common law of England as applicable to India, a common carrier could not contract out of liability for negligence, for the Carriers Act professes to be a declaratory Act as to the liability of common carriers for loss of or damage occasioned by the negligence or criminal act of themselves, their agents or servants. Section 6 enables the carrier to limit his liability by a special contract signed by the owner of the goods, but section 8 declares his liability for the negligence or criminal act of himself or his servants, notwithstanding any special contract.

I now come to the other part of Mr. Das' argument connected with sections 151 and 152 of the Contract Act. Section 148 says a "bailment" is the delivery of goods by one person to another for some purpose upon a contract that they shall, when the purpose is accomplished, be returned or otherwise disposed of according to the directions of the persons delivering them. Section 151 says: "In all cases of bailment the bailee is bound" to take a certain degree of care of the goods and section 152 says: "The bailee, in the absence of any special contract, is not responsible for the loss, destruction or deterioration of the thing bailed, if he has taken the amount of care of it described in section 151." The meaning seems to me to be clear, viz., that an ordinary bailee is bound to take reasonable care of the goods, notwithstanding any contract to the contrary; and he incurs no further liability in the absence of a special contract. It has been so held by Sankaran Nair, J., in Sheik Mahumad Ravuther v. B. I. S. N. Co., (20) and I know of no decision to the contrary. This, I think, as indicated above, was formerly also the English Common Law; but since it has been held that a common carrier can contract out of liability for negligence it would follow that an ordinary bailee could do so—and that an ordinary bailee could do so, seems to have been contemplated by Blackburn, J., in Mitchell v. Lancashire & Yorkshire Ry. (21). But this would be a later development of the law which, in my opinion, is not the law in India.

In Irrawaddy Flotilla Co. v. Bugwandas (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council say that the Contract Act was not intended to alter or deal with the law applicable to common carriers and that common carriers are not within the Act. The question in that case was whether sections 151 and 152 of the Contract Act reduced the liability of a common carrier to that of an ordinary bailee. The question whether a common carrier can reduce his liability below that of an ordinary bailee did not arise and was not discussed. It was decided that the peculiar liabilities which attach to a common carrier as such, are not affected by the Contract Act. A carrier who by contract divests himself of the peculiar liabilities that could attach to him as a common carrier, ceases to be governed by the law applicable to common carriers and is governed by the law applicable to an ordinary bailee. And if an ordinary bailee cannot contract out of liability for negligence, still less would a common carrier be able to do so. It would be unreasonable to hold that because a carrier professed to carry for all persons indiscriminately, he may do so upon the condition that he shall incur no liability either as a common carrier or as an ordinary bailee; whereas a private carrier may not contract out of his liability as an ordinary bailee.

If the decision is to rest upon the question of public policy, it would no doubt be more satisfactory if the Indian Law was in conformity with the English Law. Formerly under English Law a common carrier could not contract out of liability for negligence, on the ground of public policy, and as stated above the change in English Law on this point was due not to any change of view as regards public policy. The Indian Carriers Act is an indication that in India public policy requires that the carrier should exercise supervision over the persons handling the goods. If it is a question whether the carrier or the individual consignors should insure themselves against loss through the negligence of the carrier's servants, it would probably be cheaper and certainly more appropriate for the carrier to do so.

It has been decided in India, following the present English Law, that a common carrier by sea can contract out of liability for negligence, in the following cases: Jellicoe v. British India Steam Navigation Co. (22), Hassanbhoy Visram v. The British India Steam Navigation Company (23), Hajee Ismail Sait v. Company of the Messageries Maritimes of France (24) and Sheik Mahamad Ravuther v. B. I. S. N. Co. (20), Sankaran Nair, J., dissenting. In the first case, the plaintiff was not represented and the questions now raised were not raised in any of the first three cases. I do not think that the question can be said to be definitely concluded by judicial decisions.

For the reasons stated above, in my opinion, a carrier by sea under Indian Law cannot contract out of liability for the negligence of himself or of his servants.

The learned Judge has not found as a fact whether the damage to the plaintiff's goods was caused through the negligence of the Company's servants or not. I would remand the case for such a finding.

TWOMEY, C. J.—The question in this appeal is whether a common carrier by sea can contract himself out of liability for the negligence of his servants and agents. It is not disputed that the B. I. S. N. Company are common carriers by sea and it is common ground that their liabilities are governed by the common law. The points in dispute are: (1) whether we should take the common law to be the common law of England at the present day or at an earlier period, and (2) whether in any event the provisions of section 151, Contract Act, prescribing a minimum standard of liability for bailees in general is not applicable to common carriers who are only one species of bailee, namely, bailees for the carriage of goods.

In the Calcutta case of Jellicoe v. British India Steam Navigation Co. (22) Garth, C. J., held that "a shipowner has a right to impose upon shippers any terms, however unreasonable, which the shippers think proper to accept. They may thus free themselves from consequences of their own negligence or default, however gross or wilful." He went on to say: "So long as the law allows one class of carriers to insist upon contracts of this kind, and the public submit to have their goods carried upon such terms, Courts of Justice are quite powerless to protect them." This view appears to have been accepted also by the Bombay and Madras High Courts as being in accordance with the common law of England which they were bound to follow. Wallis, J., in Sheik Mahamad Ravuther v. B. I. S. N. Co. (20) remarked that "contracts have been made and business carried on for many years in India on this footing and if the law is to be altered now it must be by the Legislature." These Indian decisions are no doubt in accordance with the common law of England as it now stands, and it was assumed that the same law applies to India. In the case last cited, however, Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair expressed a decided opinion that the English Common Law to be applied in India is not the law of the present day but the law as it stood at a much earlier period. He said: 'I am of opinion that the English Common Law that has been accepted in India (i. e., by the Indian Legislature) is the law as declared by Story and Lord Blackburn, which is based on grounds of public policy applicable alike to England and India; that its further development as to exemption by contract due to the Carriers Act of 1830 for loss due to negligence has not been accepted in India, but, on the other hand, has been declared inapplicable by Act III of 1865 to the cases falling within that Act and following the reasoning of the Privy Council, that, though an Act may be inapplicable, it ought to be followed as a rule of justice, equity and good conscience, in cases similar to those dealt with by the Legislature in the absence of any circumstances to the contrary, the principles embodied in Act III of 1865 ought to be followed. I am further of opinion that a rule of English Common Law ought not to be followed when it is opposed to the principles followed and acted upon by the Indian Legislature." The point has now been argued before us with great acuteness by Mr. Das. It is shown that the common law was first introduced into India not later than the year 1726, and that at that time and for more than a century afterwards common carriers in England were not permitted to exempt themselves by contract from liability for loss or damage caused by the negligence of their servants. I concur with my learned colleague in holding that we are justified in disregarding subsequent developments of the common law in England, unless where they have been rendered directly applicable to India by Statute or are shown to be consistent with the principles of subsequent Indian legislation. It is shown beyond doubt that it was not until after the passing of the English Carriers Act in 1830, and as an indirect consequence of that Act, that contracts of this kind came to be recognised in England. When the common law was first introduced into India, any such contract would have been inoperative in England. The English Law relating to inland carriers in England was subsequently relaxed by judicial decisions and the relaxation was extended by the English Courts to carriers by sea. But as Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair has pointed out, the Indian Carriers Act of 1865 expressly provides that common carriers by land shall be liable for loss or damage caused by the negligence of their servants, and there is no reason in principle why a different rule should be applied in India in the case of sea carriers. To hold that sea carriers can exempt themselves by contract would clearly be inconsistent with the policy of the Indian Legislature as shown in the preamble of the Indian Carriers Act, 1865, and section 8 of the Act.

On the second question also, I concur with my learned colleague in holding that section 151, Contract Act, lays down an irreducible minimum of liability for common carriers as well as for other bailees. Mr. Justice Sankaran Nair in the case cited above examined the question whether an ordinary bailee can contract out of his liability under section 151, and I think he gives convincing reasons for his view that such a contract cannot be recognised. If this view be correct, it is clearly repugnant to common sense that a common carrier, who is not only a bailee but an insurer also, should be at liberty to rely on a contract relieving him of all liability. It is urged that the Privy Council case Irrawaddy Flotilla Co. v. Bugwandas (1) shows definitely that the liabilities of common carriers are independent of the Contract Act altogether. Their Lordships gave it as their opinion that "common carriers are not within the Act." But that case was one in which the common carriers took up the position that, in the absence of negligence, they were free from liability if they took the amount of care required by section 151, Contract Act. The decision was in effect that the liability of the common carrier as insurer is not affected by the Contract Act, in other words, he cannot avail himself of the provisions of section 151 to reduce his liability to that of an ordinary bailee. This was the only question their Lordships had to decide, and I think it is clear that no wider meaning was intended for the phrase "common carriers are not within the Act." There is nothing in their Lordships' judgment to support the view that a common carrier, not being a common carrier under the Indian Carriers Act, 1865, is not as a bailee liable at least to the extent indicated in section 151 or that he can divest himself of this minimum liability any more than an ordinary bailee can.

I agree that the case must be remanded to the original side for a finding on the 4th and 6th issues as to negligence and the amount of damages, if any.

Case remanded.

THE HON'BLE NAWAB SIR SALIMULLAH BAHADUR AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS —RESPONDENTS.

Rent decree against recorded tenants—Execution of decree—Sale of tenure—Subsequent suit for arrears—Transferee of portion of tenure, liability of.

A tenure was sold in execution of a decree for rent obtained against the recorded tenants only. Afterwards, the landlord brought a suit for arrears of rent for the period between the date of the institution of the previous suit and the confirmation of the sale, as well as for some subsequent years, making the old recorded tenants and an unrecorded transferee of a part of the tenure, parties to the suit:

Held, (1) that the entire, tenure including the share of the purchaser of a portion of it whose name was not registered in the landlord's sherista, passed by the execution sale and that it was not open to such a purchaser to sue for a declaration of his right to his share in the tenure; [p. 305, col. 1.]

(2) that the unrecorded purchaser was not liable for the rent of the period subsequent to the confirmation of sale. [p. 305, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Backergunj, dated the 5th August 1913, modifying that of the Munsif, 1st Court at Barisal, dated the 31st August 1912.

Babus Surendra Chandra Sen and Surendra Nath Das Gupta, for the Appellants.

Babus Surendra Nath Guha and Biraj Mohan Mojumdar, for the Repondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent in respect of a tenure which was held originally by defendants Nos. 1 to 5 and certain persons who are described as Mohamedans.

The plaintiffs, who are the Zemindars, brought a suit for rent of the tenure against defendants Nos. 1 to 5 on the 10th August 1906. This suit was for a period prior to Sraban 1313. In execution of the decree obtained in the suit, the tenure was sold and the sale was confirmed on the 10th May 1908, corresponding to 27th Baisakh 1315. The present suit was brought for the arrears of rent between the date of the institution of the previous suit and the date on which the sale was confirmed, i.e., up to the end of 1314 not only against the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 but also against the defendant No. 6. The plaintiffs also claimed a 4-annas share of the rent for 1315 and 1316 against the defendant No. 6 in the present suit, on the ground that the Record of Rights showed that the defendant No. 6 was a co sharer to the extent of 4 annas in the tenure by virtue of a purchase of the said 4 annas share from the Mohamedans in the year 1291.

MUNSHI LAL v. MOHAMMAD AMIR MIRZA BEG.

The Court of first instance gave a decree to the plaintiff for rent up to the year 1314 against defendants Nos. 1 to 5 only and dismissed the claim against defendant No 6. On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge held that the defendant No. 6 was also liable for the rent as claimed, as he had failed to show that the kobala was benami and the Record of Rights showed his name as being the owner of the tenure to the extent of 4 annas share.

The defendant No. 6 contended in the Courts below that the kobala executed in his favour by the Mohamedans was a benami one, and that he had no possession of, or concern with, the tenure. He further contended that the entries in the Record of Rights were not made at his instance. These facts, however, have been found against him by the lower Appellate Court and we must hold, therefore, that he was a co-sharer of the tenure along with defendants Nos. 1 to 5.

It is found by both the Courts below (and in fact the finding was based upon the admission of the plaintiffs themselves) that the defendant No. 6 had never been recognised as a tenant, that the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 were the recorded tenants in the sherista of the plaintiffs and that the plaintiffs had never realized rent from the defendant No. 6, although the kobala in the name of the defendant No. 6 was executed so far back as 1891. The property sold is described as an entire tenure, and as the decree was obtained by the plaintiffs against the recorded tenants, we think that what was intended to be sold and was sold was the tenure itself, and not merely the interest of defendants Nos. 1 to 5. Having regard to all the circumstances referred to above, we do not think that it was open to the defendant No. 6 to maintain a suit for a declaration of his right to a 4-annas share on the ground that the sale did not pass his share in the tenure. During these 17 years or more, he has never asserted his right as a tenant: and the finding is that he has never been recognized as a tenant nor was any rent realized from him. We are of opinion that the entire tenure including the interest, if any, of defendant No. 6 passed by the sale to the plaintiffs. The defendant No. 6 disclaims any possession of, or concern with, the howla or any under-tenure in the howla.

Under these circumstances, the decree of the lower Appellate Court, in so far as it relates to the claim for 1315 and 1316 against the defendant No. 6, is set aside; but upon the findings arrived at the defendant No. 6 must be held liable for the rent for the period prior to the confirmation of the sale along with defendants Nos. 1 to 5. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is varied accordingly.

We allow costs in proportion in all Courts, the appellant to get one-fifth, and the respondents to get four-fifths.

Decree modified.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 51, 73, O. XXI, r. 84, O. XL, r. 1—Decree against heirs of holder of estate—Receiver, appointment of—Decree, subsequent, against one of several heirs in respect of personal debt—Receiver, separate, whether can be appointed in respect of share of judgment-debtor—Rateable distribution, whether can be allowed—Judgment-debtor, whether same.

One M. A. was the last holder of a taluka which, after his death, was taken possession of by A. M., his brother and H. M. and A. B. his nephews. A suit was brought on the basis of certain mortgage-deeds executed by M. A. against these three as representatives of the mortgagor, and a decree was obtained providing for payment by instalments and in case of default for sale of the property. Another decree was obtained against them by R. A., the daughter of M A., for her share of the dower due to her mother. In execution of this decree a Receiver was appointed and placed in possession of the taluka with directions to satisfy these two decrees out of the profits of the taluka. Subsequently to these proceedings, M. L. obtained a decree against A. B. for his personal debts and, in an application to execute it, he urged that as the two previous decrees were against the representatives of M. A., who were liable to the extent of the assets received by them, the decrees should be satisfied by sale of the property left by M. A, and not out of the profits which were not assets left by him, and that as his judgment-debtor owned a one-third share of the property, his decree could be satisfied from the profits of that share. He accordingly prayed that his judgment-debtor's share be attached under Order XXI, rule 84, of the Civil Procedure Code, and a Receiver appointed under Order XL, rule 1, to realise the profits and apply them in satisfaction of his decree, or, that if no Receiver was appointed the share of his judgment-debtor might be attached and sold to satisfy his decree, or that if this was not permitted, he might be allowed a rateable share in the profits realised by the Receiver already appointed:

Held, (1) that section 51 of the Civil Procedure Code entitled the Court to appoint a Receiver of rents of the estate of a deceased person for the purpose of liquidating debts against that estate, and that there was nothing in the Code to limit the appointment of a Receiver of rents to a case where the debt to be discharged was a debt against the heirs and not against the deceased holder of the estate, and that, so long as the present Receiver was maintained, the application for the appointment of a Receiver for the sale of the property held by the Receiver already in possession thereof could not be entertained; [p. 307, col. 2; p. 308, cols 1 & 2.]

(2) that as to rateable distribution, the application was barred by the fact that the decree was not against the same judgment-debtor within the meaning of section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 308, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Sub-Judge, Sitapur, dated the 6th December 1918.

Messrs. Bisheshar Nath Srivastava, Gulab Chand Srimal and Tara Chandar Sharma, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mumtaz Husain, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 3.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case will appear from the order of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur dated the 6th December 1918, which runs as follows: —

"Mirza Muhammad Ali Beg was the last holder of the Taluqa of Aurangabad and after his death his brother Ahmad Mirza Beg and his nephews Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg got possession over the Taluqa. The Allahabad Bank held certain mortgage-deeds executed by Mirza Muhammad Ali Beg, and on the basis of those deeds the Bank brought a suit against Ahmad Mirza Beg, Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg as the representatives of the mortgagor and obtained a decree, which provides for payment of the money by instalments and authorises the Bank to realise the entire money remaining due in case of default in payment of any instalment by sale of the property mortgaged. The wife of Muhammad Ali Beg predeceased him, Rani Abadi Begam is the daughter of Muhammad Ali Beg and she brought a suit to recover her share in the dower due to her mother against Ahmad Mirza Beg, Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg as Muhammad Ali Beg had died before the institution of her suit. She obtained a decree for over Rs. 93,000. In execution of her decree she applied that a Receiver be appointed and the Taluqa be placed in his possession and from the profits her decree be satisfied. That application was granted and the Deputy Commissioner of Sitapur was appointed Receiver" at first temporarily by the Subordinate Judge on the 7th March 1917 and later on until Abadi Begam's decree was satisfied by this Court on the 19th March 1917, and it was directed that out of the profits the instalments of the Allahabad Bank should be paid first and the balance be applied towards the satisfaction of Abadi Begam's decree. Ahmad Mirza Beg appealed against that order but his appeal was dismissed. The Deputy Commissioner is in possession of the Taluqa as Receiver. These facts are not disputed. Munshi Lal brought a suit against Amir Mirza Beg in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow for his personal debts and obtained a decree which has been transferred to this Court for execution. Munshi Lal has filed the present application and says that his judgment debtor, Amir Mirza Beg, is owner of 5 annas 4 pies share in the villages which are in the possession of the Deputy Commissioner as Receiver in Abadi Begam's decree and of which the nikasi is about Rs. 1,50,000, that he pays the amount of profits realised by him towards the satisfaction of the decree obtained by the Allahabad Bank and Rani Abadi Begam, that Abadi Begam's decree was passed against the three persons as heirs and representatives of Muhammad Ali Beg and they were liable to the extent of the assets received by them and the decree in favour of the Allahabad Bank was passed on the basis of the deeds executed by Muhammad Ali Beg and could be satisfied by sale of the villages mortgaged and Abadi Begam could also realise her money from the property of Muhammad Ali Beg and the two decrees could not be satisfied out of the profits of the villages as these profits could not be called assets of Muhammad Ali Beg, that the profits could only be applied towards the satisfaction of the decree obtained by him against Amir Mirza Beg personally, that there was a large amount of mortgage money with which the villages were charged and applicant's decree could very soon be satisfied from the profits of Amir Mirza's share, that if the property of his judgment-debtor is sold, it will cause great loss to him and it would take a long time in getting the property sold and, therefore, it was prayed that his property be attached under Order XXI, rule 84, the First Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure, and under Order XL, rule 1, a Receiver be appointed who might realise the profits and apply them towards the satisfaction of his decree and as the property has already been placed in the possession of the Receiver in execution of Abadi Bagam's decree, he might be given permission to proceed against the Receiver according to law, that if no Receiver be appointed in his case, then the share of the judgment-debtor in the village might be attached and sold and from the proceeds his decree be satisfied, that if this also be not allowed, then he might be allowed a rateable share in his profits realised by the Receiver in Abadi Begam's decree.

The Subordinate Judge has refused to accede to any of the three requests of the applicant Munshi Lal, on the ground that he should apply to the Court which appointed the Receiver. He seems, however, to endorse the applicant's contention that the appointment of the Receiver of this Taluqa with power to use the rents towards satisfying the mortgage of the Allahabad Bank and Abadi Begam's decree was improper, as neither the Allahabad Bank nor Abadi Begam had any right to the profits of the Taluqa which belonged to the heirs. In appeal the position is taken up that if the appointment of the Receiver made by order of this Court, dated the 19th March 1917, was illegal, then the applicant Munshi Lal was entitled to ask the Court to ignore that appointment as he was not party to the proceedings. In order to succeed, the applicant Munshi Lal must show that the appointment of the Receiver was illegal. For the purpose of doing this his Counsel refers to Kishan Lal Atal v. Ummat-ul-Fatima Begam (1) as authority for the proposition that the corpus only and not the current profits of an estate are assets of the deceased holder. In this ruling it was held that, until the sequestration of the estate by attachment or otherwise, a creditor is not entitled to seize the rents and profits of the property of the deceased accruing after the property has devolved on his heirs-at-law, since such profits cannot be treated as the estate of the deceased and the heirs of the deceased are entitled to appropriate them. This ruling does not help the applicant Munshi Lal, since it admits that the rents and profits of the estate can be taken by a creditor of the deceased if the estate had been sequestrated by attachment or otherwise. If the appointment of a Receiver to collect rents is covered by the words "or otherwise", then the ruling is of no benefit to Munshi Lal. Munshi Lal's Counsel, however, relied on Rani Kanno Dai v. B. J. Lacy (2) as authority for the proposition that a Court cannot appoint a Receiver of rents in execution of a money decree against the deceased holder of the estate. The respondent's Counsel failed to furnish a simple answer to the invocation of that ruling. This ruling was passed under the old Code of Civil Procedure. Section 51 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908, which allows a Court to order execution of the decree by appointing a Receiver, is a new section which was added on the suggestion of the Advocate-General of Madras. Munshi Lal applicant's Counsel also urges that in no case can a Receiver be appointed in execution of a mortgage decree and refers to Muhammad Hussain Khan v. Amar Chand Paul (3). This ruling on the contrary merely holds that the appointment of a Receiver is within the discretion of a Court and that in the particular circumstances of the case which was the subject of the ruling, circumstances entirely different from present one, it was not desirable to appoint a Receiver. In our opinion the effect of section 51 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908 is to entitle a Court to appoint a Receiver of rents of the estate of a deceased person for the purpose of liquidating debts against that estate. Once a Receiver has been appointed, the heirs of the deceased are no longer entitled to the rents. In this case the Receiver was appointed in order to prevent the sale of a valuable property in discharge of debts which could be easily paid off from the profits. The appointment of a Receiver was prima facie to the advantage of the heirs, as it had the effect of keeping intact the estate. The heirs could not complain if a portion of the property had been sold, and it follows that they had no right of complaint if in lieu of the sale of a portion of the property they were compelled to forego the profits for some years. There is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure which limits the appointment of a Receiver of rents to a case where the debt to be discharged is a debt against the heirs, and not against the deceased holder of the estate. Therefore neither the request of the applicant for the appointment of a Receiver on his own behalf nor for the sale of the property held by the Receiver can be granted so long as the present Receiver is maintained.

(1) 25 Ind. Cas. 384; 17 O. C. 207.

It remains to consider whether the applicant's claim for rateable distribution can be granted on his present application. It may be conceded that rents realised by a Receiver can be the subject of rateable distribution [see Fink v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh (4)]. It is also well established law that the words in section 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the execution of decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor will cover the case where the party applying for rateable distribution has a decree against one only of several judgment debtors against whom decrees are being executed by the Court [see Iqbal Jahan Begam v. Munney Mirza (5)]. In this case, however, the decree which is being executed by this Court by the appointment of a Receiver is a decree against the three heirs of Mirza Muhammad Ali Beg as representing his estate, while the applicant's decree is against only one of these three heirs in his personal capacity. The two decrees are not, therefore, against the same judgment-debtor [see Bhola Nath v. Maqbul un nissa (6)]. We are also of the opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge was correct in holding that an application for rateable distribution must be made to the Court by which the assets are held [see Krishnashankar v. Chandrashankar (7)]. Reference may also be made to the case reported as Jatindra Nath v. Sarfaraz Meah (8). The applicant's Counsel has attempted to distingnish this case, on the ground that it related to the right of a landlord to maintain an action for rent against his tenants after a Receiver had been appointed and did not relate to the right of a decree-holder to obtain rateable distribution. The principle, however, of the ruling clearly is that no claim can be made in derogation of a Receiver's appointed powers except to the Court which appointed the Receiver.

It has also been brought to our notice that in 1909 Ahmed Mirza Beg, Hamid Mirza Beg and Amir Mirza Beg entered into an agreement whereby the profits of the estate were to be first used for the liquidation of debts against the estate. The decree of Munshi Lal was obtained subsequent to the date of that agreement. It is urged that he is bound by the agreement as he is the creditor of one of the parties to it. There is, however, no proof that the applicant had notice of the agreement. The fact that that agreement was registered would not be notice to him. Our finding then is that the appointment by this Court of a Receiver of the rents of the property in execution of decrees against the estate of Mirza Muhammad Ali Beg was not illegal and that the applicant has no right to ignore that appointment or to have another Receiver appointed in his interest. As to his request for being allowed to participate in a rateable distribution of the rents, it is barred by the fact that his decree is not against the same judgment-debtor within the meaning of section 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure and that even if it were, his application should have been to this Court, and not to the Court of the Subordinate Judge who had no jurisdiction in the matter.

It has been urged by the applicant's Counsel that there must be some means whereby his client can obtain execution of his decree against Amir Mirza Beg and that the continuance of the Receiver to his prejudice cannot be regarded as equitable. He states that it is not possible for his client to realise his decree against the portion of the estate of Mirza Muhammad Ali Beg which is not in the hands of the Receiver, because that portion is heavily encumbered by other debts or decrees. We do not see that there is anything to prevent the applicant applying to this Court for such cancellation or modification of the Court's order of the 19th March (appointing the Receiver, in execution of the decrees of the Bank and Rani Abadi Begam) as the circumstances of the case and justice may require. When the Receiver was appointed by the Court it is not apparent that the existence of any decree against the heirs was disclosed, nor was the question considered whether the appointment of the Receiver might prejudice the rights of future holders of decrees against the heirs of Mirza Muhammad Ali Beg. There can be no question that this Court which appointed the Receiver can remove him or modify the terms on which he was appointed after giving notice to all parties concerned. Whether as a condition precedent to the making of an application to this Court in connection with the Receiver, the applicant should get his decree transferred to this Court or not, is a matter on which we express no opinion.

We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 90—Permission to sell granted to Hindu widow—Sale, validity of, as against reversioner—Order granting permission, whether can be questioned in land acquisition proceedings.

Permission to sell, granted under section 90 of the Probate and Administration Act to an administratrix, who is a Hindu widow and heiress of her husband, is sufficient to prove the validity of the sale against the reversioner. To hold otherwise would be to introduce an unwarrantable qualification into the express provisions of the Probate and Administration Act with regard to Hindu widows. [p. 310, col. 2.]

There is nothing in the Probate and Administration Act which would justify a differentiation between the powers of an administratrix who happens also to be a Hindu widow and heiress of her husband and those of any other administrator under the Act. [p. 310, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by Chuni Lal Haldar, claimant No. 6, and arises out of apportionment proceedings before the President of the Tribunal under the Calcutta Improvement Act, 1911. The respondents are Makhoda Debi, claimant No. 5, and Upendra Nath Sen, claimant No. 8. By a declaration dated 16th

February 1915, 5 cottas 3 chittaks and 4 square feet of land were acquired under the Act, the total compensation awarded being Rs. 4,588-0-8. The property originally belonged to Kali Charan Haldar. He had three sons, Raj Kumar, Krishna Kishore and the appellant. Both the two first are dead. Makhoda Debi is the widow of Krishna Kishore. On 8th March 1884 Makhoda Debi obtained Letters of Administration to her husband's estate from the District Judge of the 24-Pergannas. On 1st April 1890 she further obtained from the District Judge under section 90 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, leave to sell certain property of her husband, including his one third in the land now acquired, for not less than Rs. 2,000. On the following day she sold all except one of the properties, which she had permission to sell, to Chandra Kishore Sen, the predecessor in-interest of claimant No. 8. The property thus sold amounts to 1 cotta 8 chittaks and 25 square feet of the land now acquired and is represented by the sum of Rs. 1,151-0-8, part of the Rs. 4,585-0-8. The appellant maintained that the sale was good only for the life of Makhoda Debi and he asked that this sum might be dealt with under section 32 of the Land Acquisition Act. The President decided against him and ordered payment of the Rs. 1,151-0-8 to claimant No 8. Hence this appeal.

For the appellant six contentions were urged:—

(1) That claimant No. 8, having purchased from a Hindu widow and having adduced no evidence of legal necessity, was only entitled to the property so purchased for her life.

(2) That the President erred in holding that the permission to sell was sufficient to prove the validity of the sale against the reversioner.

(3) That the reversioner as a third party was not bound by the order of permission to sell granted in his absence.

(4) If the order is to be taken as relieving the purchaser from proving legal necessity, it must be shown that the District Judge considered it.

(5) That the order of permission was without jurisdiction, inasmuch as Makhoda Debi had at the date of the order ceased to be administratrix.

(6) Assuming that the District Judge could make the order, the transaction of sale was in fraud of the reversioner, and the order fraudulently obtained from the Court on suppression of the true facts and by false representations, of all which the purchaser was well aware.

The first two grounds are concluded against the appellant by the decision in Kamikhya Nath Mukerjee v. Hari Okurn Sen (1) and it was argued that that decision is not correct, that it is opposed to the principles of Hindu Law, and that it had not been followed. It transpired that the learned Pleader used the last expression not in its ordinary sense, that the decision had been since considered by other Benches of this Court who had declined to follow it, but that he had been unable to find any subsequent reported decision in which it had even been cited. It stands in the reports as the decision of this Court and we are bound either to accept and follow it, or, if we doubt its correctness, to refer the question to a Full Bench. This we are certainly not prepared to do, as we are in full agreement with it. To hold otherwise would be to introduce an unwarrantable qualification into the express provisions of the Probate and Administration Act with regard to Hindu widows. There is nothing in that Act which would justify a differentiation between the powers of an administratrix who happens also to be a Hindu widow and heiress of her husband and those of any other administrator under the Act.

The next three contentions of the appellant question the propriety of the order of the District Judge allowing Mokhada Debi as administratrix to sell the property. It is not open to the appellant in these proceedings thus to go behind the order, nor can we review the order to see if in the circumstances it was correctly made. For instance in ground (5), the appellant suggests that the order was without jurisdiction because the applicant was then no longer administratrix. It must, however, be presumed that the

(1) 26 C. 607; 13 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 990.

District Judge satisfied himself on that point before making the order in her favour as such administratrix. The case cited by the learned Pleader for the appellant [In the goods of Nursing Chander Bysack (2)] shows how the Court will examine the matter. We cannot presume that the District Judge failed in his duty in this respect or in his consideration of the other matters on which he had to be satisfied before he could properly make the order. As was pointed out in Bhairab Chandra Dutta v. Benoy Chandra Dutta (3), "the propriety of an order or decree made in a cause, in which the Court has jurisdiction, cannot be challenged collaterally." That general principle may well be applied in a case like the present, where the appellant is seeking in land acquisition proceedings to go behind an order of the District Judge passed in his probate jurisdiction some 28 years ago.

The sixth and last contention impugns the District Judge's order as vitiated by fraud. It is questionable whether the appellant can so impugn the order in these proceedings, but assuming that he could do so, it is sufficient to say that we entirely agree with the learned President that no case of fraud has been made out in this case, and, in particular the appellant has completely failed to show that the purchaser was in any way privy to it. There were no distinct allegations by the appellant of the fraud charged and the arguments on his behalf appeared to rest on vague suggestions made against a third party.

The appeal fails on all points and is dismissed with costs to the respondents who have appeared. Hearing-fee four gold mohurs to claimant No. 8 and two gold mohurs to claimant No. 5.

Appeal dismissed.

RAMJI LAL AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Will—Gift in favour of nephew—Bequest, subsequent, in favour of donee, describing him as adopted son—Adoption not proved—Bequest, validity of.

N., a separated Hindu, made a gift of the bulk of his property to K, his nephew, who had lived with him since boyhood and had been brought up and married by him, and who, subsequently to the gift, had assisted N. in his business and lived jointly with him. Before his death, N. executed a Will bequeathing the remainder of his property to K. Upon N.'s death some distant collaterals of his brought the present suit against K. claiming all N.'s property. K. in reply asserted the gift and the Will in his favour and also stated that he was the adopted son of N. At the trial the adoption was denied by the plaintiffs, and no evidence was led by K. on the issue relating thereto. The trial Court found that the gift was genuine and had been acted upon and that it was N.'s intention under the Will to pass the remainder of his property to K., and dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court, while upholding the gift, decreed the claim in respect of the property dealt with by the Will, on the ground that K. could only derive benefit thereunder if he were the adopted son of N. but as he had abandoned the plea of adoption, he could derive no benefit under the Will. On appeal to the High Court:

Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a decree, the simple fact that the Will described the donee as an adopted son, did not mean that, unless in law and in fact he was an adopted son, the testator intended that he was to get no benefit under the Will. [p 312, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Additional Judge, Meerut, dated the 30th March 1917.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. Kailash Nath Katju, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. C. Vaish, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The property in dispute belonged to one Nihalo, who died on the 29th of December 1914. The plaintiffs-respondents were distant collaterals of Nihalo, who was a separated Hindu, and they claimed all the property left by Nihalo, as his heirs. Their claim was resisted in the mutation proceedings by the appellant, on the ground that he was entitled to

Nihalo's property. Mutation was granted in his favour, hence this suit. The plaintiffs claimed all the property left by Nihalo The defendant asserted that on the 15th of December 1891 Nihalo had executed a deed of gift of the bulk of his property in his favour and had put him in proprietary possession of it, and that subsequently on the 13th of January 1912 he executed a registered Will by which he left the remainder of his property to him. The defendant also stated that as a matter of fact he was the adopted son of Nihalo, and in proof produced a taluiatnama or deed of adoption, executed on the 19th of January 1913. The fact and legality of the adoption were denied. At the trial the defendants' Pleader stated that he did not wish to give evidence on the issue of adoption as he was prepared to stand or fall on the remaining issues. The Court of first instance held that the deed of gift was genuine and that it had been acted upon, and that under it the defendant had acquired full proprietary title and possession of the properties comprised in it. The plaintiffs' plea with regard to the Will was that it was "farzi", that is to say, mere "waste paper." In argument before us it was pleaded that inasmuch as throughout the Will the defendant was described as Nihalo's adopted son, on failure of proof of the adoption the Will must fail, because it was argued that the whole motive of making it was the fact of the defendant being believed to be the adopted son of Nihalo. The Court of first instance overruled this plea and held that it was the intention of Nihalo under this Will to pass the remainder of his property to the defendant. On appeal the lower Appellate Court found that the plaintiffs' suit as regards all the property except that covered by the Will was rightly dismissed. With regard to the Will that Court held that Nihalo made the Will in the defendant's favour, only qua adopted son, and as the plea of adoption had been abandoned, it held, purporting to follow two decisions of the Privy Council, Lali v. Murlidhar (1) and Fanindra Deb Raikat v. Rajeswar Das (2), that it was necessary to find what was the intention of the testator in making the gift under the Will. In both these cases in the Privy Council it was held that under the circumstances of those cases the fact that the donee was an adopted son was a condition precedent to his receiving the gift In both cases it was found that if the alleged adoption was not valid, the gift must fail. The question in every such case is whether the donee's right to succeed depended on whether he had been sufficiently indicated, or whether he actually and legally was, the "adopted son," and whether the gift was made to him personally or only because he was believed to be the adopted son. In Fanindra Deb Raikat v. Rajeswar Das (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council admitted that "The distinction between what is description only and what is the reason or motive of a gift or bequest may often be very fine, but it is a distinction which must be drawn from a consideration of the language (of the document) and the surrounding circumstances." Now in this case the facts are these: Nihalo had no children of his own. The defendant who was his nephew (or more accurately "wife's brother's son") lived with him apparently since his boyhood. Nihalo brought him up and got him married and as has been mentioned above, on the 15th of December 1891 made a gift in his favour of the bulk of his Zamindari property. Since that time the nephew had been helping Nihalo in his business and living jointly with him. Then we come to the Will executed 21 years afterwards, in which he bequeathed to him the rest of his property. At that time Nihalo's wife was dead, and he had no near relatives. As said before, he was a separated Hindu. It is contended that he did not mean to leave this property to the defendant merely because he was his nephew and because he had lived with him for all these years and had been the recipient of his bounty but because he had adopted him and for no other reason. It seems to us that it would be pressing the principle laid down in the Privy Council rulings very far to hold that simply because in this Will the donee is described as an adopted son, it must be taken that the testator meant that unless in fact and law he was an adopted son he never meant him

Mortgage—Interest, post diem, liability for—Stipulation for payment of principal and interest on certain day—Interest on arrears of interest, agreement for—Absence of provision for post diem interest—Liability of debtor, extent of.

Post diem interest is payable on a mortgage-bond on the general promise by the debtor to be liable for interest, though a definite term is fixed in the bond for repayment of principal and interest. If the liability under that general undertaking to pay interest is further extended by another undertaking which may be called appurtenant to the principal undertaking to pay interest upon arrears of interest and this further undertaking is found in the same document following the provision to pay interest, the intention of the parties must be deemed to be that both the principal and appurtenant undertaking should apply to the question of liability for post diem interest. Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 59 of 1917 (S. S. Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Y. Adiga, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We think we are bound by the Privy Council decisions in Mathura Das v. Raja Narindar Bahadur (1) and Bindesri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (2) and the decisions of this Court in Ghantayya v. Papayya (3) and Ramanathan Chetty v. Nur Muhamad Marakayar (4) to hold that post diem interest is payable on the general promise by the debtor to be liable for interest, though a definite term is fixed in the bond for repayment of the principal and interest. If the liability under that general undertaking to pay interest is further extended by another undertaking (which may be called appurtenant to the principal undertaking) to pay interest, upon arrears of interest and which further undertaking is found in the same document following the provision to pay interest, it is difficult to hold that the parties intended that only the principal undertaking should apply to the question of the liability for post diem interest and not the appurtenant undertaking also.

As regards Chajmal Das v. Brij Bhukan Lal (5) that was decided before Mathura Das v. Raja Narindar Bahadur (1) and their Lordships, after reluctantly agreeing with the High Court that there was no covenant to pay post diem interest, gave interest by way of damages taking the principal undertaking alone as a guide for the measure of damages and not the appurtenant undertaking also. Thaithottathil Pokkar v. Ramachandra Shenoy (6) is a similar case These decisions are of no assistance when considering the question as to whether compound interest is allowable, where post diem interest is granted on the covenant and not as damages in the absence of a covenant. On the other hand, the decisions in Bindesri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (2) and Ramanathan Chetty v. Nur Muhamad Marakayar (4) proceed on the view that both the covenants can be availed of by the creditor in respect of post diem interest.

We, therefore, allow the second appeal and restore the decision of the District Munsif dismissing with costs the defendants' appeal to the lower Appellate Court. The respondents will pay appellant's costs in this Court. Six months' time will be allowed for payment from this date.

IBRAHIM AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Muhammadan Law – Gift—Donor and donee residing on property—Delivery, whether necessary—Maliki, meaning of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 90—Presumption, whether applies to documents executed by illiterate person.

In cases where the donor and the donee reside on the property, a gift of the property under the Muhammadan Law may be completed by some overt act by the donor indicating a clear intention on his part to transfer possession and to divest himself of all control over the subject of the gift. [p. 316, col. 1.]

The presumption arising under section 90 of the Evidence Act can be applied to a deed executed by an illiterate person whose signature has been made by some other person on his behalf. [p. 315, col. 2.]

The word "maliki" itself is a term of no special meaning. It may mean proprietary right or it may mean a lesser right superior to that of the actual cultivator of the land; even the right of a ryot who has let his land to an under-ryot is sometimes called maliki. [p. 315, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Chittagong, dated the 31st August 1917, modifying that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at that place, dated the 29th March 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu D. L. Kastgir (with him Babu Tarakeswar Nath Mitra), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff claimed maliki title, but the learned Subordinate Judge has given him a decree declaring his raiyati title. Maliki title is proprietary title and is distinguished from raiyati title. As regards the land in the first schedule, the Appellate Court relied on a heba executed by one Kusam Bibi in favour of the plaintiff's predecessors. The first Court rejected the heba as not genuine. How can the Appellate Court presume the document to be genuine? Section 90 of the Evidence Act cannot certainly help it, as it thinks it does. The heba purported to be signed for Kasum Bibi by one Sadatali Under section 90 the genuineness of the document cannot be legally presumed. The genuineness of the signature of Sadatali may be presumed, but can the Court presume that Sadatali was authorised by Kusum Bibi to sign on her behalf? Refers to Ubilack Rai v Dallial Rai (1), Thakoor Pershad v. Musammat Bashumatty Kooer (2) and Uggrakant Choudhry v. Hurro Chunder Shickdar (3). That the deed was actually executed by Kusam Bibi has got to be proved. Kusam Bibi was an illiterate person. Further, the lower Appellate Court has relied on other documents without reversing the first Court's decision that they are not genuine. There is practically no evidence of the delivery of possession of the land granted by the hebanama. Under the Muhammadan Law a gift must be accompanied by delivery of possession. As regards 14 annas of the land in Schedule II the Appellate Court has misconstrued certain documents.

Babu Upendra Lal Roy (with him Babu Jatindra Nath Sen Gupta), for the Respondents, said that if the case was not going to be sent back for re hearing of the appeal, he did not press his cross-appeal, which might stand dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a title suit in which the plaintiffs claimed

(1) 3 C. 557; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 939.
(2) 24 W. R. 428.
(3) 6 C. 209; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 137.

khas possession of the lands of two schedules on declaration of their title thereto. The two plots of land in dispute are valued in the plaint at Rs. 20. The Munsif dismissed the suit. On appeal by one of the plaintiffs the Subordinate Judge granted the principal plaintiff a decree for half of the lands of the first schedule and also in respect of 14-annas share of the second schedule. The first defendant now appeals to this Court. The judgment of the Subordinate Judge is attacked on various grounds and I am asked to send the case back to him for re-hearing.

The first point taken is that the learned Subordinate Judge has given the plaintiff a decree declaring his raiyati title when he claimed maliki title and repudiated the raiyati title. It appears, however, from the plaint that what the plaintiffs claimed was a maliki raiyati right Maliki in itself is a term of no special meaning. It may mean proprietary right or it may mean a lesser right superior to that of the actual cultivator of the land. Even the right of a raiyat who has let his land to an under-raiyat is sometimes called "maliki." In the present case there was really no need for an express decision as to the exact nature of the plaintiffs' right. The principal plaintiffs and the contesting defendants all based their title to the land as successors-in-interest of one Kusam Bibi, the common ancestor. Her right appears to have been a raiyati one and it was this right which was claimed. As the plaint included a prayer for declaration of a raiyati right, I cannot say that the Subordinate Judge committed any error in decreeing such a right when he found that that right had been established.

As regards the land in the first schedule, the case really turns on a heba which is alleged to have been executed by Kusam Bibi in favour of the plaintiffs or their predecessors. The first Court rejected this document as a spurious piece of paper. The learned Subordinate Judge held that he was justified in making the presumption authorised by section 90 of the Evidence Act and relied on this document. This finding is attacked on the ground that the document in question purported to be signed for Kusam Bibi by Sadatali. It is urged that under section 90 all that can be presumed is that the signature of Sadatali is genuine but there can be no presumption that Sadatali was authorised by Kusam Bibi to sign on her behalf. In support of this contention, reference has been made to the cases of Ubilack Rai v. Dallial Rai (1), Thakoor Pershad v. Musammat Bashmutty Kooer (2) and Uggrakant Chowdhry v. Hurro Chunder Shickdar (3). But these cases are distinguishable from the present case. From the facts stated in the reports, it does not appear that in any of those cases the deed was executed by an illiterate person whose name was signed by some one else on his behalf. In the case of Uggrakant Chowdhry v. Hurro Chunder Shickdar (3), the facts are not stated. In the other two cases the deeds were executed by a person who purported to execute them as an agent. Section 90 provides that in the case of documents to which it refers the Court may presume, in the case of a document executed or attested, that it was duly executed and attested by the persons by whom it purports to be executed and attested. Not only from the signature of Kusam Bibi by the pen of Sadatali but also from the body of the deed it would appear that the deed was actually executed by Kusam Bibi. I have never heard it suggested that the provisions of section 90 do not apply to a deed executed by an illiterate person whose signature has been made on his behalf. The real distinction between such a deed and the deed referred to in the cases cited is that if Sadatali had not signed with the authority of Kusam Bibi, the deed would be a forgery. In the other cases the signature by the agent without authority would have been merely an act which was beyond his power. I hold that the lower Appellate Court was justified in applying the presumption of section 90 and relying on this document when he came to a decision in the plaintiffs' favour.

It is next contended that the learned Subordinate Judge has relied on other documents without reversing the Munsif's decision that they are not genuine. He refers to these documents jointly as "various deeds of title put in evidence by the plaintiffs." The Munsif in rejecting those documents which he rejected stated that he did so on the same grounds on which he rejected the heba. By relying on those documents the learned Subordinate Judge has in effect reversed the finding of the Munsif as to their credibility, and I do not think that the case should be remanded in order that he may repeat, in respect of each individual document, what he stated as regards the hebanama.

Another point taken is that there is no evidence of delivery of possession of the land granted by the hebanama and that without such delivery of possession, under the Muhammadan Law the gift is void.

But in cases where the donor and the donee both reside on the property, the gift may be completed by some overt act by the donor indicating a clear intention on his part to transfer possession and to divest himself of all control over the subject of the gift. Here Kusam Bibi was living in her house when she made this gift to her sons, the predecessors of the parties. It was sufficient to make the gift valid if she openly consented, as she did, to the entry of the donees' name in the Survey papers.

As regards the lands in schedule II both the Courts below have referred to a certain kobala, Exhibit 10, and a khatian. The Munsif says that these documents proved the defendant's title. The Subordinate Judge says that they establish the plaintiffs' title to the 14 annas share. The point depends on the construction of the documents, and before I can say that they have been wrongly construed by the learned Subordinate Judge it would be necessary for me to examine those documents No translation of either document has been put before me and during the hearing of this appeal I was not asked to examine or even look at either document in original. I am, therefore, not in a position to say that the construction put by the learned Subordinate Judge on these documents was incorrect. The respondents have filed a cross-appeal, their contention being that if the heba is genuine then they are entitled to the entire lands in schedule I. The learned Pleader, however, concedes that unless the case is sent back for re-hearing of the appeal, he will not ask for a remand for a fresh determination on the point. I hold, therefore, that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

The cross appeal is dismissed without costs, as it has not been pressed for the reasons stated above.

Appeal dismissed.

Hindu Law—Widow, alienation by—Rent, payment of, whether legal necessity.

The payment of rent is clearly a legal necessity, but a sale of immoveable property for the purpose of discharging an obligation to pay rent is not necessarily justified on such grounds and unless it can be shown that there was no other ostensible means of satisfying a rent decree except by allowing the property to be sold at auction, it cannot be held that the sale of the property, as distinguished from the obligation to pay the rent decree, was justified by legal necessity. [p. 319, col. 2; p. 320, col. 1.]

A widow executed a zarpeshgi lease of certain property and out of the consideration for the zarpeshgi left a sum in the hands of the zarpeshgidar to pay off a previous rent decree. The zarpeshgidar failed to discharge the rent decree, with the result that the property was sold to satisfy the decree and was ultimately purchased by the zarpeshgidar. JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal under clause 10 of the Letters Patent from a decision of a single Judge [of this Court dated the 6th June 1918.*

*See 49 Ind. Cas. 841.—Ed.

DHANIA v. HIKAYAT PANDE.

The dispute is between the reversioners of a small holding of between 2 and 3 bighas of land and Zarpeshgidars holding under a deed granted by the mother of the reversioners during her lifetime. The property is valued in the plaint at Rs. 140. The case has been the subject of no less than seven decisions before coming to this Court for final determination, having been remanded twice by the High Court on second appeal for further findings. This unfortunate state of affairs is due primarily to the slipshod manner in which the case was presented in the pleadings and argued before the lower Courts and until litigants in this province realise the importance of having their cases presented in the pleadings so as to raise clearly and concisely the questions to be determined and argued, I am afraid such instances will continue not unfrequently to occur.

Bishun Mahton died sometime in 1903 or 1904. The exact date of his death it has been found impossible to determine with more precision on the evidence. He left a widow Musammat Ugmi and two daughters Bhodia and Gangia. Musammat Ugmi died in 1911. The daughters, who were the reversionary heirs to Bishun Mahton's property after the death of their mother, are the plaintiffs in the suit. In July 1905 Musammat Ugmi being then a widow executed in favour of the defendants, Nos. 1 to 4 a Zarpeshgi of the property in suit. The sum advanced in consideration of the bond was Rs. 300. Of this sum Rs. 165 was stated to be to enable the widow to discharge a prior debt of her deceased husband. Rupees. 55 was to pay a rent decree obtained against the widow for arrears of rent due in respect of the property for a period of three years from 1309 to 1312 Fasli, corresponding to 1902 to 1905 A. D. The balance of Rs. 80 was said to be for sums due from the widow to the Zarpeshgidars themselves. It was found that the Rs. 55 was retained by the Zarpeshgidars themselves in order to pay off the decree for rent and was not in fact paid to the widow. It was also found that there was no proof of any debt of Rs. 80 due to the Zarpeshgidars and that this sum was not advanced. There was, however, proof that the Rs. 165 was advanced to the widow to pay her deceased husband's prior debts and it was found that to this extent only was there any legal necessity on the part of the widow for the alienation of the property under the Zarpeshgi. It is clear, therefore, on these findings that so far as the Zarpeshgi is concerned, the advance taken by the widow was partly justified on the grounds of legal necessity and partly not, and even if the deed purported to grant more than the widow's life interest it could, on the authority of Harikissan Bhagat v. Rajrang Sahai Singh (1) and similar cases, be set aside by the reversioners on payment of the sum advanced for legal necessity, which was found to be Rs. 165 only.

The case, however, was complicated by the fact that the Zarpeshgidars failed to pay the amount due under the rent decree, although they had retained the money for this purpose out of the sum acknowledged in the Zarpeshgi deed to have been advanced to Musammat Ugmi. The result was that the property was put up for sale in execution and purchased by the defendant No. 5 in September 1908 and subsequently transferred by him to the Zarpeshgidars themselves. The only other principal defendants are Nos. 6 and 7 who are co-sharers with No. 5. These seven defendants defended the action and are the present appellants. The remaining defendants are the thicadars.

It is only necessary to state the facts just mentioned to show that the sale of the property in execution of the rent decree during the widow's lifetime did not arise out of any inability on her part to pay the amount due, she having raised the money for that very purpose and although the payment of rent and the alienation of property for that purpose, if circumstances render it necessary, can be justified on grounds of legal necessity the sale in execution in the circumstances would hardly appear to be justifiable on such grounds. Moreover, the facts show that at the time when the sale took place the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 were in possession as Zarpeshgidars and although they had retained a portion of the consideration payable by them under the deed to satisfy the decree, they nevertheless stood by and allowed execution to proceed, afterwards taking a transfer of the purchaser's interest. These are all matters which create the gravest suspicion as to the good faith of these defendants. This consideration was one which very forcibly impressed the learned Munsif who tried the suit in the first instance. He came to the conclusion that the Zarpeshgidars (defendants Nos. 1 to 4) and the Thicadars (plaintiffs in the rent suit) conspired together to bring the holding to sale and, in order to create difficulties for the reversioners, allowed a third person (the defendant No. 5) to purchase at the ludicrously low price of Rs. 51, so that the Zarpeshgidars could then take a transfer from the auction-purchaser instead of themselves buying at the auction-sale and so rob the reversioners of their holding. The Munsif also found that the purchase at the auction-sale only passed the life-interest of the widow, the decree-holders being fractional landlords only. He accordingly decreed the suit for possession on payment to the Zarpeshgidars of the sum of Rs. 165, the amount of the consideration found to have been paid to the widow and justified by legal necessity. With the other issues we are not now concerned. From this decision the defendants appealed and on the 10th July 1914 the District Judge allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit. On the question as to what interest passed at the auction-sale his judgment was somewhat perfunctory. He said: "Ugmi was a party to the rent suit and no fraud in connection with it is proved. I do not know why the Munsif has held that it binds the holding only so long as the widow's interest lasted. Rent is a legal necessity and I hold that the rent decree had the full force of a rent decree."

The Munsif, as I have above indicated, had found, apart from other questions affecting the validity of the decree, that, as the decree-holders in the rent suit were not the whole body of landlords but fractional landlords only, the suit was not one within section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the decree, therefore, had only the effect of a money decree. Hence, what passed at the auction-sale was not the holding itself but only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, Musammat Ugmi, viz., her life-interest, and that the plaintiffs' interest as reversioners did not pass by the sale. The learned District Judge on appeal does not appear to have considered this aspect of the case.

The plaintiffs then appealed to the High Court. On the 4th May 1916 the case came before a single Judge of the High Court, who set aside the decree and remanded the case for re-hearing. He considered it was essential to ascertain whether the amount claimed in the rent suit brought against the widow was for arrears which became due in her lifetime or in the lifetime of Bishun, her husband, he being of opinion that, in the latter event, the rent decree would pass an absolute interest in the holding notwithstanding the fact that the plaintiffs in that suit were some only of the co-sharer landlords. The date of Bishun's death had not at that time been clearly ascertained. He also directed the Court to find how much of the Rs. 300, the consideration for the Zarpeshgi, was for legal necessity, the lower Appellate Court having come to no finding on this point.

The lower Appellate Court on remand found that Bishun died in 1310 or 1311 Fasli and, as part of the rent accrued during his lifetime, that an absolute title passed to the auction-purchaser, and dismissed the claim. The Court also found, agreeing with the Munsif, that Rs. 165 only of the Zarpeshgi money was advanced for legal necessity, that the Rs. 55 had been retained by the Zarpeshgidars to pay off the rent decree, which they never paid, and that the balance of Rs. 80 was never due to them.

The plaintiffs appealed from this decision to the High Court and the case was heard by a different Judge, who remanded the case again for the lower Court "to determine if the rents of the musammat's time were such as would make the sale for those arrears for legal necessity."

On second remand the lower Appellate Court found that there was no legal necessity for the sale of the holding in execution, as the decretal amount should have been paid out of the Zarpeshgi money, and, if the widow and the Zarpeshgidars between them failed to do this and allowed the property to be sold, it was obviously unjust that the reversioners should suffer thereby.

When this finding was remitted to the High Court the learned Judge held that the sale, not being justified by legal necessity but being due to the neglect of the Zarpeshgidars themselves to pay the decree-holder out of the moneys they had retained for that purpose, was not binding on the reversioners and that they were entitled to redeem the property on payment of the sum of Rs 165, the only portion out of the sum alleged to have been advanced by the Zarpeshgidars which was shown to have been for legal necessity. He accordingly allowed the appeal setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restoring that of the Munsif.

From that decision the present appeal has been preferred by the defendants.

The appellants contended, first, that the Zarpeshgi granted by the widow to the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 entitled them to retain the property until the sum advanced was paid off, and, secondly, that the interest which was purchased at the auction-sale in execution of the rent decree by defendant No. 5 and afterwards transferred by him to the Zarpeshgidars (defendants Nos. 1 to 4) passed an absolute interest in the property subject to encumbrances and not the life-interest of the widow only, and, as the only encumbrance was their own Zarpeshgi, the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 had acquired an absolute title to the property.

As to the first point, it has been found as a fact that the consideration money which actually passed to the widow was Rs. 165 and, therefore, the plaintiffs would be entitled to redeem on payment of this amount. The sum of Rs. 55, alleged to have been advanced for payment of the rent decree, would have been claimable on the ground of legal necessity either if this sum had been paid to the widow or if the defendants who retained it in order to satisfy the decree had discharged their obligation in that respect but this they failed to do.

With regard to the second point the case stands thus. The decree-holders were fractional landlords only and, therefore, the decree obtained by them did not operate as a rent decree under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and what passed at the sale was prima facie only the interest of the judgment-debtor, that is to say, the life interest of Musammat Ugmi. The learned Judge, however, who remanded the case in the first instance held that, if the decree was for rent payable in the lifetime of Bishun, the sale would pass the whole interest in the property. It now turns out that the decree was for rent which accrued partly in Bishun's lifetime and partly in that of his widow, the judgment-debtor. It has also been found that, in so far as the sale took place in execution of a decree for rent which accrued during the widow's lifetime, there was no legal necessity for the sale. Moreover, the payment of rent by a limited owner is, in my opinion, a personal obligation on the part of the tenant and not a liability which affects the property as a whole, and the learned Judge who heard the appeal after the second remand came to the conclusion that, where a sale takes place under circumstances which render it partially voidable owing to the want of legal necessity, the whole sale must be set aside and the purchasers are only entitled to payment of that part of the judgment-debtor's liability which justified the sale on the ground of legal necessity. From this it would appear to follow that whilst the plaintiffs could set aside the sale they would be under an obligation to pay to the auction-purchasers at all events a sum equivalent to the rent which accrued during Bishun's lifetime. In the present case, however, the auction-purchasers have transferred their interest to the Zarpeshgidars and have ceased to have any further interest in the property. The Zarpeshgidars must, therefore, be treated as in the position of auction-purchasers and had the sale been justified even to the extent of the rent payable in Bishun's lifetime on the ground of legal necessity, I think they would be entitled to recover from the plaintiffs the amount of that rent before the sale could be set aside. Some confusion has arisen in this case in some of the judgments by a failure to keep clearly in mind the distinction between a debt the payment of which can be treated as a legal necessity and the sale of property for the purpose of discharging that debt. The payment of rent is clearly a legal necessity, but a sale of immoveable property for the purpose of discharging an obligation to pay rent is not necessarily justified on such grounds and unless it can be shown that there was no other ostensible means of satisfying the rent decree except by allowing the property to be sold at auction, it could not be held that the sale of the property as distinguished from the obligation to pay the rent decree was justified by legal necessity. In the present case it is abundantly clear that no legal necessity for the sale of the property in pursuance of the rent decree against the widow has been made out. What happened was that money was in fact raised by the Zarpeshgi granted to the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 for the very purpose of satisfying the rent decree. The defendants themselves retained out of the consideration money for the Zarpeshgi a sum of Rs. 55 for the purpose of satisfying the rent decree and had they carried out their obligation in this respect, the property would not have been sold. The only reason why the property was in fact sold was because the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 either wilfully or through neglect failed to carry out that part of their obligation. They cannot now be allowed to set up a title which is entirely based not upon any legal necessity but upon their own laches. The result is that the appeal must be dismissed. The respondents are entitled to their costs of this appeal.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

In order to ascertain whether a mortgagor on redemption is bound to pay post diem interest for the whole term during which the mortgage has been in existence, the instrument must be looked at as a whole and the intention of the parties gathered from the deed. [p. 321, col. 1.]

Plaintiff sued for possession by redemption of a certain shop on payment of the mortgage-money. The mortgage sued upon contained a covenant to redeem at the expiry of 5 years by payment of the zar-i-rahn, a covenant to pay interest at Rs. 5 per annum in the meantime and an agreement that, on failure to redeem, the mortgagee shall be at liberty to realise the principal mortgage money, interest, costs, etc, from the property mortgaged:

Held, (1) that the mortgagor did not contemplate paying interest indefinitely; [p. 321, col. 2.]

(2) that it was evident that interest for 5 years at all events was made a charge on the property; [p. 321, col 1.]

(3) that the fact that 5 years' interest was made a charge on the property showed that that should be paid at the time of redemption; [p. 322, col. 1.]

(4) that under the circumstances the plaintiff must be allowed to redeem on payment of principal, interest for the specified term and interest by way of damages for six years prior to suit [p. 321, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gurgaon at Hissar, dated the 21st January 1916, varying that of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Gurgaon, dated the 8th July 1915, decreeing the claim for possession by redemption on payment of Rs. 1,730 within six months to the defendants without costs, failing which the suit shall stand dismissed with costs with reservation for fresh suit if allowed by law or so desired.

The Hon'ble Mr. Mohammad Shafi, for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for possession by redemption of a shop at Ballabgarh, which was mortgaged with possession for a term of five years for Rs. 1,000 by a deed of 10th December 1880.

The first Court decreed redemption on payment of Rs. 1,730 as follows:—

Rs. 1,000 principal.
Rs. 720 interest for 12 years.
Rs. 10 improvements.

The lower Appellate Court increased this amount by Rs. 1,300 on the view that the mortgagor was bound to pay interest at Rs. 60 per annum for the whole period between the date of the mortgage and redemption.

The plaintiff has appealed urging that he can redeem on payment of the principal and interest for five years only, or at the outside on payment of interest by way of damages for an additional six years besides the interest for five years.

Now the mortgage contains the following undertakings :—

(1) A covenant to redeem at the expiry of the term of five years by payment of the principal mortgage money (zar-i-rahn);

(2) a covenant to pay interest at Rs. 5 per mensem to the mortgagee in the meantime;

(3) an agreement that on the mortgagor's failure to redeem as provided above the mortgagee shall be at liberty to realise the principal mortgage money, interest, costs of repairs and costs of Court from the property mortgaged.

It is clear from the above that interest for five years at all events is made a charge on the property and in his cross-objections in the lower Appellate Court plaintiff did not contest his liability to pay this and, therefore, cannot do so now. The question, therefore, narrows down to that of post diem interest.

We have been referred to many authorities as to whether a mortgagor on redemption is bound to pay post diem interest for the whole term during which the mortgage has been in existence. The leading case on the point is Mathura Das v. Raja Narindar Bahadur (1), wherein it is laid down by the Privy Council that in order to ascertain whether post diem interest is to be allowed, the instrument must be looked at as a whole and the intention of the parties gathered from the deed. It cannot be predicated with certainty without such examination whether the intention is that interest will continue to accrue as long as the principal money is unpaid, although there is a natural presumption in favour of this intention rather than that the mortgagor should have the use of the mortgage money without charge, or whether on the mortgagor's failure to redeem within the stipulated period the contract is to be regarded as broken and the mortgagee thrown back on a suit for damages. In the one case it is evident that the mortgagor will have to pay interest up to the date of redemption and in the other the mortgagees are entitled to recover principal and interest for the term of the mortgage plus interest for six years prior to suit by way of damages. The Calcutta High Court in Moti Singh v. Ramohari Singh (2) by a Full Bench judgment adopted this latter rule as their guide to ascertain the amount payable by a mortgagor to redeem, in a case where the mortgage did not specifically provide for post diem interest. The same rule was adopted in Jawahir Mal v. Raja Shah (3), when the Chief Court concluded that the mortgage could be redeemed only on payment of interest and post diem interest by way of damages accruing within six years of suit. This judgment appears to us to be very much in point looking to the wording of the mortgage now in suit.

The principal authority to the contrary in the Punjab is Mota Singh v. Bishen Singh (4), which again quotes the Privy Council decision in Mathura Das v. Raja Narindar Bahadur (1). On the wording of the deeds before the Court the Judges decided that interest must be calculated for the entire period during which the mortgage remained unpaid.

There is one further point, namely, that the expression zar-i rahn has been several times interpreted in the Punjab as meaning principal mortgage money but excluding interest. [Aulia Khan v. Kanshi Ram (5) and Lok Chand v. Hazar Khan (6)]. The present case, however, is distinguishable. The fact that five years' interest was made a charge on the property mortgaged shows that the intention of the parties was that that should be paid at the time of redemption.

On an examination of the terms of the mortgage in suit we do not think that we can hold with certainty that the mortgage contemplated paying interest indefinitely. This being the case, we can fall back on the alternative provided by the Privy Council judgment of allowing redemption on payment of principal and interest for the specified term and interest by way of damages for six years prior to suit, including an item of Rs. 10 for improvements. This will permit redemption on payment of Rs. 1,000 principal, Rs. 660 interest and Rs. 10 for improvements, or a total of Rs. 1,670.

Accordingly we accept the appeal to the above extent, but as neither party has succeeded wholly in his contentions we leave them to bear their own costs throughout.

BILATUNNESSA BIBI, WIFE OF SABED KHAN—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Muhammadan Law—Marriage—Agreement that wife shall be at liberty to reside with her parents on certain contingencies arising, validity of.

Conditions entered into at the time of marriage and contained in a kabinnama are enforceable although the kabinnama is executed subsequent to the marriage. [p. 323, col. 2.]

There is nothing in Muhammadan Law opposed to an agreement entered into at the time of marriage which does not allow the wife to deny her husband's conjugal rights but permits her, on certain contingencies arising, to leave her husband's house and to insist on the conjugal rights being exercised in her parents' residence. [p. 323, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 26th September 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Tangail, dated the 8th September 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Ashraf Ali (with him Babus Hira Lal Guha and Provash Chandra Dutt), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. The first Court decreed the suit. The second Court reversed it, relying on the kabinnama which provided that the wife would be entitled to live with her parents (1) if she was ill-treated by the husband or any member of his family and (2) if she had any disagreement with her husband or his family. The respondent is the appellant's deceased wife's widowed sister whom the appellant married. The couple lived together for two years, after which the wife went away to her parents and there the kabinnama was executed containing the above two provisions. The wife then came back and lived for another two years with the husband, when she again went to her parents on account of her pregnancy. She refused to come back after delivery. Hence the suit.

My point is that no legal cruelty has been proved which would entitle her to remain away from her husband. Under the Muhammadan Law the contract on which she relies is held to be void. The contract was neither a separation deed nor was it executed immediately on marriage. See Wilson's Anglo-Muhammadan Law, section 56, page 140. The prompt dower has been paid and the stipulation is void. See Macnaghten's Muhammadan Law, page 57, on effect of marriage contract; Ameer Ali (3rd Edition), Volume II, page 452. The wife cannot refuse to live with her husband except on the ground of legal cruelty. See Abdur Rahman's Institutes of Muhammadan Law, section 17; Bailie's Digest, page 30. The contract was entered into two years after marriage. See also Meherally Mooraj v. Sakerkhanoobai (1), Abdul Pirojkhan v. Hussenbi (2), Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumshoonnissa Begum (3) and Hamilton's Hedaya, 55.

Moulvi A. K. Fuzlul Huq, (with him Babu Profulla Chandra Nag), for the Respondent.—No mention was made in the plaint that the kabinnama contained illegal provisions. The point was never raised before either of the Courts. A Muhammadan marriage is a civil contract. All kinds of stipulations can be made provided they do not militate against the law of contracts. The important point is this, whether the contract was entered into at the time of the marriage. I submit it was drawn up at the time of the marriage but was registered sometime later. The deed itself bears that out. So my submission is that the contract having been entered into at the time of the marriage, it is enforceable. See Wilson's Digest, section 56. This statement does not militate against a stipulation contingent on the happening of certain circumstances. The parties are not on happy terms. When there is an express condition, we must not go upon the general principles of Muhammadan Law, viz., that the wife cannot refuse to go back to her husband when there is no legal cruelty. See Ameer Ali, Volume II, page 482. The view expressed therein is in my favour.

Mr. Ashraf Ali replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit between Muhammadans for restitution of conjugal rights. The plaintiff is the husband and has been granted a decree for restitution of conjugal rights by both the Courts below. But while the Munsif directed the defendant, the wife, to go to her husband's house, the lower Appellate Court declared that the conjugal rights must be exercised at the biri of the wife's parents. It appears that after the marriage of the parties the husband executed a kabinnama. The decision of the lower Appellate Court is based on the terms of clauses 4 and 5 of this deed. The wife was given the right to leave her husband's house and to live elsewhere on two contingencies. The first contingency was ill-treatment by the husband or by any other inmate of his house. The second contingency was any sort of difference or disagreement with the husband or his family members. It has been found that there was ill-treatment and on this finding it has been held that the husband was entitled to restitution of conjugal rights only if he allowed his wife to live with her parents. On behalf of the appellant, it is contended that such a clause in the kabinnama must be held to be invalid because it is contrary to the principles of Muhammadan Law. Reference has been made to Wilson's Anglo-Muhammadan Law, 3rd Edition, paragraph 56, in which it is stated: "The condition that the wife shall, though adult, be at liberty to live in the house of her parents is void and the husband is entitled, notwithstanding it, to insist on the wife residing with him in his own house, provided he has paid the dower or a prompt portion of it." Reference has also been made to the case of Abdul Pirojkhan v. Hussenbi (2) and the case of Meherally Moorai v. Sakerkhanoobai (1) in support of this proposition. But here it is not suggested that the wife will be entitled to leave her husband's house without a cause. Such a condition would undoubtedly be opposed to the Muhammadan Law. But there is nothing in any of these authorities to show that the condition that the wife may leave her husband's house on ill-treatment is opposed to these principles. Reference was also made to the leading case of Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumshoonnissa Begum (3) and it was argued that before the wife could resist the suit for restitution of conjugal rights on the ground of cruelty, she must prove such cruelty as would endanger her life, or at any rate cruelty, of a more severe character than has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge in the present case. But in this case the defence is based not on cruelty itself but on ill-treatment as a breach of a condition of the kabinnama, which entitled her to leave her husband's house and permitted her to go to her parents. It is also contended that this agreement was void as not having been entered into at the time of marriage. But in neither of the lower Courts was such a point taken. It appears that there is evidence, and that the deed itself recites that though executed sometime after the marriage; it contains the conditions which were entered into at the time of marriage. We, therefore, hold on the findings of the lower Appellate Court that this agreement is not bad by reason of its having been an agreement subsequent to the marriage. We can see nothing in Muhammadan Law opposed to an agreement such as this, which does not allow the wife to deny her husband's conjugal rights but permits her, when ill-treated, to leave her husband's house and to insist on those rights being exercised in her parents' residence.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

A benamidar is entitled to maintain an action for recovery of possession of immoveable property in his own name, without joining the beneficial owner as a party to the suit. [p. 325, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeal from a decision of Justice Sir Ali Imam, dated the 23rd April 1918 and reported as 45 Ind. Cas. 794, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Purneah.

Mr. Shiva Narain Bose, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal under clause 10 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of a single Judge of this Court dated the 23rd April 1918.* The plaintiff sued for a declaration of title to and recovery of khas possession of certain land of which he had been dispossessed by the defendant. The plaintiff proved his title under a registered sale-deed executed in his favour by the previous tenant in September 1913. The main defence was that the plaintiff's vendor, one Bandhu, was not the real tenant but was a benamidar of the defendant and, therefore, had no title which he could transfer to the plaintiff. This story was not accepted by the learned Munsif, nor did the defendant succeed in establishing a further defence that he had not dispossessed the plaintiff but had been in possession of the property himself all along. A further point was taken by the defendant that the suit was bad for non-joinder of parties, the plaintiff's father being joint with the plaintiff although he had not been added as a party on the record. The Munsif thought that this did not affect the maintainability of the suit and he passed a decree in the plaintiff's favour.

The defendant appealed to the Subordinate Judge and the only question which was argued before the Subordinate Judge, as appears from his judgment, was that the suit was not maintainable by the plaintiff. It appeared from the plaintiff's evidence that the land had been purchased by the plaintiff's father in the plaintiff's name and the plaintiff being, therefore, found to be a benamidar of his father, the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion, following certain decisions of the Calcutta High Court, that the plaintiff was not competent to maintain a suit for possession of immoveable property.

On appeal to this Court the case came before a single Judge who, relying on the authority of Atrabannessa Bibi v. Safatullah Mia (1), upheld the decision of the Subordinate Judge. There was, at the time when that judgment was delivered, some conflict of opinion on this question in the decisions of the High Courts in India. Since then, however, the question has been finally determined by the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Chowdhuri Gur Narayan v. Sheo Lal Singh (2). Exactly the same question came for determination before their Lordships in that case as has to be determined now, and in their Lordships' judgment which was delivered by Mr. Ameer Ali it appears that the question for determination there was whether a person who has no beneficial interest in the property which stands in his name or is acquired in his name can maintain an action in respect thereof. The facts of that case were very similar to the present. There was evidence to show that the purchase by one Mohesh Lal of a share in certain villages which were the subject-matter of the suit was really a purchase for the benefit of another person and that Mohesh Lal having purchased in that manner was the benamidar of the real beneficial owner. In that case as in the present case Mohesh Lal had persistently denied that he was a benamidar or that he had no beneficial interest in the property. The High Court came to the conclusion that there was good ground for supposing that Mohesh Lal was really only a benamidar. Now, in the present case, the Subordinate Judge and the learned Judge of this Court have also come to the conclusion upon the plaintiff's own evidence, in which he says that the property was purchased by his father in his name, that there was sufficient to show that the plaintiff was really a benamidar. From the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council, to which I have already referred, it appears that they treated the case as one of a claim made by a benamidar for the possession of immoveable property and upon that hypothesis came to the conclusion that there was no reason why a benamidar should not maintain an action in his own name without having the beneficial owner added as a party. The following passage which occurs in that judgment seems to me to make the matter quite clear:

"As already observed, the benamidar has no beneficial interest in the property or business that stand in his name; he represents, in fact, the real owner, and so far as their relative legal position is concerned he is a mere trustee for him. Their Lordships find it difficult to understand why, in such circumstances, an action cannot be maintained in the name of the benamidar in respect of the property although the beneficial owner is no party to it. The bulk of judicial opinion in India is in favour of the proposition that in a proceeding by or against the benamidar, the person beneficially entitled is fully affected by the rules of res judicata. With this view their Lordships concur. It is open to the latter to apply to be joined in the action; but whether he is made a party or not a proceeding by or against his representative in its ultimate result is fully binding on him."

Then the judgment points out that in the case of a contest between the alleged benamidar and the alleged real owner other considerations might arise with which their Lordships were in that judgment not concerned. It seems to me that the circumstances of the present case are entirely covered by the decision to which I have just referred. There is no dispute by the beneficial owner, if it could be taken, as the learned Subordinate Judge has found, that the plaintiff was only a benamidar, that he has any adverse right which the benamidar's action in any way interferes with. There is no dispute between these parties. The beneficial owner, the benamidar's father, has not thought fit to intervene in the action or to interfere in any way, and the only contest is as between the benamidar and the defendant seeking to obstruct his possession.

It seems to me quite clear that the decision of the Judicial Committee to which I have just referred applies to the present case and that this is just the class of action in which they have laid down that a suit by a benamidar for the possession of immoveable property is maintainable in India. In these circumstances, the decision of the learned Judge affirming the decision of the Subordinate Judge must be set aside and the decree of the Munsif restored. We think that the appellant is entitled to his costs both here and in the two lower Courts and the result is that the appeal is allowed with costs here and of the appeal to the Subordinate Judge and of the second appeal to this Court.

CHIDAMBARAM PILLAI v. DURAISWAMY CHETTY.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 241 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Kumbakonam, in Original Suit No. 463 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. E. S. Chidambaram Pillai and P. N. Marthandam Pillai, for the Appellant.—The lower Court misapplied the provisions of Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. The right to sue for rent under the assignment was in respect of arrears and is distinct from the right to sue for rent based on plaintiff's title as vendee. The causes of action are distinct. Plaintiff might have sued for both in one suit, but was not bound to do so. See Dasarthy Naidu v. Palala Kumaramull (1), Naro Hari v. Anpuranabai (2) and Muhammad Abdul Aziz v. Rafi-un nissa Bibi (3).

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, for the Respondent.—There are no two causes of action for the plaintiff. Defendant's obligation was to pay rent and all breaches of that obligation constitute only one cause of action. Plaintiff must have sued for the rent due whether under the assignment or under his title as vendee in one suit.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this case is whether Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code bars the present suit. The plaintiff obtained a sale of certain property. Subsequently the right of the vendor for uncollected rent was assigned to him. The plaintiff first sued for arrears of rent due under his assignment. The second suit is for the rent based on title. In our opinion the causes of action for the two suits are not the same. It is true that under Order II, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiff could have joined both the causes of action in one suit. But that is not the test. As was pointed out in Dasarthy Naidu v. Palala Kumaramull (1), the test is not whether the plaintiff could have sued for both the claims in the same suit, but whether he was bound to have sued. Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar contended that the only obligation was to pay rent and that all the breaches of that obligation form but one cause of action. In the present case, the obligations are different. The one was incurred to the assignor and he could have sued separately, notwithstanding the fact that he subsequently sold the property in respect of which rent had accrued due. The obligation in the second suit relates to the right arising from the title to property itself. As was pointed out in Naro Hari v. Anpurnabai (2) printed as foot-note in Vishnu Sakharam Nagarakar v. Krishnarao Malhar (4) and in the cases following it, it is not the final breach that constitutes the cause of action but the right and the infringement taken together. In this view, the two suits were based on two different causes of action. The case is practically on all fours with Muhammad Abdul Aziz v. Rafi-un-nissa Bibi (3) and we are of opinion that that case enunciates the true principle applicable to such cases. In Ittappan v. Manavikrama (5) this Court's definition of the term 'cause of action' accords with the view taken in Allahabad.

For these reasons, we must reverse the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the District Munsif with this modification, that plaintiff should be given interest at one per cent. per mensem on Rs. 87-8-0 from the 1st March 1913 up to date of suit and on the other Rs. 87-8-0 from 1st March 1914 to date of suit, and thereafter at 6 per cent. per annum till date of realization. Parties will pay and receive proportionate costs here and in the Courts below.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This appeal has been argued at considerable length by the learned Vakil for the appellant, but the points seem to have no foundation at all.

The first point urged is that this being a waqf property—the tenure having been possessed by a waqif—the mutwalli, knowing that the tenure could be annulled, had no power to enter into an agreement with the purchaser at a revenue sale for the grant of a new lease in place of the lease that was liable to be annulled. The learned Vakil for the appellant has given us no decision that the transaction is outside the scope of the powers of a trustee. Apart from authority, I decline to accept the view. In addition to this, the matter was not raised in the lower Courts. It is not a pure question of law whether the lease is binding; and the lower Appellate Court has found that rent was being paid by the mutwalli under the terms of the new lease.

The next point was that there was no proof that the plaintiff was an auction purchaser. The plaintiff stated in the plaint that he was and it seems to have been assumed at the trial that he was. Moreover, additional evidence was given before the lower Court of Appeal to show that he was, in fact, the purchaser at a revenue sale.

The third question raised seems to have absolutely no foundation. The appellant managed to persuade the learned Judge of the first Court that certain documents were not admissible in evidence and accordingly they were rejected. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court took a different view and admitted the documents in evidence after proof. The case made by the appellant is that the lower Appellate Court had no power to admit additional evidence. It was not additional evidence at all. These documents were tendered in the Court of first instance and were improperly rejected.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

CUMING, J.—I agree.

During the pendency of the suit C died and the present plaintiff's name was substituted as a co-plaintiff with B, his uncle, as the next friend. Subsequently the parties agreed to refer the dispute to arbitration and applied to the Court for an order of reference, which was granted. The arbitrator gave his award, but the plaintiff being dissatisfied with it filed objections. Eventually a decree was passed in accordance with the award. Plaintiff then brought the present suit for a declaration that the decree was null and void and ineffectual against him. JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit brought by the plaintiff appellant for a declaration that the decree dated the 14th of May 1914 passed by the Chief Court on the basis of an award dated the 22nd of October 1908 was null and void and ineffectual against him. The facts giving rise to the suit are the following. One Haji Sikandar carried on a business in partnership with one Nur Din. Haji Sikandar having died left three sons, Umar Din, Muhammad Din and Charagh Din, as his heirs and legal representatives. In 1898 the three brothers brought a suit against Nur Din for the dissolution of the partnership and the settlement of accounts. During the pendency of the suit, Charagh Din having died, the name of the appellant Ibrahim was substituted in the place of his father as a co-plaintiff, with Muhammad Din, his uncle, as the next friend. It appears that in 1908 the parties to the suit agreed to refer the matter in difference between them to arbitration and applied to the Court on the 13th of July 1908 for an order of reference. In the hearing of the application the parties were described thus:—Muhammad Din and Umar Din, sons of Haji Sikandar, and Muhammad Ibrahim, minor son of Charagh Din, residents of Nizamabad plaintiffs versus Nur Din, son of Ismail, resident of Nizamabad defendant. At the foot of the petition the following description was given:—Petition of Muhammad Din, son of Haji Sikandar, and Muhammad Ibrahim, minor son of Charagh Din through Muhammad Din, his Taya. The petition was signed by Muhammad Din, Ilm Din, agent of the plaintiffs, and Nur Din defendant, and was couched in the following words:—

"In the above noted case we, the parties, have unanimously nominated Pandit Prem Nath Kaul, record-keeper of the District Court, Rawalpindi. We do hereby agree that the award which may be given by the said arbitrator will be final and we, the parties, will accept and abide by that award on the issue framed by the Court and also as regards the point which party owes money, how much and to whom. Hence we have executed this agreement that the whole case may be made over to the arbitrator for disposal."

The Court made the following order on the petition:—

"It is ordered that according to the application of the aforesaid parties the case for disposal of the issues and the point as to how much money is on account of the business in question, which party owes it and to whom it is due under the account between them, be made over to the arbitrator."

The arbitrator gave his award and filed it in Court on the 22nd of October 1908. The plaintiffs were dissatisfied with the award and filed objections impugning its correctness. The Court by its order dated the 18th December 1908 set aside the award and proceeded to decide the case on the merits. A decree was passed on the 10th of July 1909. Both the parties were dissatisfied with the decree and preferred cross appeals to the Chief Court. In the memorandum of appeal filed by the defendant Nur Din the first plea taken was that the lower Court had erred in law and had acted without sufficient ground in setting aside the award. The Chief Court accepted this plea in appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Court and passed a decree in accordance with the award on 14th of May 1914. The plaintiffs' appeal was dismissed. Thereupon the plaintiffs presented on the 11th of July 1914 a petition for review of judgment. The question of the minority of the plaintiff-appellant Ibrahim was raised at the hearing. It was argued that by a petition dated the 13th of October 1908 Muhammad Din had withdrawn from the guardianship of the minor plaintiff and that the latter himself had, by a petition dated the 14th of October 1908, applied to the arbitrator to appoint another person as the guardian ad litem, but no notice had been taken of these applications and no one had been appointed to take the place of the retiring next friend. The Court went into this question fully and came to the conclusion that the interests of the plaintiffs had been fully looked after by Ilm Din, their Mukhtar-i-am. It was held that Muhammad Din upon his own admission knew little or nothing about the matter in dispute and trusted entirely, for the conduct of the case, Ilm Din who was conversant with all the details. All possible objections were raised and argued before the Court by Mr. Beechey on behalf of the plaintiffs, but there appears to be no indication in the judgment that the legality of the reference to arbitration was challenged in any shape or form. It would rather appear from the objections relating to the conduct of the arbitrator that the propriety of the reference was tacitly accepted. In this connection it is important to bear in mind that the appellant had in the meantime attained majority and was fully competent to take care of his interest. According to the evidence he was born on the 20th June 1894. He must, therefore, be taken to have attained majority sometime in June 1912. In 1914 he was more than 20 years old. He must certainly have been aware of the litigation which was going on. No question appears to have been raised on his behalf that the reference to arbitration during his minority had been invalidly or irregularly made. Probably he had accepted the situation and was contented to contest the award on the ground of the misconduct of the arbitrator. The petition for review of judgment was rejected on the 23rd of October 1914. The present suit has been instituted against Allah Bakhsh and Khuda Bakhsh, the sons of Nur Din, mainly on the ground that inasmuch as the agreement referring the dispute to arbitration was not expressly sanctioned by the Court, the reference was invalid and consequently the award of the arbitrator and the decree based on it were null and void and ineffectual against the plaintiff. The other grounds are detailed in clauses (b), (c) and (d) of the paragraph 5 of the plaint. These latter grounds were fully discussed and disposed of by the learned Judges who heard and decided the application for review. The suit was contested by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 while the defendants Nos. 3 and 4, Muhammad Din and Umar Din, for obvious reasons admitted the claim. The learned Subordinate Judge for the reasons set forth in his judgment has dismissed the suit and the plaintiff has come up in appeal to this Court.

The first contention raised before us is that the lower Court, having found that "the plaintiff's next friend did not obtain an express sanction of the Court before referring the case to the arbitration of Pandit Prem Nath", was wrong in dismissing the plaintiff's claim. In support of this contention the Full Bench ruling of this Court in Ganesha v. Mul Chand (1) and the provisions of Order XXXII, rule 7, are relied upon. On behalf of the defendants-respondents it has been argued that the provisions of Order XXXII, rule 7, are not applicable to an application referring a matter to arbitration, inasmuch as it is neither an agreement nor a compromise within the meaning of this rule. The decisions of the Allahabad High Court are cited by the learned Counsel in support of his contention, namely, (1) Hardeo Sahai v. Gouri Shankar (2) and (2) Lutawan v. Lachiya (3). The first was a decision under sections 462 and 506 of the old Code of 1882. The second decision is under the new Code and is certainly in point and supports the argument, but it is opposed to the Full Bench ruling of this Court. Moreover the view on this point was expressed by only two of the Judges who constituted the Full Bench and was not shared in by Sir Pramoda Charan Banerjee, the third Judge. He did not express any opinion on this point at all. We are bound by the Full Bench ruling of this Court which, in our opinion, lays down the correct law on the point. According to the decision an application of the guardian or next friend of a minor under section 506 of the former Code of Civil Procedure or under Schedule II, paragraph 1, of the present Code comes within the purview of section 462 of the former Code or Order XXXII, rule 7, of the present Code, as the case may be, and unless the leave of the Court is expressly obtained and recorded, the application will have the same effect and be open to the same objections as would any other agreement or compromise entered into by such guardian or next friend with reference to the suit without the leave of the Court, expressly recorded in the proceedings. The decision, however, having regard to the facts of the case, does not help the plaintiff-appellant. At page 332* of the report the following observation is to be found:—

"The leave or sanction of the Court must be obtained and must be expressly recorded if the reference to arbitration is to be valid for all purposes and against all parties including the minor, but it does not follow that in a case where such sanction has not been obtained, the reference must necessarily be invalid or void. The minor alone can claim to avoid it .....but it is of course open to him, if so advised, to affirm and ratify the reference and all subsequent proceedings."

In this case there is evidence to show that the appellant did affirm and ratify the reference and all subsequent proceedings. In his application dated the 2nd of March 1917 he referred to the decree in question and alleged that a compromise had been arrived at between the parties in connection with the execution of that decree. This statement in the application clearly indicates that the appellant had accepted the decree as valid and correct. The plaintiff has been examined as a witness in this case and his evidence goes to show that so far as he was personally concerned, he had no knowledge of any defect. As we have said before, no objection was put forward on his behalf at the hearing of his appeal or his application in this Court. He to all intents and purposes had accepted and ratified the reference to arbitration. It is clear from the evidence on the record that his next friend and uncle, Umar Din, diligently prosecuted the previous suit in which he was equally interested. A reference to the proceedings in that suit shows that all that was possible to do was done by him. When the award was found objectionable he got it set aside by the first Court. When the decision on the merits was against the plaintiffs in some respects, an appeal was preferred to the Chief Court. Eventually when the decision of the Chief Court was given against the plaintiffs, a petition of review was filed and hotly contested. This is not a case in which it has been shown that the interest of the minor has in any way suffered. The question as to the gross negligence and carelessness on the part of the next friend was fully considered and disposed of by this Court in the previous litigation and has been fully dealt with by the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment in the present case We fully agree in the conclusions arrived at by him on the evidence on the record. As regards the prosecution of the case before the arbitrator, we have no doubt on the evidence that in spite of his application dated the 13th of October 1908 Muhammad Din continued to prosecute the case both in the lower Court and the Chief Court. Ilm Din, the agent, continued to act and look after the case before the arbitrator as long as anything useful and material was to be done.

In this view it is not necessary to decide the question whether, having regard to the fact that at the date of the decree of this Court in the previous suit the appellant had obtained majority, it is open to him now to challenge the validity of the decree by a separate suit. The cases of Seshagiri Rao v. Tangaturi Jagannadhan (4) and Musammat Khadija v. Musammat Fidyatuz Zohra (5) appear to support the argument of Mr. Nanak Chand, but we do not think it necessary to base our decision on this ground as the suit must fail on the grounds set forth above.

We confirm the decree of the Court below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. Where the property of a judgment-debtor is sold in execution of a decree, but before the sale is confirmed, the judgment-debtor arranges to sell it to a third party for a stipulated sum in the event of the sale not being confirmed, the judgment-debtor, in depositing the money in Court, should himself apply, as the owner of the property, for the auction sale to be set aside. An application by a person as purchaser subsequent to the auction sale, being in contravention of rule 89 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, cannot be entertained. [p. 331, col. 2]

Where a contract expressly omits to provide for a contingency which is not contemplated, and which is already provided for by the law, and that contingency occurs, whereby the contract becomes void, the contract is not opposed to public policy, and under section 65 of the Contract Act, the person who has received an advantage under the contract is bound to restore it to the person from whom he received it. Mr. Lakshmi Narain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an exceptional and troublesome case. It has been extremely well argued on both sides and we have come to the decision at which we have arrived after considerable hesitation. Upon the reasoning of the respective Judges in the inferior Courts we agree with the first Court rather than the lower Appellate Court, but on the other hand we have come to the conclusion that the appeal must be dismissed and the plaintiff's suit decreed upon a ground which has not been satisfactorily dealt with in the lower Appellate Court.

The facts are simple. The property of the defendant judgment-debtor had been attached and an auction sale had taken place and confirmation thereof was pending, whereupon the plaintiff agreed with the defendant to purchase the property for a stipulated sum in the event of the sale not being confirmed, and the intention probably was and certainly ought to have been and the practice should be in such cases that the defendant or judgment-debtor in depositing the money in Court should himself apply as the owner of the property for the auction sale to be set aside. An arrangement of that kind does not make the judgment-debtor at the time being nevertheless the owner of the property. Instead, however, of the defendant making the application under Order XXI, rule 89, the application was made by the plaintiff in his capacity as purchaser subsequent to the auction sale and was properly dismissed upon the authority of Ishar Das v. Asaf Ali Khan (1). The rule provides in express terms that a purchaser applying under that rule must be a purchaser before the auction sale. The result, therefore, was that the sale was confirmed and the money, a substantial sum, Rs. 900, remained deposited in Court. The defendant, as the person who had deposited it, applied to have it paid out to him and it was so paid out. The question then arose as to what should be done with it and the plaintiff eventually sued the defendant to recover the money. Now the contract to which we have referred was reduced into writing and in substance provided for every contingency except the contingency which has actually occurred, and it provided in very clear and distinct language the conditions under which prima facie the plaintiff was entitled to realise the sale consideration from the defendant, namely, if any difficulty arose on account of which he, the plaintiff, did not get possession over the property owing to any act or omission on the part of the defendant. It has not been found in favour of the plaintiff that the sale was confirmed through any act or omission on the part of the defendant, nor is there anything in the case to suggest that that was the fact. It is true that it would have been much better, indeed the application would probably have succeeded, if the defendant had made it instead of the plaintiff. There is nothing to show whose fault this was. and it may be presumed that it was simply an ordinary misunderstanding of the technical position under the Code based upon a very natural belief that a person who has deposited money for the purchase of property is in one sense of the word the owner thereof. This being the case, undoubtedly by English Law, upon which a great deal if not most of the contract law in India is based, the action would be bound to fail. An English lawyer would be compelled to hold that as the contract provided an express condition under which this money could be recovered back from the defendant, the plaintiff, and any Court before whom it came, would be prohibited by the rules of interpretation from imposing an additional condition which the parties had not chosen to provide in the contract. We think that the law in this matter in particular, as has been pointed out more than once by English lawyers, is not in India precisely the same as in England. Our decision really turns upon the provisions of section 65 of the Indian Contract Act, which lays down that when a contract becomes void, any person who has received any advantage under such agreement or contract is bound to restore it to the person from whom he received it. That lays down a proposition much wider than anything which is to be found in English Law. In fact there are many English decided cases to the contrary. It does not remove the whole of the plaintiff's difficulty, because the question still remains whether in fact the contract in this case has not made an express provision inconsistent with the stipulation contained in section 65. On the whole we have come to the conclusion that the contract is not inconsistent with that section. It has to be borne in mind that contracts in this country are not made, as a general rule, by trained professional lawyers with the same attempt at scientific precision which prevails among English Solicitors, and we have come to the conclusion that the parties to this somewhat unartistic document thought it unnecessary to provide for a contingency against which express provision had already been made by the codified law in India The contract is silent as to what is to happen if the sale was confirmed. It is quite clear that if there had been no contract at all, then the plaintiff would be entitled to recover by the express provisions of section 65 and we think having regard to all the circumstances in the case and the conduct of the parties, the contract must be treated as having expressly omitted to provide for that contingency which was, in the first place, never contemplated, and in the second place, was already provided for by the law. The lower Appellate Court, in dealing with this aspect of the matter, held that the contract, if void, offended against section 23, in other words, against public policy. We cannot take this view of the matter. There is nothing to justify that view in the decision in Ishar Das v. Asof Ali Khan (1) and the real purpose and intention of Order XXI, rule 89, is contained in a very clear statement in the judgment of Mr. Justice Batchelor in Pandurang Laxman Uphade v. Govinda Dado Uphade (2), in which it is pointed out, as was pointed out by my brother Mr. Justice Rafique in the argument in this case, "that the object of the Legislature apparently was not merely or specifically to preserve the immoveable property in the hands of the judgment-debtor, but to ensure, so far as may be possible, that immoveable properties shall not at Court sales be sold at inadequate prices.....but that the Court will be realising the intentions of the Legislature if it construes these provisions so as to ensure that the monetary loss accruing to the judgment debtor be as little as possible." This view of the matter has exercised considerable influence upon our judgment in this case. So far from these contracts being against public policy, they are really in the interests of judgment-debtors alone with a view if possible at the eleventh hour to rescue the property from a forced sale at an undervalue, and the view which the defendant presses upon us that we ought to take of this contract must, if accepted by us, have the effect of very much discouraging other persons coming to the rescue of the judgment debtor and putting down money to be deposited in Court to prevent the confirmation of the auction sale, if they are to do so at the risk of losing their money entirely in the event of some unforeseen accident making the contract impossible of completion. The result of the view taken of this case by the first Court would really be contrary to natural justice. It is satisfactory to find that the law as codified enables us in this case to do what we feel satisfied is really substantial justice. The result is that the appeal must be dismissed and we accordingly dismiss it with costs.

(1) 13 Ind. Cas. 134; 34 A. 186; 9 A. L. J. 19.

The cross-objections are disallowed with costs.

Hindu Law—Maintenance, right to—Impartible zemindari*—Junior members of family of holder, whether entitled to be maintained out of estate—Custom —Burden of proof.*

Apart from custom and from certain near relationships to the holder, the junior members of the family of a zemindar entitled to an impartible zemindari have no right to maintenance out of it. [p. 335, col. 1.]

There is no invariable custom by which any members of the family beyond the first generation from the last holder can claim maintenance as of right. [p. 335, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, the son of a brother of the last holder claimed maintenance, and the defendants (under an erroneous view that by the general law he was entitled to maintenance) alleged a custom excluding his claim:

Held, that the burden of proof was on the plaintiff, and it was for him to prove a custom entitling him, not for defendants to prove one disentitling him. [p. 335, col. 1.]

Appeals from a decree of the Madras High Court (Sankaran Nair and Tyabji, JJ.), dated the 22nd December 1909, varying a decree of the Agent to the Governor at Vizagapatam.

FACTS.—Vikrama Deo Garu sued the Maharajah of Jeypore and his son for maintenance to which he claimed to be entitled as son of the brother of the Maharajah's father and predecessor. He alleged that he was actually receiving Rs. 350 per month, but that this was insufficient; he claimed Rs. 2,000 per month and Rs. 15,000 for a house. Defendants pleaded, inter alia, that plaintiff was too distantly related to entitle him to claim any maintenance "either according to Hindu Law or the custom among Uriya Zemindars or the custom of the family."

Of the issues fixed by the trial Court the following only are material:—

3. Is the first defendant bound to maintain (the plaintiff) according to Hindu Law out of the income of the Jeypore Zamindari?

4. Whether according to the custom among Uriya Zemindars, or the custom of the family, the first defendant is not liable to maintain the plaintiff out of the income of the Jeypore Zemindari?

13. Whether the plaintiff can claim a separate house for residence?

The trial Court found for the plaintiff on issues Nos. 3 and 4, for the defendants on issue No. 13.

On the third issue the learned Judge based his finding on Mayne's Hindu Law, paragraph 458, and the decision of the Madras High Court in Appeal No. 27 of 1907 [Chettikulam Prasanna Vencatachella Reddiar v. Chettikulum Kumara Vencatachella Reddiar (1)]. On the fourth issue he found that the evidence was insufficient to establish a custom disentitling plaintiff to maintenance. In the result he decreed maintenance at the rate of Rs. 800 per month.

The judgment in Appeal No. 27 of 1907 was given by Wallis and Sankaran Nair, JJ., on August 3, 1909, in Chettikulam Prasanna Vencatachella Reddiar v. Chettikulam Kumara Vencatachella Reddiar (1) The material part of the judgment is as follows:—

"The learned Advocate-General...contended that in the case of an impartible Zemindari the junior members of the family have no legal right to maintenance, a conclusion, which he argues, follows logically from the recent decisions of the Privy Council as to the nature of an impartible Zemindari. We are not prepared to accept this contention which, we may observe, was given up in the Court below. In Raja Yarlagadda Mallikarjuna Prasada Nayadu v. Raja Yarlagadda Durga Prasada Nayadu (2) their Lordships distinctly recognise the right to maintenance of the junior members of a Raj or other impartible estate. A similar claim was allowed without opposition in the Udayarpalayam case (Kachi Kaliyana Rengappa Kalakka Thola Udayar v. Kachi Yuva Rengappa Kalakka Thola Udayar) (3) and so far as our knowledge extends, is in accordance with the usage prevailing in Southern India."

In the present case both parties appealed to the Madras High Court, which varied the agent's decree to the extent of allowing plaintiff Rs. 5,000 for a house, but otherwise confirmed it.

Thereafter both parties appealed to the Privy Council. The plaintiff subsequently withdrew his appeal (which was on the question of amount only) on an undertaking to pay costs.

At the hearing of defendants' appeal

Messrs De Gruyther, K. C., and Kenworthy Brown, for the Appellants, submitted that the appeal was concluded by the recent decision of the Board in Gangadhara Rama Rao v. Rajah of Pittapur (4).

Plaintiff's claim was based on the general Hindu Law: in view of the recent decision it is no longer tenable. It was not based on custom or family usage, nor did plaintiff adduce any evidence to prove any such usage. The burden of proof was wrongly placed: it lay on plaintiff to allege and prove a custom under which he could claim maintenance. The lower Courts have proceeded on decisions which are now overruled.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C., and Dube, for the Respondent.—Plaintiff's claim was based on the custom of the family as well as on Hindu Law. Defendants have failed to prove the custom they set up in variation of that alleged by plaintiff. In any case we should have an opportunity of adducing evidence: the suit should be remitted for the trial of an issue on the footing of what is now settled to be the law.

[Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., submitted that if the case were remitted the question as to the amount of the maintenance allowance should be left open.]

Mr. Dunne, K. C.—Both Courts have concurred as to the amount of the allowance. We submit the Board will not interfere with their finding, the more so as the matter is largely one of discretion.

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT CAVE.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Madras, which affirmed, with a variation, the decree of the Agent to the Governor at Vizagapatam, dated the 22nd December 1909.

The suit was brought by the plaintiff, who is the cousin of the first defendant, the Maharajah of Jeypore, for maintenance out of the impartible estate held by the defendant. In consequence of previous decisions of the Courts, the case took a course which makes it impossible finally to determine the matter to day.

The plaintiff in the action rested his case upon the contention that, according to the general Hindu Law, he, as the son of a brother of the late Maharajah, was entitled to maintenance out of the estate. The defendants, in their statements, proceeded more or less upon the same basis, but alleged a special custom which deprived the plaintiff of that which was treated as being his prima facie right.

Upon that, issues were framed, the important issues being the third and fourth. The third issue was:—Whether, if the plaintiff reverted to his natural family, by reason of his adoption into another family being invalid, the first defendant is bound to maintain him according to Hindu Law out of the income of the Jeypore Zemindari. The fourth issue was:—"Whether according to the custom among Uriya Zemindars or the custom of the family, the first defendant is not liable to maintain the plaintiff out of the income of the Jeypore Zemindari.'

Both Courts acting, as they considered, upon the existing authorities, answered the first issue in the affirmative and, upon the evidence, answered the second issue in the negative and, accordingly, maintenance was decreed to the plaintiff.

Since those decisions were given this Board, in the case of Gangadhara Rama Rao v. Rajah of Fittapur (4), has decided that, apart from custom and from certain near relationships to the holder, the junior members of the family of a Zemindar entitled to an impartible Zemindari have no right to maintenance out of it, and that there is no invariable custom by which any member of the family beyond the first generation from the last holder can claim maintenance as of right.

In view of that decision, it is plain that the issue which should have been tried was not that which in fact was tried but "Whether according to the custom among Uriya Zemindars, or the custom of the family, the plaintiff is entitled to maintenance out of the income of the Zemindari"; in other words, the burden should have been put upon the plaintiff to prove the custom entitling him to maintenance, and not upon the defendants to prove a custom negativing the ordinary law.

That being so, it appears to their Lordships that, in order to do justice, the case must be sent back, in order that the issue which their Lordships have defined should be tried, and accordingly the case should be remitted to the High Court in order that they may direct that issue to be tried, and may dispose of the case in accordance with the finding.

Their Lordships have considered whether the question of amount should also be remitted; but, upon the whole, they have come to the conclusion that if as the result of the issue now directed, the plaintiff is found entitled to maintenance, the amount fixed by the High Court should not be disturbed.

Their Lordships will, accordingly, humbly advise His Majesty to remit the matter for the purpose mentioned.

The costs incurred in the Courts below will follow the ultimate event of the proceedings. There will be no costs of this appeal.

As regards the cross appeal which was withdrawn on an undertaking to pay the costs, that undertaking will, of course, remain unaffected by the present order as to costs.

Case remitted.

LAL NILMONI NATH SAHI DEO—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 16, 74—Undue influence, what is—Mortgage-bond—Interest, higher rate of, payable on default, whether penalty.

A mortgage-bond provided that interest should be paid at 3 per cent. per month, and that the mortgage-money should be repaid on a specified date, and that in case of default in such payment interest would run at the rate of 6 per cent. per month. The mortgagee sued to recover the money by sale of the mortgaged property. The trial Court held that the stipulations as to interest were in the nature of a penalty and decreed the suit, allowing interest at 12 per cent. per annum. On appeal the lower Appellate Court held that the stipulation to pay higher interest in default alone was in the nature of a penalty, but it found that there had been undue influence and, in consideration of this, dismissed the appeal. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court, contending that the decision as to undue influence was wrong as no issue was framed as to this, and maintaining that the stipulation to pay interest at 6 per cent. per month was not in the nature of a penalty:

Held, (1) that, in order to establish undue influence, it must appear that there was something unconscionable either in the original dealing or in the subsequent stages of the transaction, and as nothing unconscionable had been made to appear in this case and there was no plea as to undue influence, the stipulated rate of interest could not be disallowed on the ground of undue influence; [p. 386, cols. 1 & 2.]

(2) that the stipulation to pay interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per month on default was in the nature of a penalty. [p. 336, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decision of the Judicial Commissioner, Chota Nagpur.

Messrs. Shoroshi Charan Mitter and S. K. Mitter, for the Appellants.

Mr. Rai Gurusaran Prosad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This is an appeal against the decision of the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur in an appeal arising out of a suit on a registered mortgage bond. The bond, which is dated the 21st June 909, was for Rs. 300 and in the bond it was stipulated that interest should be paid at 3 per cent. per month and that the mortgage-money should be repaid in Sraban 1966 Sambat. In default of payment the interest was to run at the rate of 6 per cent. per month. The total amount claimed in the suit was Rs. 1,479, which the plaintiffs sought to recover by sale of the mortgaged property.

Two issues were raised in the Court of first instance:—

1. Did the defendant receive the entire consideration money mentioned in the bond?

2. Whether the rate of interest stipulated for in the mortgage-bond is in the nature of penalty? Can the plaintiffs recover the interest claimed in this suit?

On the first of these issues it was found in the Court of first instance that the whole amount of the consideration money mentioned in the bond had been received, but on the second issue it was held that both the interest at 3 per cent. per month and the interest at 6 per cent. per month on default were in the nature of penalties and the suit was decreed for interest at only Rs. 12 per cent. per annum. On appeal by the plaintiffs to the Judicial Commissioner it was held that interest at the rate of Rs. 3 per cent. per month was not in the nature of penalty but that the interest at Rs. 6 per cent. per month was in the nature of penalty. The learned Judicial Commissioner found, however, that there had been undue influence and in consideration of this he upheld the decision of the Munsif and dismissed the appeal with costs. The plaintiff has again appealed to this Court.

The first point urged before us is that the learned Judicial Commissioner's decision in the matter of undue influence is wrong. No issue was framed in regard to this and the only reference to it in the pleadings is in paragraphs 2 and 3 of the written statement. In paragraph 2 defendant states that in order to meet the expenses of a criminal case he was badly in need of money so he negotiated with the plaintiff's father for the loan, and in paragraph 3 he says that the plaintiff's father, seeing the necessitous condition of this defendant and putting undue pressure on him, gave him Rs. 240 only and got the bond executed for Rs. 300 i.e., with an increase of Rs. 25 per cent. and made him promise to pay a high rate of interest of Rs. 3 per cent. per month. This is the only reference to undue influence and it cannot be said that by this vague reference to undue influence was in fact pleaded by the defendant; that this was not pleaded is also clear from the fact that no issue was raised on the point. The learned Judicial Commissioner, therefore, should not have allowed the issue to be raised. In any case there is no ground for the finding that there was undue influence. The learned Judicial Commissioner has presumed that, because the security was good and that the interest was high, there was undue influence and he has relied on the case of Abdul Majid v. Ksherode Chandra Pal (1). The facts of that case, however, were entirely different from the facts of the present case and it was on these facts that that case was decided In Lala Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (2), their Lordships of the Privy Council quoted with approval the law as stated by the District Judge that in order to come to the conclusion that there has been undue influence it must appear that there was something unconscionable either in the original dealings or in the subsequent stages of the transaction. It does not appear that in this case there was anything unconscionable at either of these stages and the learned Judicial Commissioner has wrongly applied Abdul Majid v. Ksherode Chandra Pal (1) to this case. There is then no reason for supposing that undue influence has been exercised.

The only other point for consideration is whether interest at Rs. 6 per cent. per month is in the nature of penalty. On the face of it, it is in the nature of penalty and both the lower Courts have come to the conclusion that it is in fact in the nature of penalty. No reason has been shown to us why we should disagree with this view which has been adopted by both the lower Courts, and I am of opinion that their decision on this point is correct.

I would accordingly modify the decree of the learned Judicial Commissioner and would decree this suit with interest at Rs. 3 per cent. per month from the date of the bond until repayment with proportionate costs.

DAS, J.—I agree.

Decree modified.

A sale of property executed by the judgment-debtor in virtue of a certificate granted to him by the executing Court under Order XXI, rule 83 (2), Civil Procedure Code, is a private sale, and, even though it does not become absolute until confirmed by the Court, it cannot be said to be a sale by a Court in execution of the decree and thus not liable to pre-emption. Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 30th June 1917, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Ludhiana, dated the 11th March 1917, dismissing the claim.

FACTS.—One J. got a decree against T. on 3rd December 1914, in execution of which T.'s property, including six houses situated in the same compound, was attached on 9th November 1915. A sale warrant, dated 13th January 1916, was issued by the Court directing that the ihata consisting of the six houses should be sold on 22nd February, on which date the bailiff reported that the decree-holder was not willing to have the property put to public auction, that the ihata was divided into lots and each lot sold by auction privately through one Z, on 20th February. The Court granted a certificate to the judgment-debtor on 22nd February authorising him to raise the decretal amount by private alienation within a month and the sale money was deposited into Court on 23rd March and paid to the decree-holder on 7th April 1916. The plaintiffs, who were present at the auction sale and actually bid for the property but ceased to compete when the price began to go up higher, now brought this suit for possession by pre-emption.

Mr. Kanwar Narain for Mr. Shah Nawaz, for the Appellants.

Lala Hargopal for Lala Faqir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from the order of the District Judge of Ludhiana, upholding the order of the Court of first instance dismissing the suit of the plaintiffs for pre-emption, on the grounds (1) that the sale took place in execution of a decree, and that, therefore, there can be no pre emption having regard to section 3 (5) (a) of the Punjab Pre emption Act, I of 1913, and (2) that the plaintiffs waived their right to pre-empt because they were present at the time when the property was sold and failed to purchase it.

The property of which pre-emption is sought was privately sold by the judgment-debtors in virtue of a certificate granted to them by the executing Court under Order XXI, rule 83 (2), of the Civil Procedure Code. Counsel for the respondents supports the order of the lower Courts by reference to Piare Lal v. Ganeshi Lal (1) and Nawab v. Jawaya (2). In the first of these two cases the sale was by a Receiver under directions of the Court, and the case is obviously distinguishable from the present one. In the second case also it was held that the sale actually took place in execution of the decree. In Baroda Kanta Bose v. Chunder Kanta Ghose (3) it is said: "A sale in execution differs in many essential particulars, as need hardly be said, from a sale inter partes. It is not a sale by the owner of the property, but by a Court which has a statutory power conferred upon it of transferring the interest of the judgment debtor to the purchaser, and to that end a certain course of procedure is prescribed terminating with the sale certificate, which confers on the persons named therein his title." In the present case the Court stayed its hand and gave the judgment-debtors a certificate authorizing them to raise the amount due privately by mortgage, lease or sale. The sale which took place in consequence of this was a private one, and even though it did not become absolute until confirmed by the Court, it could not, in our opinion, be said to be a sale by the Court in execution of the decree. It has been argued that the sale was really by the Court, as it was by the judgment-debtors as agents of the Court. We are unable to accept this argument. In our opinion the Court gave opportunity to the judgment debtors to raise the money due from them in any way they could by transfer of their property.

(3) 29 C. 682 at p. 686; 6 C. W. N. 706.

We, therefore, hold that the suit for pre-emption is not barred by section 3 (5) of the Punjab Pre-emption Act.

The next question is that of waiver. The private sale was conducted by auction. The plaintiffs made a bid at that auction: but refrained from bidding up against the actual purchaser. The rulings are conflicting as to whether such conduct constitutes waiver. In Mula v. Nihal Chand (4) it was held that the failure of a person entitled to pre-empt to outbid the purchaser in a sale in execution of the decree did not amount to waiver, and in Shah Bodhraj v. Sundar Singh (5) the Judges doubted whether omission to bid at auction amounted to waiver. A similar view was expressed in Muhammad Bakhsh v. Sardar Rajindar Singh (6) but a contrary one was taken in Mahomed Baksh v. Hira (7), Rullia Mall v. Dulo Mal (8) and Chithru Singh v. Bhagwant Singh (9). In our opinion it cannot be said that the plaintiffs have waived their claim.

There is no reason why they should bid at the auction, and in this way enhance the price. We see no reason why they should not have stood by and waited to see what the actual price obtained was, and then have made their claim to pre-empt. As a matter of fact this is what they actually did, for a few days after the sale they sent a notice to the purchaser offering to pay him the actual price. We hold that there has been no waiver in the present case. The existence of the custom of pre-emption has not been admitted in this case, and there has been no decision on this point by either of the lower Courts. We, therefore, accept the appeal, and setting aside the orders of the lower Courts remand the case to the Court of first instance for re-decision on the merits. Stamp in this and the lower Appellate Court will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the cause.

Appeal accepted; Case remanded.

Mr. Abani Bhusan Mukharji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Surendra Mohan Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal under clause 10 of the Letters Patent from a decision of a single Judge of this Court, dated the 9th April 1918, affirming a decision of the Subordinate Judge.

On the 7th April 1908 the defendant executed a mortgage bond in favour of Baikuntha Karmaker and Ghasi Ram Karmaker, the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 3 who were minors, to secure payment of a loan of Rs. 200. The plaintiff No. 2, Bhuban Karmaker, is the father of the plaintiff No. 1 and claims that the latter was merely his Benamidar in the mortgage transaction. On the 28th July 1915 the plaintiffs instituted the present suit claiming a sum of Rs. 389 principal and interest due under the said bond. The defence to the suit was, first, that it was barred by res judicata, and secondly, that the mortgage being in favour of minors was void and could not be enforced.

The Munsif before whom the case originally came decided both points in favour of the defendant and dismissed the suit. He further found that the mortgaged property, being an ordinary raiyati holding situate within a district governed by the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, was not liable to sale under the provisions of that Act.

The Subordinate Judge overruled the Munsif on both points but having regard to the provisions of the Act referred to, considered that he could not pass a mortgage decree granting a sale of the property but decreed the suit as a money decree for the amount claimed. The claim of the plaintiff No. 2 was not established.

On appeal to this Court the learned Judge dismissed the appeal with costs. Hence the present appeal.

So far as the question of res judicata is concerned, the judgment relied upon in support of this plea has not been placed before us by the appellant but the material facts relating to it may be gathered from the judgment of the lower Courts. It appears that the mortgage bond in question was in the custody of one Dwarika Lohar, the plaintiffs' agent, who had received interest amounting to Rs. 63 from the defendant for the year 1911. He refused to deliver up the bond or to pay the interest received to the plaintiffs, who on the 28th February 1911 instituted a suit against Dwarika Lohar and the present defendant claiming the sum of Rs. 63 received as interest from Dwarika Lohar and delivery up of the mortgage bond by him to the plaintiffs, with an alternative prayer that if it should be found that Dwarika Lohar and the present defendant were in collusion, then the whole amount of the money covered by the mortgage should be adjudged to the plaintiffs. The Subordinate Judge passed a money decree against both the defendants. From this decision Dwarika appealed to the High Court in Calcutta. The High Court only dealt with the first part of the plaintiffs' claim and made a decree for the delivery up of the mortgage bond by Dwarika Lohar and payment by him of the interest received. With reference to the alternative part of the plaintiffs' claim, the Court observed that after obtaining possession of the bond it would be open to the plaintiffs to take proceedings against the present defendant for enforcing their security, but in the course of the judgment there is a dictum to the effect that as the plaintiffs were minors the mortgage would be void. The defendants now contend that this decision operates as res judicata and bars the plaintiffs' claim in the present suit. It will be observed that the present defendant was not actively a party to that appeal and was apparently content to rest satisfied with the decision of the Subordinate Judge, secondly, the liability of the present defendant under the bond was not a matter which was determined in that appeal but was expressly left undecided and any expression of opinion in that judgment as to the validity of the mortgage would not, in my opinion, be binding as between the present plaintiffs and defendant.

With regard to the second point the appellant relied upon the case of Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (1), where their Lordships of the Privy Council decided that a mortgage granted by an infant in favour of a money-lender to secure money advanced to the minor was void and that notwithstanding sections 64 and 65 of the Contract Act the mortgagee was not entitled to recover back from the minor any portion of the money advanced. The actual decision in that case was that an infant was not a person competent to bind himself by a contract of the description then under consideration. In dealing with the effect of sections 38 and 41 of the Specific Relief Act their Lordships held that those sections no doubt gave a discretion to the Court, but the Court of first instance and subsequently the Appellate Court in the exercise of such discretion came to the conclusion that under the circumstances of the case justice did not require them to order the return by the respondent of money advanced to him with full knowledge of his infancy and they saw no reason for interfering with the discretion so exercised. It appears from the report of that case that the mortgagee's attorney, whilst the negotiations for the mortgage by the minor were proceeding, received definite instructions from the minor's mother that he was an infant and that any one lending him money would do so at his own risk and peril. Nevertheless, the respondent proceeded with the transaction, obtained the mortgage and induced the infant to sign a declaration stating that he was then of age. It is obvious that, in such circumstances, the respondent, who entered into the transaction with full knowledge that he was dealing with a minor, was not entitled to any consideration at the hands of the Court in their discretion under the sections of the Specific Relief Act referred to.

This judgment was the subject of consideration by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Raghava Chariar v. Srinivasa Raghava Chariar (2), where the question for consideration was whether a mortgage executed in favour of a minor who had advanced the whole of the mortgage money was enforceable by him or by any other person on his behalf. The learned Judges of the Madras High Court came to the conclusion that the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council referred to did not affect the question, whether a transfer by way of mortgage in favour of the minor was enforceable. They pointed out that there was nothing to prevent a minor from acquiring full ownership of property or of a mortgage interest in immoveable property by way of gift or inheritance, and that although under their Lordships' decision a minor could not bind himself by contract to pay the price or advance the mortgage money, there was no reason why, when once the consideration for a sale had been paid by the minor or a loan advanced by him, a transfer or a mortgage executed in his favour in consideration of the price paid or the loan advanced should not take effect. They accordingly overruled the previous decision of the same Court in Navakoti Narayana Chetty v. Loyalinga Chetty (3), to the effect that a sale made in favour of a minor was void and not merely voidable at his option. It may be pointed out in passing that Benson, J., one of the Judges who decided Navakoti Narayana Chetty v Loyalinga Chetty (3), was also a member of the Bench which decided the later case of Rungarazu Sathrurazu v. Maddura Basappa (4), where it was held that a promissory note executed in favour of a minor who sued upon it was not void but only voidable, provided that the minor had not subjected himself to a detriment by accepting the note and so incurring liability upon it. In the course of his judgment in Raghava Chariar v. Srinivasa Reghava Chariar (2) the learned Chief Justice Sir John Wallis points out: "The provision of law which renders minors incompetent to bind themselves by contract was enacted in their favour and for their protection, and it would be a strange consequence of this legislation if they are to take nothing under transfers in consideration of which they have parted with their money. This precise question cannot arise in England where a purchase by a minor of immoveable property is voidable by him on attaining majority but not void ab initio, as it is only the contracts specified in the Infants Relief Act which are void. However even in the case of a contract which was void under the Infants Relief Act, Lord Coleridge, C. J., and Bowen, L. J., held that a reasonable construction must be put upon the Statute and that when an infant had paid for something under a void contract and had used or consumed it, it would be contrary to natural justice that he should recover back the money which he had paid on the ground that the contract was void, Valentini v. Canali (5). I do not think this decision is inconsistent with Nottingham Permanant Benefit Building Society v. Thurston (6), which decided, as I understand it, that the mortgage given by the minor as security for a void contract entered into by him was also void. Applying the same reasoning to the present case it would be even more opposed to natural justice to allow the transferor to a minor by way of sale or mortgage to question the transfer for which full consideration has been paid to him." The present case is not one of an executory contract where the minor has bound himself by any contractual obligation. He has advanced the whole of the mortgage money and in return, therefore, the mortgage has been executed in his favour. He is subject to no further obligation and merely claims to exercise the rights incidental to the transfer to him by that mortgage. There is no contract by the minor which still remains to be performed as in the case of Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (1) (ubi sup.), and the reasoning which is at the root of all the cases relating to the contractual obligations of minors appears to me to have no application to the present case.

It was held by the Allahabad High Court in the case of Munni Koer v. Madan Gopal (7) that there was nothing in law to prevent a minor from becoming a transferee of immoveable property and hence a minor in whose favour a valid deed of sale had been executed was competent to sue for possession of the property conveyed. It was contended on the authority of Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (1) that the contract for the sale of the house was absolutely null and void, but the Court found that where the purchase money had been paid and the conveyance executed, the minor became entitled to possession of the property and could successfully sue for possession. It was pointed out in that judgment that different considerations would arise if after having agreed to sell the property, the defendant before receiving the price had refused to execute a conveyance and the minor plaintiff had been driven to a suit for specific performance. The case of Narain Das v. Dhania (8), where a minor in whose favour a registered sale deed had been executed was permitted to sue to recover possession of the purchased property upon tender of the balance of the purchase money, is another instance where the Allahabad High Court held that a contract entered into in favour of a minor whereby he acquired an interest in immoveable property was not void. Again in Hari Mohan (Bhaggabhor) Mondal v. Mohini Mohan Banerjee (9) the High Court at Calcutta decided that where a mortgage had been executed in favour of minors who sued on the bond and themselves purchased the property in execution of the decree, the sale could not be set aside on the ground that the mortgage was void as being a contract with minors It was held that the case was not concluded by the decision of the Privy Council in Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (1), inasmuch as there was no covenant which it was for the minors to perform. The cases of Mir Sarwarjan v. Fakhruddin Mahomed (10) and Pramila Bali Dass v. Jogeswher Mandal (11) were also relied upon by the appellant. Those cases, however, are clearly distinguishable. The first was a suit for specific performance by a minor of a contract for the purchase and sale of immoveable property entered into by his guardian and the manager of his estate on his behalf as purchaser. Their Lordships held that it was not within the competence either of the manager of the minor's estate or of the guardian of the minor to bind him or his estate by an executory contract for the purchase of immoveable property, and as he was not bound there was no mutuality, and consequently the minor could not enforce specific performance after attaining his majority. That was clearly a case where the contract was one imposing obligations upon the minor which could not be enforced by the defendant, and consequently a lack of mutuality put it out of the minor's power to enforce the contract. In the case now under consideration no questions arise or can arise as to any obligation to be performed by the minor arising out of the contract. The second case was the case of a lease executed in favour of a minor imposing upon him a liability to pay rent and perform certain covenants. It was held that the lease was null and void and that a person who entered into possession of the land under a lease which was void was a mere trespasser and could not claim protection from ejectment under section 41 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908. Here, again, the lease in question imposed a continuing liability upon the lessee to pay the rent and perform the other covenants of the lease and on that account was not enforceable as against the minor. These cases do not apply to a completed contract where the minor's obligation has been wholly performed resulting in the transfer to him under the contract of an interest in property.

It is contended, however, that the principle laid down in Raghava Chariar v. Srinivasa Raghava Chariar (2) (ubi sup.) only applies to transfers of an interest in immoveable property and that as the decree in the present case is a money decree only imposing a personal obligation on the defendant and not a mortgage decree affecting the property hypothecated, the principle governing that case has no application. It appears, however, that the mortgage bond in the present case was executed on the 7th April 1908 and the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act which has no retrospective application was not passed until the 11th November 1908 and was not extended to Manbhum in which district the property in suit is situate until the following year, so that it would appear that the learned Munsif as well as the Subordinate Judge were wrong in holding that only a money decree and not a mortgage decree could be passed in the present suit. There was no appeal by the plaintiffs from this part of the Subordinate Judge's decision and so far as the relief claimed is concerned, they must be content to accept the lesser relief granted by the decree. This, however, does not prevent them from contending that as a matter of law they would have been entitled to a mortgage decree had they chosen to insist upon it in second appeal, and it seems difficult to see why their failure to insist upon a mortgage decree which would have directed the defendant to pay the decretal amount under penalty of the sale of the mortgaged property should deprive them of the right of insisting upon the lesser remedy only. Moreover the case of Rungirazu Sathrurazu v. Maddura Basappa (4), which decided that a promissory note executed in favour of a minor and not involving any promise on his part or any contractual obligation by him can be enforced, appears to me to be based on a principle which would govern the present case. Further, even if it should be held that the instrument in question in this suit ought to be cancelled on the ground that it is void, it must be remembered that the defendant has had the benefit of the sum advanced by the plaintiffs under it and in such circumstances it would be within the competence of the Court under section 41 of the Specific Relief Act in granting relief to the defendant to make him pay such compensation as justice may require. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee inthe case of Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (1) (ubi sup.) appear to have considered that the said section would have been applicable to the case then under consideration, had justice required that they should exercise their discretion in favour of the appellant. If the contention of the appellant in the present case should be upheld, it would follow that the law relating to the contracts of minors which is meant for their protection would in numerous cases have an exactly opposite effect and result in manifest injustice. To take a simple instance, if a minor agreed to sell a horse and in pursuance of the agreement delivered it to the purchaser before payment of the price, the purchaser would be entitled to keep the horse and refuse to pay the purchase money on the ground that the contract was void and unenforceable; or again if a minor sent a money order to a shopkeeper in payment of certain selected goods to be forwarded, the shopkeeper could keep the money and refuse to deliver the goods. In the cases supposed the purchaser and the shopkeeper might be within their rights in refusing to complete the contract entered into with a minor, but justice demands that they should at least restore the horse in the one case and the money in the other. Here the appellant has had the benefit of the loan and even if the contract should be declared void, justice demands that he should make compensation to the minor which would include the principal and interest claimed. In my opinion the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Execution of decree—Attachment set aside by mistake—Restoration of attachment, effect of—Sale during interval, validity of.

Where property is attached before judgment, and under a misunderstanding the order of attachment is set aside, but the attachment is subsequently restored, the restoration of the attachment has the effect of reverting the parties to the position they occupied when the property was originally attached, and a private sale of the property in the interim is void. [p. 343, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decision of the First Additional Subordinate Judge, Aligarh, dated the 23rd June 1916.

Messrs. M. Ishaq Khan, P. L. Banerji and Panna Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Kashi Nath brought a suit against Keshab Deo and others and attached before judgment two shops and other property belonging to the defendants on the 20th of August 1909 under the order of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh. On the 27th of August 1909 the Subordinate Judge set aside that order. It appears that he did so owing to his having misunderstood an order of the High Court. The High Court ordered the attachment to be restored on the 16th of March 1910. In the interval between the 27th of August 1909 and the 16th of March 1910 when as a matter of fact there was no order in existence attaching the property, Gopal Prasad, the plaintiff-appellant here, purchased the two shops in dispute. In execution of the decree against Keshab Deo and others it was sought to attach and bring these two shops to sale. Gopal Prasad objected that they were his property and on his objection being disallowed, brought this suit for a declaration that they were not liable to sale in execution of the decree. The lower Court has dismissed the suit on a single ground, namely, that it must be held in law that the shops were under attachment during the whole period from 20th of August 1909, because the order of the High Court of the 16th of March 1910 was to restore that attachment which had, as a matter of fact, been removed by a mistake and to put back the parties into the position which they had occupied on the 20th of August 1909. The lower Court has decided this case on the authority of two cases of this Court, namely, Ali Ahmad Khan v. Bansidhar (1) and Aziz Bux v. Kaniz Fatima Bibi (2).

On appeal before us it has been argued that those two decisions do not apply. And secondly it has been argued that in any case, as there is no provision in the Civil Procedure Code itself, no order even by the High Court could bind innocent third parties who were no parties to the suit. In this particular suit there is no finding of collusion or anything of that kind between Gopal Prasad and the defendants. It is argued that it is extremely hard that an outsider who had no connection with the judgment-debtor and who purchased bona fide a property which he knew was not then under attachment, should find the sale rendered void because subsequently a previous attachment which had been removed was restored. The appellant must obviously have one's sympathy, but the question remains whether in law he is not bound by the subsequent order restoring the attachment. The view in Calcutta seems to have been consistent since 1874. See Mahomed Warris v. Pitambur Sen (3), Bonomali Rai v. Prosunno Narain Chowdhry (4), Ram Chandra Marwari v. Mudeshwar Singh (5). The case in Bonomali Rai v. Prosunno Narain Chowdhry (4) was approved of by this Court in Ali Ahmad Khan v. Bansidhar (1). But we find apart from these cases in this Court relating to property belonging to Keshab Deo and others which was similarly affected by this attachment. In one of these cases there was also a finding by the Court below that the purchaser in that particular case had been colluding with the defendants. The decision, therefore, in that case is not quite

In both those cases the view of the lower Court was held to be correct. That being so, it seems to us that the appeal must fail. We dismiss it with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. The fact that a judgment-debtor has parted with his interest to a third party in property attached and sold in execution of a decree is no bar to his making an application under Order XXI, rule 89 of the Civil Procedure Code, to have the sale set aside. [p. 345, col. 1.]

A purchaser by means of a private deed of the property of a judgment-debtor attached and sold in execution of decree has no locus standi to make an application under Order XXI, rule 89 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 346, col. 1; p. 345, col. 1.]

When a deposit is made under rule 89 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, it is the duty of the Court to proceed to set aside the sale. [p. 345, col. 1.]

Where a Court declines to accept the deposit from the judgment-debtor, its action amounts to a refusal to exercise jurisdiction and the High Court can interfere under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 345, col 2]

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—This matter arises out of the sale of two plots of land in the town of Dhanbad in execution of a rent-decree. After the sale an application was made under Order XXI, rule 89 of the Civil Procedure Code, by the judgment-debtor to set aside the sale. The Subordinate Judge, without hearing the auction purchaser and the decree-holder, accepted the deposit and granted the prayer of the judgment debtor.

The auction-purchaser then took the matter up in appeal to the District Judge, and it being discovered that the judgment-debtor was dead, he brought the heirs of the judgment debtor upon the record of the appeal. The order passed by the District Judge after hearing the parties was that the application should be reheard by the Subordinate Judge in the presence of the decree-holder, the auction-purchaser and all parties affected.

The case went back to the Subordinate Judge. The judgment debtor's heirs were apparently unwilling to prosecute the matter, or at any rate they did not take any steps to adduce evidence: but a private purchaser, the petitioner before us, subsequent to the sale came forward and put in a petition before the Subordinate Judge asking that he should be allowed to prosecute the application on behalf of the judgment debtor. That petition was made on the 7th January 1919, and the order made by the Subordinate Judge thereupon was that the application would be taken into consideration at the time of the hearing of the case.

It appears that thereafter the petitioner was allowed to deposit the various process fees necessary for service of notice upon the parties to the case and also to get summonses issued upon the witnesses for this purpose. It also appears that at the hearing he was allowed to file a document in support of the judgment-debtor's prayer and that his Vakil or Pleader was heard when the case was finally argued.

The result was that the Munsif, the case having been in the meantime transferred to his Court by the Subordinate Judge, dismissed the application, holding that under Order XXI, rule 89, it was not competent to the judgment debtor to make a deposit after he had already parted with his interest in the property by sale to a third party.

The petitioner then took the matter up in appeal to the District Judge, who affirmed the finding of law of the Court below and added a further ground for dismissing the appeal, namely, that the petititioner was entitled neither to support the application of the judgment-debtor nor to prosecute the appeal, inasmuch as he was not the legal representative of the deceased.

The present application has been made to us under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code against the order of the District Judge.

Now upon the point of law as to whether Order XXI, rule 89, permits a judgment-debtor to make an application for the purpose of setting aside a sale, even though at the time of the application he has parted with his interest in the property, the decision of this Court in the case of Musammat Dhanwanti Kuer v. Sheo Shankar Lall (1) is conclusive. So far as this Court is concerned, it is settled for the present that the judgment-debtor in such a case is still competent to avail himself of the provisions enabling him to make a deposit.

It is contended, however, that as the petitioner had no locus standi in the Court of the Munsif, he ought not to have been allowed to appeal, and as the appeal was incompetent the order of the District Judge therein was a nullity, and, therefore, there is no order with which we can interfere in revision.

Now in my opinion the petitioner was not a person whom the Munsif should have heard. He, as the assignee after the sale, had no interest in the property: but that circumstance did not debar the Munsif from disposing of the application according to law. The Munsif had before him the judgment debtor's representatives who had been brought upon the record in the appeal; and indeed the law says that when a deposit is made, the Court shall proceed to set aside the sale.

In this case, therefore, the proper course was to refuse to hear the petitioner, but to set aside the sale.

(1) 51 Ind. Cas. 873; 4 P. L. J. 340.

As for the contention that the order of the Appellate Court was a nullity, I do not think there is any substance in it whatsoever.

The Munsif though wrongly did in fact accept the petitioner as a party; the mere omission to enter the petitioner in the heading of the judgment or in the record as a party does not make any difference. The petitioner was allowed to adduce evidence, to pay process fees, to address the Court, and to carry on the litigation on behalf of the judgment-debtor. He must, therefore, be held to have been in fact joined as a party in the proceedings before the Munsif. That being so, he had a right of appeal if he was affected by the order made by the Court. It was open, no doubt, to the District Judge to decide in the appeal that he ought not to have been allowed to appear before the Munsif, but it cannot be said that the appeal was incompetent by the petitioner because the petitioner was an entire stranger to the proceedings. It was open, no doubt, to the District Judge to hold as he has done that the petitioner was not a person entitled to relief, but it was incumbent upon him nevertheless to decide the other point in the case, namely, whether or not the deposit had been legally made by the judgment-debtor. His order, therefore, cannot be treated as a nullity and the petitioner is right in seeking to have it set aside. But even if it be held that the order is a nullity, the Munsif's order stands in the petitioner's way and is liable to revision by us.

Both Courts, in my opinion, refused to exercise jurisdiction in declining to accept the deposit from the judgment-debtor. The order of both will be set aside under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

It is said that the heirs of the judgment-debtor are no longer willing to have the sale set aside. There is no evidence of this. The mere omission on the part of the heirs to prosecute the application made by their predecessor before the Munsif is not conclusive upon the point. Even if the allegations were true and they had after the sale to the petitioner sought to defraud him by siding with the auction-purchaser and intimated their unwillingness to have the sale set aside the Court could not have given effect to that fraudulent act. We have, however, nothing to show that the heirs are in fact unwilling, and, therefore, the proper order that ought to be made is that the deposit, if it complies with the provisions of the law, be accepted and the sale set aside. The application will be allowed with costs. Hearing fee two gold mohurs.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—The deposit in this case was properly made by the judgment debtor under Order XXI, rule 89. The judgment-debtor expressly stated his intention to have the sale set aside. The sale was accordingly set aside on the 16th August 1918. The judgment debtor in the subsequent proceedings died. The legal representatives of the judgment debtor are on the record and they do not object to the application having been made by the judgment-debtor to have the sale set aside. The mere silence of the heirs of the judgment-debtor cannot be construed as a withdrawal of the application made on behalf of deceased judgment-debtor. There does not appear, therefore, to be any alternative but to set aside the sale under rule 92 of Order XXI. I agree, therefore, with the order made in the case by my learned brother and I also agree that the petitioner, the purchaser of the property by means of a private deed from the judgment-debtor, had no locus standi to make an application under rule 89 of Order XXI, but that does not affect the position in the case that the sale must be set aside under the said order.

Application allowed.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 1165 OF 1915.

July 5, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Shadi Lal and Mr. Justice Martineau.

BIHARI LAL AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

AMIN CHAND AND ANOTHER, MINORS, THROUGH TEJA—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Minor, suit against—Guardian ad litem, duty of—Minor, whether bound by decree passed against him—Gross negligence of guardian—Burden of proof.

If a minor is properly represented by a next friend or a guardian for the suit and there is no fraud or collusion on the part of the next friend or guardian or of the opposite party, and his next friend or guardian is not guilty of gross negligence, the minor is as much bound by a decree or order made in a suit or proceeding to which he is a party as if he were of full age, and it can be executed against him or his property, as the case may be, in accordance with law. [p. 347, col. 1.]

It is not the duty of a guardian ad litem to raise frivolous or untenable defences. The amount of care and attention which the guardian of a minor is expected to bestow upon the case of his ward is the same as a reasonable person would devote to his own case. [p. 347, col. 2.]

Plaintiff's father executed a mortgage-deed by way of conditional sale in favour of the defendant on the 14th December 1896. It was stipulated that the mortgage-money would be paid within 3 years and that, in the event of default, the foreclosure clause would come into operation. No payment having been made, the mortgagee, after making a demand and issuing a notice of foreclosure, brought the usual action for possession and obtained a decree against the minor sons of the mortgagor, who had died before the institution of the suit. The minors now brought the present suit to set aside the decree. It appeared that in the previous suit their mother acted as guardian ad litem and resisted it on various grounds:

Held, (1) that the onus lay upon the plaintiffs to establish gross negligence on the part of their guardian in defending the previous suit; [p. 348, cols. 1 & 2.]

(2) that having failed to do so, they could not impugn the decree passed against them. [p. 448, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 1st December 1913, decreeing the claim.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, for the Appellants.

Lala Kishen Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 14th December 1893 Balu, the father of the plaintiffs, executed a mortgage-deed by way of conditional sale in favour of the defendant Bihari Lal and his father Ram Dial. One of the stipulations in the deed was that the mortgagor had to pay the amount due from him within three years and that in the event of default the foreclosure clause would come into operation. No payment was made within the prescribed period, and the mortgagees, after making a demand and issuing a notice of foreclosure, brought, after the expiry of the year of grace, the usual action for possession of the land, alleging themselves to be the vendees of the property.

BIHARI LAL v. AMIN CHAND.

It appears that the mortgagor Balu had died before the institution of the above-mentioned suit; and that his sons, who were then minors, were impleaded as defendants with their mother as their guardian ad litem. The mother resisted the suit on various grounds, but the Court after enquiring into all the issues rejected the defence and passed a decree on the 28th March 1905 in favour of the quondam mortgagees.

The minors through one Teja as their next friend have brought the present action for setting aside the aforesaid decree, and their claim has been allowed by the District Judge, Sayad Wali Shah. The judgment of the District Judge is a very unsatisfactory document and betrays an utter ignorance of the law applicable to a case of this character. The Judge not only attempts to criticise the conclusions reached in the previous suit as if he were a Court of Appeal from the judgment in that case, but also misstates certain facts and even tries to find in favour of the plaintiffs on one or two matters which were rightly admitted on their behalf and did not consequently constitute the subject-matter of any issue between the parties.

The principle of law is beyond dispute that if a minor is properly represented by a next friend or a guardian for the suit, and there is no fraud or collusion on the part of the next friend or guardian or of the opposite party, and his next friend or guardian is not guilty of gross negligence, the minor is as much bound by a decree or order made in a suit or proceeding to which he is a party as if he were of full age; and it can be executed against him or his property, as the case may be, in accordance with law, vide Law relating to Minors by Trevelyan, 4th Edition, pages 284 85. Now, the plaintiffs do not allege any fraud or collusion on the part of their guardian, and they base their claim upon negligence pure and simple. The case as built up by the District Judge on their behalf is contained in the following extract from his judgment:—

"The jawab-i-dawa of the minor's mother, her statement and the issues show that she (guardian of the minors) omitted to raise many objections regarding the conditions of the mortgage deed, nor did she raise any objection respecting demand, nor yet did she raise any objection as to consideration or necessity, nor yet did she even raise any objection regarding the service of notice."

The fact that this sentence contains some misstatements is apparent from the perusal of the pleas and issues copied out in the judgment by the District Judge himself from the record of the previous case. We find that the guardian did raise the question of the failure of the mortgagees to make a demand before issuing the notice of foreclosure and that this led to the framing of issue No. 2. As to the service of notice there does not appear to be any distinct plea, but the matter was clearly embodied in issue No. 3. On both the questions evidence was led, and the Court found in favour of the plaintiffs. There can be no doubt that the District Judge has indulged in reckless statements, and Mr. Kishen Chand for the plaintiffs frankly admits that he is unable to support the decision in favour of his clients on the strength of these two points.

It is true that there was no plea challenging the consideration and necessity for the mortgage, but it must be remembered that it is not the duty of a guardian ad litem to raise frivolous or untenable defence. The amount of care and attention which a guardian of a minor is expected to bestow upon the case of his ward is the same as a reasonable person would devote to his own case. The litigants in a Court of law are not expected to put forward all sorts of absurd pleas which cannot be sustained, and it is only right that they should confine their attention to matters upon which there is a real and genuine controversy and upon which there is something to be said on their behalf.

Applying this principle to the case before us, we find that the entire consideration for the transaction was paid before the Sub-Registrar, and the guardian was accordingly well advised not to put forward a plea which she would have found exceedingly difficult to establish. As regards necessity, it must be borne in mind that in December 1896 there was a severe famine in the Hissar District, and that many a proprietor owning barani land (and the land in dispute is barani and of a poor quality) stood in need of borrowing money in order to maintain himself and his family. Indeed the mortgage-deed executed by Balu distinctly recites this necessity, and there can be no reasonable doubt as to the correctness of the recital. The clause as to conditional sale was a common feature of the mortgages executed in this district and other neighbouring districts: and the rate of interest, though high, cannot be regarded as unconscionable in view of the nature of the security offered by the debtor, the security referred to above and the stringency of the money market prevailing at that time. As to the rate of interest, reference should be made to the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council contained in Lala Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (1).

The facts set out in the preceding paragraph do not admit of any reasonable doubt, and the mortgagor's widow, who was assisted by her son-in-law, was apparently fully cognizant of them. In these circumstances her omission to plead the want of necessity and the alleged onerous nature of the terms of the transaction cannot be regarded as gross negligence, such as would justify a Court of law in holding that the previous decree should be inoperative against the minors. We consider that the alienation was for necessity, and it is very doubtful whether Balu, circumstanced as he was, would have got better terms from any other mortgagee.

It is unnecessary to refer to the gratuitous remarks made by the District Judge as to the execution of the mortgage by Balu. It is to be observed that even the next friend of the minors admitted the execution of the deed in the plaint filed by him, and the attempt of the District Judge to impeach the genuineness of the instrument is utterly futile and shows a lack of judicial spirit. The learned Vakil for the plaintiffs has not referred to this matter in his arguments, and we do not think that we should waste any more words over it.

For the aforesaid reasons we hold that the plaintiffs, on whom the onus lay, have failed to establish gross negligence on the part of their guardian in defending the previous suit; and they cannot impugn the decree passed against them. We accordingly accept the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

SECOND CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 1192 OF 1917 AND 1405 OF 1918.

IN S. A. NO. 1192 OF 1917

SHEODHARY SINGH AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

RAMAUTAR SINGH AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 89—Malicious prosecution, cause of action for, survival of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 23—Admission before arbitrator, admissibility of.

Section 89 of the Probate and Administration Act expressly excludes from its operation all causes of action in respect of personal injuries not causing the death of the party. [p. 351, col. 1.]

Therefore, a cause of action for malicious prosecution does not survive to the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff. [p. 351, col. 1.]

A. was prosecuted by B. and was acquitted, whereupon he brought a suit to recover damages for malicious prosecution which was dismissed by the trial Court. Shortly after this he died and his legal representatives appealed and obtained a decree. On second appeal to the High Court:

Held, that the Appellate Court was wrong in entertaining the appeal, as the cause of action did not survive to the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff and they could not continue the action after his death [p. 351, cols. 1 & 2.]

B brought a suit against A to recover specific articles alleged to have been taken by A. or for their value. Prior to the institution of the suit, the matter in dispute was referred to a panchayat before which A. admitted B.'s claim and undertook to return the articles B. produced one of the members of the panchayat to prove A's admission, but the lower Appellate Court excluded from its consideration the evidence of this witness and dismissed the suit:

Held, that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in excluding the evidence from its consideration. [p. 352, col. 1.]

PUNJAB SINGH v. RAMAUTAR SINGH.

An admission before an arbitrator is admissible in evidence, although it is for the Court dealing with the facts to attach whatever weight it thinks proper to such an admission. The rule enunciated in section 23 of the Evidence Act does not apply to such admissions. [p. 352, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Muzaffarpur, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Muzaffarpur.

FACTS.—Punjab Singh instituted a case of loot against Khublal Singh, alleging that he had committed theft of articles and ornaments worth Rs. 200. Khublal Singh was tried and acquitted. Then Khublal brought a suit for recovery of Rs. 2,521-2-3 as damages for malicious prosecution, which amount was made up of expenses of the criminal case, loss of business and damages for bodily and mental injuries. Punjab Singh (along with his father Sheodhari Singh) also brought a suit against Khublal for the recovery of Rs. 200, the value of articles and ornaments. The suits were tried together and Khublal's suit was dismissed and Punjab Singh's suit decreed by the first Court. Khublal preferred separate appeals to the District Judge and died pending the hearing of the appeals. In Punjab Singh's suit, Khublal's son was substituted for his father, but in the other suit he was ordered by the District Judge [following Krishna Behari Sen v. Corporation of Calcutta (1)] to take out Letters of Administration before he could be allowed to prosecute the appeal. This he did. Both the appeals were heard and decreed by the District Judge. Punjab Singh preferred the second appeals.

Mr. Manuk (with him Mr. Panchanan Banerji), for the Appellants, contended that the suit abated with the death of Khublal as the cause of action did not survive. Act XII of 1855 has no application; nor does section 89 of the Probate and Administration Act cover the case. The words 'personal injuries' in the section should be taken ejusdem generis with the words 'defamation,' 'assault', which precede them. Krishna Behari Sen v. Corporation of Calcutta (1), even if correctly decided, does not give any reasons. That case has not been followed by other High Courts: Haridas Ramdas v. Ramdas Mathuradas (2), Ranchode Doss v. Rukmany Bhoy (3), Tummala Nagabhushnam v. Sri Raja Venkatdari Appa Row (4), Subramania Iyer v. Venkataramier (5), Gadigi Mareppa v. Firm of Marwadi Vannajee Vajanjee (6).

Secondly, the District Judge has wrongly held that the evidence of Harnandan is inadmissible. The entire examination-in-chief of the witness is as follows:

"There was a compromise in the loot case at village Mahesoul where the Sub-Divisional Officer of Sitamarhi was holding Court in camp. Myself, Jugal Singh, Ramphal Singh and Rudal Singh were the Punches. The Punchayet was held at the request of Khublal. The Punches decided that Khublal should return the ornaments, cash and other articles taken by him from Punjab Singh's house and by way of security for due fulfilment would deposit Rs. 200 with me and the criminal case would be compromised and not proceeded with. Khublal actually deposited Rs. 200 with me, but in the end he wanted that Punjab Singh should exchange his parti plot with some land of Khublal and as Punjab Singh refused to do this, the compromise fell through and I returned Rs. 200 to Khublal. I have no connection with Punjab Singh."

This evidence is not inadmissible under section 23 of the Evidence Act. Meajan Matbor v. Alimmuddin Mea (7), which the District Judge relies on, is in my favour. Besides it is not evidence of compromise but of arbitration, which is not at all touched by section 23: Woodroffe's Law of Evidence, 6th Edition, page 249; Taylor's Evidence, 10th Edition, section 795. Moreover, this evidence was not objected to at the trial Court, and it is not per se inadmissible: Ambar Ali v. Lutfe Ali (8).

Mr. C. C. Das (with Mr. Baikuntha Nath Mitter), for the Respondents, contended that the word "personal" in section 89 was equivalent to "physical."

Krishna Behari Sen v. Corporation of Calcutta (1) has been correctly decided. Can any one imagine any injury not physical, which causes death? The Patna High Court has always preferred the decisions of the Calcutta High Court. Pollock's Torts, 10th Edition, pages 64, 66, etc.

With regard to the second point, the test laid down in Meajan Matbor v. Alim-uddin Mea (7) is satisfied in this case. That the circumstances bring it within section 23 of the Evidence Act will appear from paragraph 6 of Punjab Singh's own plaint, which runs thus:—

"In connection with the loot and assault a criminal case was brought by plaintiff No. 2 against defendants 1st party and 2nd party, in which only defendant No. 1 1st party was summoned. During the pendency of the criminal case an arbitration award was made by the Punches of Mouza Murserh, etc."

Mr. Manuk, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—These two analogous appeals come before us from the judgment of the District Judge of Muzaffarpur and arise out of two suits, one instituted by Khub Lal, who is now dead and who is now represented in this appeal by the respondents, against the appellants for recovery of Rs. 2,521 2 3 as damages for malicious prosecution and the other instituted by the appellants for recovery of specific articles of goods belonging to the appellants and alleged to have been carried away by the respondents or for the value thereof.

The appellants' case is that on the 27th of October 1913, the respondents or some of them rushed into the house of the plaintiffs, broke open a chest and took away from it a box containing ornaments of gold and silver, a sum of Rs. 35 kept in a lota, as well as clothes, shawls, utensils, etc., to the value of Rs. 200 and in respect of this occurrence, the appellants instituted a criminal case against Khub Lal Singh, which ultimately ended in the acquittal of Khub Lal. The appellants thereafter instituted a suit, being Suit No. 775 of 1915, for recovery of specific articles alleged to have been taken away by the respondents or for recovery of Rs. 200 as the value of these articles: and it is out of this suit that Second Appeal No. 1192 of 1917 comes before us.

After his acquittal in the criminal case, Khub Lal brought a suit, being Suit No. 461 of 1914, against the appellants, for recovery of Rs. 2,521·2·3 as damages for malicious prosecution; and it is out of this suit that Second Appeal No. 1405 of 1918 comes before us.

The Court of first instance disposed of both the suits by one judgment, and it dismissed Suit No. 461 of 1914, but granted a decree for Rs. 200 in Suit No. 775 of 1915. On appeal the lower Appellate Court has set aside the judgment and decree passed by the Court of first instance and has dismissed appellants' suit No. 775 of 1915 and has decreed the respondents' suit No. 461 of 1914 for Rs. 1,000.

I will, first of all; deal with second appeal No. 1405 of 1918. It appears that Khub Lal died after the dismissal of the suit by the Court of first instance, and the point that has been urged before us, and on which, in my opinion, the appellants are entitled to succeed, is that the cause of action died with Khub Lal and did not survive to his legal representatives. The learned District Judge, relying on the case of Krishna Behari Sen v. Corporation of Calcutta (1), held that the cause of action in this case did survive to the legal representatives, and he followed the procedure laid down in that case. In my experience, that case has never been followed subsequently in the Calcutta High Court and was expressly dissented from in the Madras High Court in the case of Gadigi Mareppa v. Firm of Marwadi Vannajee Vajanjee (6).

It seems to me that on a plain reading of section 89 of the Probate and Administration Act, the appellants' contention must succeed. Now section 89 of the Probate and Administration Act runs as follows:—

"All demands whatsoever, and all rights to prosecute or defend any suit or other proceeding, existing in favour of or against a person at the time of his decease, survive to and against his executors or administrators, except causes of action for defamation, assault as defined in the Indian Penal Code, or other personal injuries not causing the death of the party, and except also cases where, after the death of the party, the relief sought could not be enjoyed, or granting it would be nugatory." The question for our determination is what effect must be given to the words "or other personal injuries not causing the death of the party."

"As a matter of ordinary construction", said Lord Bramwell in Great Western Railway Co. v. Swindon and Cheltenham Ry. Co. (9), "where several words are followed by a general expression as here, which is as much applicable to the first and other words as to the last, that expression is not limited to the last, but applies to all." It is argued on behalf of the respondents that the general words, viz, "other personal injuries not causing the death of the party," do not apply to defamation at all but only apply to assault, and, therefore, those general words can be read as ejusdem generis only with assault and not with defamation. With this contention I am wholly unable to agree. It seems to me that defamation is a personal injury not causing the death of the party, and in the same way it may be said in this case that malicious prosecution is a personal injury not causing the death of the party. It will be noticed that the words deliberately chosen by the Legislature are "personal injury" and not "physical injury." The words "personal injury" have a wider significance than the words "physical injury" and, in my view, they apply to all kinds of injury whether physical or otherwise. In my view, the general words in section 89 of the Probate and Administration Act must be read ejusdem generis with the word "defamation" and when so read, it is clear to my mind that section 89 of the Probate and Administration Act expressly excludes from its operation all causes of action in respect of personal injuries not causing the death of the party. It seems to me, therefore, that the cause of action for malicious prosecution did not survive to the legal representatives of Khub Lal. This view is supported by a long series of decisions of the Bombay High Court and the Madras High Court.

I hold, therefore, that the lower Appellate Court clearly erred in allowing the legal representatives of Khub Lal to continue the action after his death.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the judgment and decree of the Court of first instance. The appellants are entitled to their costs throughout.

I now come to Second Appeal No. 1192 of 1917.

The lower Appellate Court excluded from its consideration the evidence of Hur Nandan and having excluded that evidence from its consideration, it came to the conclusion that it had not sufficient evidence before it to enable it to grant a decree in favour of the plaintiffs.

The sole question that we have to determine is, was the lower Appellate Court right in excluding from its consideration the evidence of Hur Nandan?

It appears that Hur Nandan was a member of a Panchayet before which Khub Lal undertook to return the articles looted. We are not concerned in this appeal with the weight to be attached to that evidence, but we are clearly of opinion that the lower Appellate Court erred in excluding from its consideration the evidence of Hur Nandan.

The lower Appellate Court relied upon section 23 of the Evidence Act. Section 23 provides that "in civil cases no admission is relevant, if it is made either upon an express condition that evidence of it is not to be given, or under circumstances from which the Court can infer that the parties agreed together that evidence of it should not be given." It is conceded that there was no express condition that evidence of it was not to be given, but it is strongly urged that there are circumstances from which the Court can infer that the parties agreed together that evidence of it should not be given. The learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the respondents relies strongly upon paragraph 6 of the plaint. His argument is, that the parties definitely agreed to settle their disputes and his contention before us is that if they agreed to settle their disputes once for all, they must impliedly have agreed among themselves that evidence of it shall not be given in any Court of law if, unfortunately, the settlement fell through. I cannot agree with this contention. The learned commentators of Woodroffe and Amir Ali's well known work on the Evidence Act say: "The rule" (that is to say the rule enunciated in section 23 of the Evidence Act) "does not apply to admissions made before an arbitrator" and they cite English cases in support of their opinion. In the case before us the admission was made before an arbitrator, and if the learned commentators are right in the view which they have expressed in their well known work on the Evidence Act, it is clear that the lower Appellate Court erred in excluding this evidence from its consideration. The lower Appellate Court relied upon the case of Meajan Matbor v. Alimuddin Mea (7). It seems to us that that case is an authority in favour of the appellants. That was a suit for rent where there was a talk of settlement between the plaintiff's Pleader and one of the defendants, and it was held that the mere fact of a conversation taking place when the parties were contemplating that a suit might be instituted is not in itself sufficient to prevent the conversation from being put in evidence. In the course of his judgment Mr. Justice Mookerji had to discuss a decision of Mr. Justice Phear in Mohabeer Singh v. Dhujjoo Singh (10). That learned Judge in the course of his judgment had said as follows:—"An offer of compromise, the essence of which is that the party making it is willing to submit to a sacrifice, or to make a concession, is rejected, though nothing at the time was expressly said respecting its confidential character, only if it clearly appears to have been made on the faith of a pending treaty into which the party was led by the confidence of an arrangement being effected." Mr. Das on behalf of respondents argues very forcibly that there was a pending treaty between the parties and one of the parties was led into making an admission by the confidence of an arrangement being effected, and, therefore, that admission cannot be admitted in any proceeding between the parties. But Mr. Justice Mookerji, commenting on the passage cited, said as follows:—"In the absence, however, of any express or strongly implied restriction as to confidence, an offer of compromise is clearly admissible and may be material as some evidence of liability, although, as has been said, it may not be proper to inquire into the exact terms offered, as such an offer might have been made for the sake of purchasing peace and without any intention to admit liability to the extent of the claim." In my view, the passage, which I have just cited, very completely establishes that an admission made before an arbitrator is admissible in evidence, although it is for the Court dealing with facts to attach whatever weight it thinks proper to such an admission.

I think, therefore, that the lower Appellate Court was clearly in error in excluding the evidence of Hur Nandan from its consideration.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and remit the case to the lower Appellate Court for its decision according to law. The appellant is entitled to the costs of this appeal. The costs incurred in the Court below will abide the result and will be disposed of by the lower Appellate Court.

COUTTS, J.—I agree.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 153 OF 1918.

June 26, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Scott-Smith.

KISHEN LAL AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—PETITIONERS

JAI LAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 24, Sch. II, para. 8—Transfer of cases—Power, whether can be delegated—Senior Subordinate Judge, whether can transfer case to junior Subordinate Judge—Court becoming seised of case in irregular manner—Failure to object—Waiver—Acquiescence—Arbitration—Award not filed within time, effect of—Extension of time, power of.

The power to transfer cases under section 24, Civil Procedure Code can be delegated by the District Judge to a Subordinate Judge, but when so delegated it must be exercised in accordance with law. It can only be exercised in regard to cases pending in a Court subordinate to the Court exercising the power. [p. 353, col. 2; p. 354, col. 1.]

A Senior Subordinate Judge cannot transfer a case from his own Court to that of the Junior Subordinate Judge as the Court of the latter is not subordinate to him. [p. 354, col. 1.]

Where there is jurisdiction over the subject-matter, but non-compliance with the procedure prescribed as essential for the exercise of jurisdiction, the defect might be waived. [p. 354, col. 2.]

The parties to a suit agreed to refer the dispute to arbitration. After the arbitration, but before the award, the Junior Subordinate Judge, in whose Court the case was pending, took leave for 2 months on the 25th April 1916. No one was appointed in his place and on the 2nd May 1916, the Senior Subordinate Judge ordered that the case should be kept in his Court The award not having been filed within the time originally fixed, several extensions were granted. On the 10th October the case was re-transferred by the Senior Subordinate Judge to the Junior Subordinate Judge on his return from leave, and on the same date at the request of the parties further time was allowed. Time was again extended several times and eventually the award was filed on 9th January 1917, and a decree was passed in accordance with the award. The defendants applied for revision:

Held, (1) that the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge re-transferring the case to the Junior Subordinate Judge was ultra vires; [p. 354, col. 1.]

(2) but that the parties, having acquiesced in the jurisdiction of the Junior Subordinate Judge, after the case was re-transferred to him, could not subsequently object to it; [p 354, col. 2; p. 355, col. 1.]

(3) that when once the Court became seised of the case, it had full power to extend the time for filing the award, even though the time originally fixed had previously expired; [p. 355, col. 1.]

(4) that, consequently, the award was a valid one and the Court was right in passing a decree in accordance therewith. [p. 355, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 44 of Act III of 1914, for revision of the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Hissar, dated the 29th October 1917.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain and Lala Shamair Chand for Lala Ram Chand Manchanda, for the Petitioners.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, Pandit Nanak Chand and Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan for Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of the order of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Hissar, passing a decree in plaintiffs' favour in accordance with an award after rejecting defendants' objections. Notice issued on the second ground only in which it is contended that the award, not having been made within the time allowed by the Court referring the matter to the arbitrators, was a nullity in law. The case was pending in the Court of Pandit Gulal Chand, Junior Subordinate Judge of Hissar, who on the 25th April 1916, after the matter had been referred to arbitration and before the award was filed, took two months' privilege leave. No successor was appointed in his place, and on the 2nd May 1916 the Senior Subordinate Judge recorded an order that the case should be kept in his Court. The award not being filed within the time originally fixed an extension of time was granted on the following dates:—8th and 31st May, 30th June and 27th July. On the 10th of October the case was re-transferred by the Senior Subordinate Judge to Pandit Gulal Chand who had previously returned from leave, and on the same date in the presence and at the request of the parties time for filing the award was extended by that officer up to 15th of November. Time was again extended to the 18th of December, to the 8th January 1917 and to the 9th January 1917, on which latter date the award was filed. Objections to the award were subsequently put in and having been disposed of, the Senior Subordinate Judge passed the order of which revision is now sought.

There is nothing to show that the Senior Subordinate Judge had the power to transfer the case to his own Court after the departure of Pandit Gulal Chand on leave. The distribution of civil work amongst Subordinate Courts is frequently in this Province delegated by the District Judge to the Senior Subordinate Judge, and it is probable that this delegation was made in Hissar for we find that when this suit was originally instituted, it was made over by the Senior Subordinate Judge to the Junior Subordinate Judge. The power to transfer cases under section 24, Civil Procedure Code, can also be delegated by the District Judge to a Subordinate Judge, but there is no evidence before me, and I have been unable to ascertain, that the Senior Subordinate Judge of Hissar was invested with the powers under section 24, Civil Procedure Code. Even if he was those powers must be exercised in accordance with law. Section 24 (1) (a) enables a Court to exercise such powers to transfer any suit pending before it for trial or disposal to any Court subordinate to it. Similarly section 24 (1) (b) enables a Court to withdraw any suit pending in any Court subordinate to it and to transfer the same for trial or disposal to the Court from which it was withdrawn. The power can only be exercised in regard to cases pending in a Court subordinate to the Court exercising the power, and I do not think that the Senior Subordinate Judge could in any event have transferred a case of his own Court to that of the Junior Subordinate Judge, which is not subordinate to him within the meaning of the section. It seems, therefore, that the order of the 10th August re-transferring the case to the Court of the Junior Subordinate Judge was ultra vires.

Mr. Muhammad Shafi on behalf of the respondents urges that if we are to consider that one of the orders of transfer was wrong, we are to consider that they both were wrong. If they were both wrong, then the orders passed between the time when Pandit Gulal Chand went on leave and the time when he again became seized of the case are all ultra vires, and when he again became seized of the case he had full power to extend the time for filing the award, even though the time for filing it originally fixed had previously expired, see Second Schedule, paragraph 8, Civil Procedure Code.

He also points out that this very objection as to jurisdiction was raised before the lower Court and was decided by it against the present petitioner and that whether it decided it rightly or wrongly it had jurisdiction to decide it, and the mere fact that it decided it wrongly is no ground for revision by this Court. There appears to be considerable force in this argument; but, in my opinion, his strongest argument is that the parties, having acquiesced in the jurisdiction both of the Senior Subordinate Judge during Pandit Gulal Chand's absence and of Pandit Gulal Chand after the case was re-transferred to that officer, cannot now object thereto. In this connection he has referred inter alia to Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrikah Singh (1). It is pointed out there that distinction has often been drawn between elements which are essential for the foundation of jurisdiction and the mode in which such jurisdiction has to be assumed and exercised. It is said that the distinction is well founded and the case of Pisani v. Attorney General of Gibraltar (2) is referred to wherein their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held "that, where there is jurisdiction over the subject-matter, but non-compliance with the procedure prescribed as essential for the exercise of jurisdiction, the defect might be waived." It is said "the same principle was adopted in Pratt, Ex parte (3) and May, Ex parte (4), which are authorities for the proposition that where jurisdiction over the subject-matter exists requiring only to be invoked in the right way, the party who has invited or allowed the Court to exercise it in a wrong way cannot afterwards turn round and challenge the legality of the proceedings due to his own invitation and negligence." It is further stated "that defects of jurisdiction arising from irregularities in the commencement of the proceedings may be waived by the failure to take objection at the proper stage of the proceedings," see the rulings quoted at the top of the page 208* of the same volume. Now, in the present case there can be no doubt that the lower Court had jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the present case, and the only objection urged is that there was non-compliance with the procedure prescribed as essential for the exercise of the jurisdiction, viz., that the case had not been transferred to that Court by the District Judge who was the only officer authorised to make such transfers. There is, however, the authority referred to above in support of the proposition that any defect of jurisdiction arising from such an irregularity may be waived. Now, in the present case we find that on each date on which time was extended the parties were present either in person or by Pleader or by agent, and they not only never objected to the jurisdiction of the Court but joined in requesting that time should be extended. In these circumstances it is quite clear that the plaintiffs submitted to the jurisdiction of the lower Court and raised no objection to the irregular way in which the Court had become seized of the case. I, therefore, hold that this objection to jurisdiction cannot be listened to now. The time for making the award had been duly extended from time to time in accordance with the provisions of rule 8 of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code. The award, therefore, was a valid award and the lower Court was right in passing a decree in accordance therewith.

The application for revision accordingly fails and is rejected with costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 2550 OF 1917.

May 20, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Newbould.

BISWAMBHAR MANDAL—

DEFENDANT NO. 1—APPELLANT

NASARAT ALI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Landlord and tenant—Under-raiyati interest, transferee of, position of—Purchaser of holding at collusive sale, whether can eject transferee of under-raiyati interest.

Apart from custom, a transferee of an under-raiyati interest has no interest in the land, and is liable to be ejected at the instance of a purchaser of the holding, even though the purchase is collusive. [p. 356, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Chittagong, dated the 5th September 1917, modifying that of the Munsif, 2nd Court, Patiya, dated the 3rd August 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Ramdayal De, for the Appellant.—The defendant is the appellant. Plaintiff, who is the landlord of a raiyati holding, purchased in execution of a decree against the tenant. The plaintiff brought this suit for ejectment. Defendant is the transferee of an under-raiyat. The decree has been found to be collusive. The defence inter alia was that notice under section 49 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was necessary and that the transfer of the holding was not an encumbrance. The first Court dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court decreed it. My submission is that notice under section 49 ought to have been given to me. The sale in which plaintiff purchased has the effect of a private sale. If the holding were non-transferable then I would become a trespasser and even then I would be entitled to a notice. My transfer has not been challenged. There was no annulment and no notice. The interest of a trespasser is to be taken as an encumbrance. See Bhusan Chandra Ghosh v. Srakanta Banerjee (1). The decree being collusive, the sale is private which entitles me to a notice. See Amirullah Mahomed v. Nazir Mahomed (2), Amirullah Mahomed v. Nazir Mahomed (3) and Lal Mahomed Sarkar v. Jagir Sheikh (4). An under-raiyat's interest is protected under section 22 (1), Bengal Tenancy Act. Plaintiff is a lessee of the co-sharer landlord. The decree obtained by a co-sharer landlord cannot have the effect of sale under the Bengal Tenancy Act. There has been a merger as the holding has been purchased by the landlord. The under-raiyat has, therefore, acquired the status of a raiyat.

Babu Dhirendra Lal Kastigir (with him Babu Tarkeswar Nath Mitra), for the Respondent.—The plaint clearly states that the defendant is a trespasser. No tenancy could be made transferable except under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. See Aminunnisa v. Jinnat Ali (5). So the defendant being the transferor of a non-transferable holding has acquired the interest of a trespasser. He is not entitled to notice. See Gangadhar Mandal v. Rajendra Nath Ghosh (6). A collusive decree means nothing but a decree by consent. The question of merger does not arise as the defendant was never accepted as a tenant.

Babu Ramdoyal De replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in ejectment. It was contested on several grounds before the lower Appellate Court, but now the only contention is that the defendant-appellant is an under-raiyat and as such cannot be ejected without notice. It is stated in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that the contesting defendants are the transferees of one Sarafat Ali who was an under-tenant of Judhistir and Ramratan. The plaintiff has been found to be a holder of a Putni tenure. He brought a rent suit against his occupancy raiyats, Judhistir and Ramratan, and in execution of the decree he purchased the holding. Both the Courts below have found that the purchase of the plaintiff in this rent suit was collusive. It is contended that the plaintiff by his purchase obtained no higher rights than he would have got in a private sale. It appears to me that the appeal must fail on the ground that the appellant as a transferee of an under-raiyati interest had no interest in the land. See the case of Aminunnisa v. Jinnat Ali (5). No attempt was made to prove that there was any custom by which under-raiyati holdings were transferable. But apart from this, it has not been shown that the result of the finding that the sale in execution of the decree was collusive, diminished the plaintiff's rights. There is no finding that there was any fraud and consequently the decree must be held to be a valid decree obtained by the consent of the defendants. The consent decree and the sale thereunder gave the purchaser as good a title as he would have had at a sale held in execution of the decree under contest.

The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

MISCELLANEOUS SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 3169 OF 1918.

June 12, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Bevan-Petman.

RAM RATTAN AND OTHERS—DECREE-HOLDERS—APPELLANTS

Sardarni DATAR KAUR—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 2, 47, 51, 72, O. XXI, r. 11—Execution of decree—Order refusing to execute decree, whether decree—Court, whether can act suo motu under s. 51—Attachment of land—Refusal of Collector to intervene, effect of—Court, whether can make temporary alienation—Punjab Alienation of Land Act (XIII of 1900), s. 16.

Any and every order passed in execution proceedings is not a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code; the decision whether an order is such a decree depends on its nature and contents. [p. 357, col. 2.]

A. applied for execution of his money decree by attachment and sale of certain land belonging to the judgment-debtor. Notice was issued to the Collector asking whether he desired to intervene under section 72 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Collector refused to intervene and the Court held that, under the circumstances, it was useless to send the record to the Collector and that the decree-holder should seek some other remedy for the realization of the decretal money. The District Judge dismissed an appeal from this order holding that it was not open to a Civil Court to take any further action. The decree-holder appealed to the High Court:

Held, (1) that the question whether the appellant was entitled to have the provisions of section 72 of the Civil Procedure Code carried out for his benefit was one relating to the execution of the decree and within section 47 of the Code, and the order was a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Code: [p. 357, col. 2.]

(2) that the refusal of the Collector to take action was wrong and the executing Court erred in accepting the position taken up by the Collector; [p. 360, col. 2.]

(3) that as the land could not be sold in execution, it was open to the Court to grant something less than a sale and to act under section 72, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 360, col. 2.]

Although section 51, Civil Procedure Code, provides that the Court shall act on the application of the decree-holder, yet an application may be inferred from an action of the Court. [p. 359, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 12th August 1918, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Amritsar, dated the 5th June 1918.

Lala Tirath Ram, for the Appellants.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are that on the 13th June 1904 the appellants obtained a monetary decree against the respondent and the present proceedings arise out of an application for execution made on the 15th April 1913 in which the appellants applied, inter alia, for the attachment and sale of certain land of the respondent. The application was made in accordance with section 51 and Order XXI, rule 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure and, on the 26th June 1913, the Court attached the land. Objections with regard to the liability of the land to attachment and again with regard to limitation were ultimately disposed of by the Chief Court of the Punjab in the appellants' favour, and then, on the 6th June 1917 the appellants moved the Court to proceed with the execution. Notice was issued to the respondent and also to the Collector asking the latter whether he desired to intervene under section 72 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Tahsildar reported in favour of intervening, but the Collector, following a decision of the Financial Commissioner, Ahmad Khan v. Parmanand (1), held that the Civil Court could not order the land to be sold and refused to intervene. The respondent is a member of an agricultural tribe. The executing Court passed an order holding that, in view of the action of the Collector, it was useless to send the record of the case to him for the purpose of taking action under section 72 of the Code and suggesting that the appellant should seek some other remedy for the realization of the decretal money. The lower Appellate Court, holding that it was not open to a Civil Court to take any further action, dismissed the appeal.

For the respondent a preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies from the said order because, though it is one under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is not one finally determining the question of satisfying, or discharging, the decree, that the order merely suggested some other course to be adopted and that, instead of so doing, the appellants have wrongly chosen to appeal to the lower Appellate Court and then again to this Court. Counsel argues that not every interlocutory order in execution proceedings comes within the definition of a decree in section 2 of the said Code and supports his contention by the decisions in Behary Lal Pundit v. Kedar Nath Mullick (2), Jogolishury Debea v. Kailash Chundra Lahiry (3) and Deoki Nandan Singh v. Bansi Singh (4). For the appellants reliance is placed on the wideness of the words "and the determination of any question within section 47" in section 2 of the Code. Whilst agreeing that any and every order passed in execution proceedings may not be a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, I am of opinion that the decision whether an order is such a decree depends on its nature and contents. An order, for example, refusing to summon a witness would not be within section 47 and could not be held to be a decree. In the present case the executing Court refused to execute the decree by again calling upon the Collector to submit a proposal for a temporary alienation of the land and the remedy of the appellants in this respect was finally disposed of. The question whether the appellants were entitled to have the provisions of section 72 carried out for their benefit was certainly one relating to the execution of the decree and within section 47. I hold that the order is a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure and I overrule the objection.

On the merits the Counsel for the appellants, relying on Badar Din v. Bura Mal (5), contends that, though a Civil Court may not, owing to the prohibition contained in section 16 of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, order the sale of land, the property of a member of an agricultural tribe, such Court may attach the land and proceed to give satisfaction to a decree-holder by means short of a sale. He further contends that the remarks in Ahmad Khan v. Parmanand (1) were obiter dicta and that still more recently in Salih Mohammad v. Mehar Singh (6), after a full consideration of the subject, the opinions expressed in the former case had been dissented from and the decision of the Chief Court had been agreed with and he, therefore, contends that the executing Court should have ignored the refusal of the Collector to intervene and have directed him to make a temporary alienation of the land, or, at least, have appointed a Receiver to manage the land and to pay the income into Court for the benefit of the decree-holders.

For the respondent it is contended that the application for execution contained merely a prayer for attachment and sale and that no other specific relief after the attachment was sought, and that by referring to the Collector with a view to making a temporary alienation, the executing Court was acting on its own motion, that at no time did the appellants seek relief by the appointment of a Receiver and that in this last respect any appeal was premature. Attention is called to the words "on the application of the decree-holder" in section 51 of the Code of Civil Procedure and it is contended that a Court has no power to take action under that section of its own motion. It is further sought to distinguish Badar Din v. Bura Mal (5), because in that case a reference had been made by the Collector to the Civil Court and it was, therefore, necessary for the Chief Court to refer to section 326 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, which corresponds to section 72 of the present Code. Finally reliance is placed on Ahmad Khan v. Parmanand (1).

The points involved are of some importance to the appellants because if the contentions of the respondent are to prevail, their remedies by a fresh application praying that a Receiver be appointed or that a temporary alienation of the land be made are time-barred. Section 72 (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure is as follows:—"Where in any local area... the property attached consists of land or of a share in land, and the Collector represents to the Court that the public sale of the land or share is objectionable and that satisfaction of the decree may be made within a reasonable period by a temporary alienation of the land or share, the Court may authorise the Collector to provide for such satisfaction in the manner recommended by him instead of proceeding to a sale of the land or share."

In Badar Din v. Bura Mal (5) it was pointed out that section 16 of Act XIII of 1900 did not prohibit the attachment in execution of a decree of the land belonging to members of an agricultural tribe and that a decree-holder is, therefore, still entitled to claim a declaration that the land of the judgment-debtor, even though the latter happens to be a member of such tribe, is liable to attachment and to be thereafter dealt with as in section 326 (now section 72), Civil Procedure Code, provided. The relevant portion of paragraph 56, Chapter II, section 21, Volume I, of the Rules and Orders of the Chief Court of the Punjab is: "The Act (The Punjab Alienation of Land Act) does not prohibit the attachment of land belonging to members of an agricultural tribe and action under section 72, Civil Procedure Code, may be taken in regard to such land."

In the present case the Collector had made temporary alienations of the land for a certain number of years in the execution of the decree of another decree-holder and what was now sought was that he should make similar and further temporary alienations in the execution of the decree of the appellants, but which he refused to do on the strength of Ahmad Khan v. Parmanand (1).

In that case the Financial Commissioner held that under section 51 and Order XXI, rule 30, of the Code there was no power of temporarily transferring the property of the judgment-debtor to any person and that a temporary alienation of the immoveable property of the judgment-debtor is only possible under the conditions specified in section 72 of the Code (section 68 and Schedule III not being in force in the Punjab) and such alienation is not made by the executing Court but by the Collector in his executive capacity after he has been formally authorised in that behalf by the Court in the manner described in that section. He further held that as a sale in execution of a decree of land belonging to a member of an agricultural tribe is illegal under the provisions of section 16 (1) of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act and section 72 of the Code of Civil Procedure clearly postulates and implies that the Collector's representation is to be made with reference to, and in view of, a proposal to sell attached land, it follows that no temporary alienation of the land of such member can be made by the Collector under the authority of the latter section and that the executing Court, though it can attach the land, can take no further action towards satisfying the decree by selling or otherwise dealing with, that land. In this respect the learned Financial Commissioner differed from Badar Din v. Bura Mal (5) and the portion of the Rules and Orders of the Chief Court, Punjab, already quoted. As the Collector had made no reference to the Court and the latter had made no representation to the former suggesting a temporary alienation, it was rightly held that the procedure of the Collector was irregular and ultra vires but the further matters dealt with did not arise and the decision as to them was obiter dictum. In Salih Mohammad v. Mehar Singh (5), a case in which the executing Court had asked the Collector to intervene with a proposal for a temporary alienation under section 72 of the Code of attached land of a member of an agricultural tribe and the Collector did propose a temporary alienation for some years, the learned Financial Commissioner held that the Collector had under that section jurisdiction to make the proposal notwithstanding the provisions of section 16 (1) of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act and approved of Badar Din v. Bura Mal (5) and dissented pro tanto from Ahmad Khan v. Parmanand (1). It was pointed out, with reference to the word 'objectionable' in section 72, that a representation by a Collector that an order of sale is illegal by reason of section 16 (1) of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act would fall within the language of that section, that an order did not cease to be 'objectionable' because it is contrary to law, that the word 'objectionable' was applicable to any process to which objection might legally be taken and that by the passing of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act it had never been intended to prohibit the method of temporary alienation. It was also held that the position of a Revenue Officer executing a decree of a Civil Court by attachment, or temporary alienation, or otherwise, is that of a ministerial officer of the Civil Court taking his orders from such Court and he has no power in himself to order a temporary alienation.

In my opinion there is no force in the contention of the appellants that the executing Court should, when it found that the Collector would not take action, have, at least, appointed a Receiver of the land to realize the income. They had not applied to the Court for this remedy and it was never refused and when by its order the Court expressly suggested that they would apply for some remedy other than a temporary alienation by the Collector, they failed to do so. It was no part of the duty of the executing Court to grant remedies unasked and unsolicited and which possibly a decree-holder may not desire. But I am also of opinion that the contention of the respondent that the attempt by the executing Court to have a temporary alienation of the land made through the Collector was ultra vires and that the application for execution by the appellant must be regarded as strictly limited to a demand for attachment and sale, is erroneous. No doubt, section 51 of the Code provides that the Court shall act on the application of the decree-holder, but it has been repeatedly held that an application may be inferred from an action of the Court. There is no doubt but that the Court must have been moved, possibly orally, to take action under section 72. No objection was raised at the time and it is too late now to take exception for the first time to the form of such an application. But it is not clear that such a further application was legally necessary. The appellants had complied with section 51 and Order XXI, rule 11 of the Code, which do not expressly relate to temporary alienations and apparently, they had complied with the law when they applied for attachment and sale. When it was seen that the land could not be sold in execution, it was open to the Court to grant something less than a sale and to act under section 72.

The questions which arise are not free from difficulty. As explained in Darya Singh v. Mahtab (7), the natural meaning of section 72 of the Code is that the initial proceedings are taken by the Civil Court as if it were going to sell the land itself in the ordinary way, but section 72 empowers the Collector to intervene and represent to the Civil Court (1) that the sale of the land is objectionable, (2) that the decree may be satisfied by a temporary alienation, or some other way, in a reasonable time. On receiving this representation the Civil Court may either authorize, or refuse to authorize, the Collector to take action and, in the latter case, execution will proceed in the ordinary way and an appeal would lie from the order of the Civil Court either giving or refusing authority to the Collector. In practice apparently the executing Court requests the Collector to make the proposal and having received the proposal, the Court disposes of the matter by giving the authority. But what is to happen if the Collector refuses to move in the matter? Can the Court compel him to do so, and if so, by what process? or is the Court, on such refusal, competent to itself make a temporary alienation? If the Collector is merely a ministerial officer of the Court, the Court presumably has the power. Again, it may be argued that section 72 recognises the inherent power of the Civil Court to make temporary alienations, the introduction of the Collector being merely the means by which power is exercised.

In Raja Ram v. Durga Dut (8) it was held that there was no appeal to the Commissioner from a refusal of the Collector to intervene and make a proposal when a Civil Court had sent the record to the Collector for the purpose of giving him an opportunity to act under section 72 of the Code. We are here concerned with an appeal from the action of the Civil Court. Apparently in the cases already referred to there was a reference by the Collector to the Civil Court, whether induced by the Court or not, and I am not aware of any case in which, like the present, the Collector has refused to comply with the request of a Court to make the proposal and the consequent action to be adopted by the Civil Court has been discussed or dealt with. It appears to me that the Legislature has not expressly provided for a case where the decree-holder himself desired that the provisions of section 72 should be acted upon for his benefit, it being assumed that he would always prefer a sale. The section is in the interest of judgment-debtors. A Receiver is appropriately appointed when a share in a partnership is involved and in other cases, but, apart from the directions of the Chief Court contained in its Rules and Orders, the appointment of a Receiver in cases like the present would not be very appropriate and would be attended by considerable difficulties. The Chief Court has indicated that the provisions of section 72 should be applied.

I am by no means sure that I am right in so doing, but, following the authorities in so far as they appear to be applicable, I hold that the refusal of the Collector, based solely on Ahmad Khan v. Parmanand (1), was wrong and that the executing Court erred in accepting the position taken by the Collector. The Court should have continued to follow the instructions laid down for its guidance and have moved the Collector again, and its refusal to do so gave the appellants the right to appeal from its order. I, therefore, accept the appeal, remand the proceedings to the executing Court and direct it to move the Collector again to make a proposal under section 72 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In view of the recent decision in Salik Mohammad v. Mehar Singh (6), the Collector may probably see his way to complying with the reference by the Court. I do not award any costs to the appellants because, as the admitting order of this Court will show, they primarily pressed their right to have a Receiver appointed.

Appeal accepted.

SECOND CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 11 AND 12 OF 1919.

July 14, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Das.

TAFAZUL KHAN AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

DR. MOHAMMAD BAKSHI KHAN—PLAINTIFF, AND ALTAF HOSAIN KHAN—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENTS.

(Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 48, 49, 144—Misappropriation of materials of house—Suit to recover price of materials—Limitation, commencement of —Suit to recover possession of property and for correction of entry in Record of Rights—Limitation.

A suit to recover the price of materials of a house removed and misappropriated by the defendants must be brought within the period of limitation prescribed by Article 48 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and time begins to run from the date when the plaintiff first learns in whose possession the materials are. [p. 362, col. 1.]

A suit for possession and mesne profits in which the plaintiff asks for a declaration that an entry in the Record of Rights is incorrect is governed by the 12 years' rule of limitation. [p. 362, col. 1.]

Appeals from an order of the Officiating District Judge, Patna, dated the 16th September 1918, reversing a decision of the Munsif, Bihar, dated the 4th June 1918.

FACTS.—The plaintiff is the step-brother of the defendants. He was in the Government service in the Medical Department in the Punjab and N. W. P. When the father of the plaintiff and the defendants died, the defendants got possession of the entire family property. The plaintiff instituted a civil suit which was compromised on 4th January 1900. Under the compromise the plaintiff got amongst other things a pucca house and some trees as his share. After the compromise decree the plaintiff again went back to join his service, asking defendant No. 1 to look after his property during his absence. In the survey proceeding which was finally published on 10th June 1910, the plaintiff's name was recorded in pursuance of the compromise in respect of the house, but in respect of the trees the names of defendants were recorded. When the plaintiff came to his native village to permanently reside, he found that the defendants were wrongfully in possession of a kothri (room) of the aforesaid house and had wrongfully removed the materials of the house. He further was resisted in his possession of the trees. He, therefore, brought two suits against the defendants Nos. 204 and 205 of 1917 on the 10th of July 1917. The Suit No. 204 of 1917 was in respect of possession of the portion of the house of which he had been dispossessed and for recovery of Rs. 307-12-0 as damages for the materials of the house removed by the defendants. In paragraph 8 of the plaint in Suit No. 204 of 1917 the plaintiff stated as follows:—"When the plaintiff began to make search and enquiry about the house and other properties, then he learnt that defendants Nos. 1 to 4 have illegally and without having any right removed all the materials of his house, as per details given below, on different dates and appropriated the same to his own use." It was out of this suit that Second Appeal No. 11 of 1919 has arisen. Suit No. 205 was for possession of the trees with a declaration that the Survey Khatian was incorrect. The Second Appeal No. 12 of 1919 arose out of this suit. The defendants, amongst other things, pleaded that the suits were barred by limitation. The Munsif, without deciding the merits of the cases, dismissed both the suits as barred by limitation. The District Judge on appeal held that the suits were not barred by limitation, set aside the decision of the Court of first instance and remanded them to be tried on merits. The defendants appealed in both the cases to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.—I think the lower Appellate Court is right in the view which it has taken on the question of limitation. Miscellaneous Appeal No. 11 of 1919 arises out of Suit No. 204 for possession of a portion of a house and the price of materials alleged to have been removed by the defendants. The Record of Rights was finally published on the 10th June 1910. Therefore the plaintiff must be presumed to have been in possession on the 10th June 1910. The suit was instituted on the 9th July 1917. Therefore the suit for possession of a portion of the house was clearly within time.

So far as the suit for materials is concerned, the question for my determination is whether Article 48 or Article 49 of the Limitation Act applies. Article 48 applies to suits for specific moveable property lost, or acquired by theft, or dishonest misappropriation or conversion. Article 49 applies to a suit for specific moveable property not falling within Article 48. It will be noticed that Article 49 is a general section and it will apply unless it is clearly established that the case comes under Article 48. It is, therefore, necessary to examine the plaint in order to see whether the case comes under Article 48. In my opinion, the plaint makes a definite case of conversion. I hold, therefore, that Article 48 applies and that the plaintiff is entitled to bring his suit within three years from the date when he first learns in whose possession the property is. The plaintiff says that he came to know of the illegal acts of the defendant on the 31st May 1915 The suit, having been filed on the 10th July 1917, is clearly within time.

On these findings Miscellaneous Appeal No. 11 of 1919 must be dismissed with costs.

I now come to Miscellaneous Appeal No. 12 of 1919. The only point that has been argued before me is that the suit is in substance a suit for the correction of an entry in the Record of Rights and that, therefore, the suit not having been brought within six years from the date of the final publication of the Record of Rights is barred by limitation. I cannot agree that the suit is in substance a suit for the correction of an entry in the Record of Rights. The suit is a suit for possession and mesne profits, though the plaintiff has asked for a declaration that the entry in the Record of Rights is incorrect. It is well-settled that the 12 years' rule applies to a suit of this nature. The suit is, therefore, within time. I would dismiss Miscellaneous Appeal No. 12 of 1919 with costs.

It must be distinctly understood that for the purpose of these decisions I have assumed that every allegation in the plaint is correct. I have come to the conclusion that on the allegations made in the plaint the plaintiffs' suits are not barred by limitation. It is, of course, still open to the trial Court to hold on evidence that the plaintiff's suits are barred by limitation, but it must, of course, be guided by the principles which I have laid down in this judgment.

Appeals dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182—Execution of instalment decree—Payment of instalment out of Court—Admission by decree-holder and judgment-debtor—Certification, whether necessary—Limitation.

N. obtained a decree against Q. for a specific sum of money payable by six annual instalments, with the proviso that in case of default N. could realise the whole sum with interest. N applied to execute the decree alleging that the second and third instalments had been paid, but the fourth had not. Q. contended that the application was barred by limitation inasmuch as N. had not certified payment of the second and third instalments to the Court, and that the fourth instalment had also been paid:

Held, that as Q. admitted payment, no question of certifying to the Court of any payment out of Court arose in the circumstances, and that it was not necessary for N. to prove such payment. [p. 363 col. 1.]

Mr. R. Malcomson (for Mr. A. E. Ryves), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is in our judgment wholly without merit. A decree was passed against the appellant on the 13th of August 1910 for payment of Rs. 1,446 by six annual instalments of Rs. 241 payable on the 1st of August of each year. The decree further provided that in the event of default being made in the payment of any of the instalments the decree holders would be entitled to realise the whole of the decretal amount with interest. The first application for execution was made on the 21st of February 1912 on the allegation that the first instalment had not been paid. That application was subsequently withdrawn upon the judgment-debtor paying to the decree-holders the amount of the first instalment On the 4th of August 1915 the second application for execution was made on the allegation that the second and third instalments had been paid but default had been made in the payment of the fourth instalment. The present application for execution was made in 1917. The contention on behalf of the judgment-debtor, the appellant before us, in the Court below was that the application of the 4th of August 1915 was time-barred, and this contention is based on the fact that the payment of the second and the third instalments had not been certified to the Court as required by Order XXI, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In our opinion this contention is without force inasmuch as the judgment-debtor, so far from denying that the second and third instalments had been paid, admitted by a petition in Court the payment of those instalments and only contended that he had paid the fourth instalment also and that no default had been made. As the judgment-debtor admitted payment, it was not necessary for the decree-holders to prove that the second and the third instalments had been paid and that default had been made in payment of the fourth instalment only. No question of certifying to the Court of any payment made outside the Court arises in the circumstances of this case. In this view the rulings to which the learned Vakil for the appellant has referred have no bearing on the present case. We express no opinion as to whether we agree or not with the decision of this Court in Chhattar Singh v. Amir Singh (1), which is one of the cases cited to us. We dismiss the appeal with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Messrs. S. N. Palit and Bimola Charan Sinha, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Kulwant Sahai and Siveshwardayal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the appellants against the respondents for an order upon the defendants to make over a sale-deed to the plaintiffs, for possession of the property covered by the sale-deed, dated the 6th January 1916, and for other incidental reliefs.

The facts so far as they are necessary for the determination of this appeal are as follows:—

On the 6th January 1916, defendant No. 1 did execute a properly registered conveyance in respect of the properties in suit in favour of the plaintiffs. Subsequently defendant No. 1 sold the same properties to defendants Nos. 2 to 4, and it is on the basis of the sale-deed, dated 6th January 1916, that the plaintiffs have brought the suit out of which this appeal arises.

The defence of defendant No. 1 is that the document was procured from him under circumstances which negative the implication of a free consent on his part and that, therefore, he never executed the document in favour of the plaintiffs and that he is not bound by it at all. It will be noticed that he does not set up a case that there was a contract between him and the plaintiffs that the conveyance would not be operative until the full consideration money is paid. It is important to remember this fact in view of the finding of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court.

The Court of first instance found that the document of the 6th January 1916 was a genuine document and was executed for consideration. It found that the consideration of the conveyance was Rs. 450 and that the plaintiffs had out of that consideration deducted Rs. 175 and Rs. 160 in respect of the money due to them from defendant No. 1 on account of certain other transactions. It further found that Rs. 20 was paid by the plaintiffs in cash to the defendant No. 1 and that Rs. 95 still remained to be paid by the plaintiffs to the defendant No. 1. Upon this finding the Court of first instance gave a decree to the plaintiffs conditional on the plaintiffs paying in Rs. 95 within one month to defendant No. 1. The Court of first instance further decreed that on failure on the part of the plaintiffs to pay in Rs. 95 within a month, the plaintiffs should get a money decree for Rs. 160 which was due from defendant No. 1 to the plaintiffs and for Rs. 20 which had been paid by the plaintiffs to defendant No. 1. Against this decree there was an appeal to the lower Appellate Court. But it will be convenient to deal with another matter before I deal with the decision of the lower Appellate Court.

It appears that the plaintiffs could not pay Rs. 95 into Court within the time specified in the decree of the Court of first instance. Therefore, on the 12th July 1917, the plaintiffs made an application to the Court of first instance for enlargement of the time to enable them to pay Rs. 95 into Court. That application was refused, and as I have stated before, the plaintiffs appealed from the decision of the Court of first instance. The lower Appellate Court does not dissent from the finding of the Court of first instance that the sale-deed was duly executed for a consideration of Rs. 450, but it thought that because the plaintiffs had not paid the full consideration money to defendant No. 1, the plaintiffs' suit should have been dismissed by the Court of first instance. In my opinion that is entirely erroneous It is obvious that the title accrued to the plaintiffs on the execution of the sale deed. If the full consideration had not been paid by the plaintiffs to the defendant, the defendant would have a lien on the property sold for the unpaid purchase-money, but it cannot for a moment be argued that title to the property would not pass until the full consideration money had been paid. Section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act is perfectly clear on this point. Section 55, clause (4) (b), provides that where the ownership of the property has passed to the buyer before payment of the whole of the purchase-money, the seller is entitled to a charge upon the property in the hands of the buyer for the amount of the purchase-money, or any part thereof remaining unpaid, and for interest on such amount or part. Therefore it recognises that the title passes to the purchaser on the execution of the document, although the seller is entitled to have a charge on the property for the amount of the purchase-money or any portion thereof remaining unpaid to him with interest thereon. No doubt the opening words of section 55 of the Transfer of Property Act are: "In the absence of a contract to the contrary." There may, no doubt, be a contract between the parties that title to the property will not pass to the purchaser until the full consideration money has been paid, but such a contract must be alleged and proved and the onus would undoubtedly lie on the party setting up the contract. As I read the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, it finds that there was such a contract in this case, but, in my opinion, the lower Appellate Court was not entitled to make a case for the defendant which the defendant himself did not make. The whole case of the defendant in the written statement filed before it is that he never executed the conveyance dated the 6th January 1916. That was the only matter before the Courts below and the Courts below have found that the story told by the defendant is false. In my opinion the lower Appellate Court was not entitled to go into the question whether there was or was not a contract to the contrary in this case. I am of opinion, therefore, that so far as this question is concerned, it must be held that title to the property passed to the plaintiffs and unless there be some sort of equity in favour of the defendant, the plaintiffs are entitled to the reliefs claimed by them in the plaint.

But it is urged on behalf of the respondents that there is in fact such an equity in this case in favour of the defendants. The learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the respondents relies upon the petition for enlargement of time put in by the plaintiffs on the 12th July 1917. The argument, so far as I have been able to understand the same, is that the plaintiffs by putting in the application on the 12th July 1917 adopted in its entirety the decree which was passed by the Court of first instance, and, therefore, the plaintiffs could not file an appeal from the decree of the Court of first instance. The argument, so far as I understand the same, is an argument that the plaintiffs have elected one remedy and, therefore, are estopped from pursuing another remedy. In my opinion the argument is not well-founded. It has been repeatedly held that election is the choice between two or more co-existent and inconsistent remedies. It is really based on the principle of estoppel. If two remedies are equally available to a party and if with his eyes open he pursues one remedy and if he fails therein, equity will step in and prevent him from pursuing the other remedy, because he chooses one remedy at his own peril and cannot turn round and say when he fails therein that he will now pursue the other remedy which was available to him. But in this case can it be said that the plaintiffs had two inconsistent remedies? On the findings of the Court of first instance there was a sum of Rs. 95 undoubtedly due by them to defendant No. 1. They could pay in Rs. 95 to defendant No. 1 and yet challenge that portion of the decree which said that unless they paid in Rs. 95, they could not get a conveyance of the property in their favour In my opinion the remedies were not inconsistent at all. The plaintiffs are undoubtedly liable to pay Rs. 95 and they could appeal from the decree passed by the Court of first instance and yet pay in Rs. 95 to defendant No. 1. If the remedies available to the plaintiffs were not inconsistent in any way, then no question of estoppel by election arises in the case at all. In my opinion the judgment and decrees of the Courts below cannot be sustained.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the judgments and decrees of the Courts below and give the plaintiffs a decree in terms of the reliefs Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 claimed by them. The defendant No. 1 is undoubtedly entitled to a lien on the property in respect of the money still remaining unpaid. He can pursue that remedy, but I do not think that I should in this decree fix a time within which the plaintiffs must pay Rs. 95 to defendant No. 1. I make no order as to costs.

SITABAI—APPLICANT

SHANKAR AND OTHERS—NON-APPLICANTS.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 41 (2) (3)—Order directing delivery of property, when can be made.

A Court has no power to order the guardian of the person and property of a minor to deliver possession of the property in respect of which he has been appointed guardian under the Guardians and Wards Act, unless the powers of the guardian have ceased for any of the reasons enumerated in section 41 (2) of the Act. [p. 366, col. 1.]

The power of compelling a guardian to deliver possession of the minor's property is meant for the protection of the minor, and can only be exercised in the interests of the minor. It cannot be invoked by persons claiming adversely to the minor, who have their remedy in a regular suit. [p. 366, col. 1.]

Revision of the order of the District Judge, Amraoti, in Miscellaneous Case No. 18 of 1914, dated the 9th May 1917.

Mr. G. V. Deshmukh, for the Applicant.

Messrs. M. V. Joshi and V. D. Sathaye, for the Non-Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The minor Narain was adopted by Sitabai, the widow of Mr. P. N. Jog, who left a Will with certain directions for the adoption of a son. It has been decided by this Court that the adoption is invalid, but there is an appeal pending against that decision before His Majesty in Council.

Sitabai was appointed guardian of the person and property of the minor when the executors under her husband's Will retired with the permission of the Court and handed over the estate to her by the order of the Court.

The present proceedings have been taken at the instance of persons claiming to be interested under the Will. The District Judge has passed an order purporting to be under section 41, sub-section 3 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, calling upon Sitabai to deliver possession of all the property handed over to her as guardian. The ground upon which this order is based is that her guardianship has now ceased by reason of the decision of this Court. All that has been decided is that the adoption is invalid, but pending the appeal to the Privy Council it will be the duty of the adoptive mother to protect the minor's interest by prosecuting the appeal. I have been informed that the boy is still living with the adoptive mother and that there is no question of any adverse interest between them. I do not think that upon a fair construction of the pleadings the guardian can be said to have set up an adverse title for herself. In order to defeat the non-applicants she urged that even if the adoption is invalid, she is entitled to the estate of her husband as owner.

Section 41 (2) enumerates the cases where the powers of the guardian to the property cease. This is not one of them. No order has been passed for the removal of the guardian. Therefore the lower Court had no power to call upon Sitabai to deliver the property in her possession.

The power of compelling the guardian to deliver possession of the property can only be exercised in the interests of the minor. These summary powers are meant for his protection. They cannot be invoked by persons claiming adversely to the minor. The remedy for such adverse claimants lies in a regular suit.

The minor is lawfully in possession of the estate, though possession was obtained from the executors with the consent of the Court. The Court has no power to deprive him of that possession, merely because a declaratory decree regarding the minor's adoption has been passed.

The result is that the proceedings of the District Judge culminating in the order, dated the 9th May 1917, are set aside. The non-applicants will pay Rs. 50 as costs of this application to the applicant.

Adverse possession, title by—Burden of proof—License—Revocation, proof of.

In a suit for ejectment, the plaintiff's case was that the defendant had been put in possession for certain purposes by leave and license. The defendant denied the license and set up an adverse title; but in appeal to the High Court it was urged on his behalf that it was not proved that the license was ever granted or revoked:

Held, that the plaintiff having based his case upon the license, from the moment the defendant repudiated the license and set up adverse possession, it was no longer possible for him to rely upon the license, or to deny its revocation, and that his position was that of a trespasser without any defence unless he established his title by adverse possession. [p. 367, col. 1.]

On the defendant's plea of adverse possession the lower Appellate Court, holding that the onus lay on the plaintiff to prove not only his title but also his possession within twelve years of the suit, dismissed the suit. In appeal to the High Court:

Held, that the decision of the lower Appellate Court was erroneous in law, which was that the onus of establishing a title to property by reason of possession for a certain stipulated period lay on the person asserting such possession. [p. 367, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 13th December 1916.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, for the Appellant.

Mr. Baldeo Ram Dave and Dr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

WALSH, J.—This appeal must succeed. The plaintiff is the Zemindar of the village and his title has been held established in both Courts. He alleges that the defendant was put in possession for certain purposes, unnecessary to mention, by leave and license. The defendant denied the license in his written statement and set up an adverse title. Mr. Baldeo Ram for the defendant says that it is not proved that the license was ever granted or revoked. In our opinion that is now immaterial. The plaintiff based his case upon it and from the moment that the defendant repudiated the license and set up adverse possession, it was no longer possible for the defendant to rely upon the license or to deny its revocation. He was in the position of a trespasser without any defence to the suit, unless he succeeded in establishing his title by adverse possession.

With reference to that part of the case, I propose to cite two passages from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. Having held that the plaintiff had shown title the learned Judge said: "It is equally obvious that the appellant failed to substantiate his allegation of adverse possession. It was not at all asserted when the title of the Zemindar was denied and his own asserted." This being so, there is no finding of adverse possession and in our opinion the defence fails and the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. The reason why the Judge in the lower Appellate Court gave judgment for the defendant is contained in the following words which I propose to quote, for the reason that, in my opinion, a false impression of what is the actual law has prevailed for a very considerable time in the lower Courts. There is at least one authority in the Law Reports of this Province by which the lower Courts, unless they happen to be familiar with the Privy Council decisions, may reasonably hold themselves bound, and it is high time that a clear indication was given as to the actual law as it stands at the present moment in this Province, as throughout India upon this question. The learned Judge says:—"In this case which was an action for ejectment, where the defendant advanced the plea of adverse possession, in my opinion, the onus lay on the plaintiff-respondent to prove not only his title but also his possession within twelve years of the suit. It was held in Inayat Husen v. Ali Husein (1) that the plaintiff should lay the foundation for his case by proving that he was in possession of the land within limitation." In our view that is not the law and never has been the law in this or in any other Province in India. The matter was recently made perfectly clear by an important decision of the Privy Council reported as Secretary of State v. Chelikani Rama Rao (2). The importance of that decision is this:—The Madras High Court in that particular case had followed a view which the Madras Court had been taking from time to time since the year 1885; the same view apparently as that which is declared in Inayat Husen v. Ali Husein (1), namely, that in a suit by an owner of property for possession, to which Article 144 of the Limitation Act applied, the plaintiff had to show what is called a subsisting title. The Privy Council overruled that decision and in doing so clearly overruled the three antecedent decisions of the Madras High Court cited and relied upon in the judgment of the Madras High Court which was under review, and they did so in language contained in the opinion of Lord Shaw which to our mind is as binding upon us and upon inferior Courts of this Province as any Statute can be. Their Lordships," says Lord Shaw, "are of opinion that the view thus taken of the law is erroneous. Nothing is better settled than that the onus of establishing title to property by reason of possession for a certain requisite period lies upon the person asserting such possession. It is too late in the day to suggest the contrary of this proposition. If it were not correct it would be open to the possessor for a year or a day to say: 'I am here, be your title to the property ever so good, you cannot turn me out until you have demonstrated that the possession of myself and my predecessors was not long enough to fulfil all the legal conditions.' Such a singular doctrine can be well illustrated by the case of India. .....It would be contrary to all legal principles thus to permit the squatter to put the owner of the fundamental right to a negative proof upon the point of possession." We hold ourselves bound by that declaration of the law and compelled to say that Inayat Husen v. Ali Husein (1) and similar cases are no longer law, and inasmuch as the lower Appellate Court has held itself bound by Inayat Husen v. Ali Husein (1), we must reverse its decision.

I now propose, as shortly as I can in justification of our view that the law is really settled and has only become unsettled by misunderstanding, to mention the history of the authorities upon this subject. The point arose in Parmanand Misr v. Sahib Ali (3), where it was disposed of by a three Judge Bench. It is important to observe that the character of the suit in that case was one to which Article 142 of the Limitation Act would have applied. "There is a clear distinction," they said, "as to the onus of proof between cases where a plaintiff sues for possession of land by redemption of mortgage and cases where the defence to a suit for possession of land is twelve years' adverse possession by the defendant. In each case the plaintiff must plead his title, and if that title is in issue, he must make it out by at least prima facie evidence before the defendant can be put to proof of his defence. Where the defence is twelve years' adverse possession, the defendant must plead and make out the title he alleges, and thus show that the title of the plaintiff, which otherwise had been proved or admitted, was lost."

In Jafar Husain v. Mashuq Ali (4) the same question as to burden of proof in cases of adverse possession arose in a suit to which also Article 142 of the present Act would have been applicable, and the Chief Justice in his judgment in that case again made the matter perfectly clear. He said: "We are satisfied that where a plaintiff comes into Court alleging that he has been dispossessed within limitation, and when the defence is adverse possession, the question of limitation becomes a question of title; the plaintiff must at least give some prima facie evidence to satisfy the Court in the first instance that he was in possession within twelve years before the defendant can be called upon to make out his defence of twelve years' adverse possession."

Whether the expression that the question of limitation becomes a question of title is accurate or not, that case makes it quite clear that there is a clear distinction between cases such as those covered by Article 142 where the plaintiff claims possession by reason of dispossession, and cases such as those covered by Article 144 where the plaintiff stands upon his title and leaves the defendant to show that he has lost it. And the decision which I have just cited from I. L R. 14 Allahabad [Jafar Husain v. Mashuq Ali (4)] was itself based upon a decision of the Privy Council reported as Mohima Chunder Mozoomdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neoghi (5), where their Lordships held: "That the claimants had shown that they were formerly proprietors of the land to which they alleged title but they had been dispossessed some years before the suit was brought by them and the land was occupied by the defendants who denied their title. That being so, the burden of proof was on the claimants to prove their possession at some time within the twelve years next preceding the suit."

The action being one to which Article 142 of the Limitation Act applied, it was on the claimants or plaintiffs to prove their possession at some time within the twelve years. The reasoning of that decision, if it is not presumptuous to say so, is quite clear. Where a plaintiff comes into Court complaining of dispossession, and founds his cause of action upon a specific act of the defendant of that kind, it stands to reason that inasmuch as he is compelled to establish a cause of action of some kind within limitation he must show that he was in possession within limitation; otherwise he could not have been dispossessed, and dispossession is the grievance of which he complains. So that, in our opinion, at any rate down to the year 1897 the law as enunciated by this Court was based upon the decision of the Privy Council and ought to have been accepted without controversy. Unfortunately a case crept into the Law Reports which is difficult to explain and certainly never should have been reported, namely, the case upon which the learned Judge has acted in this particular decision. That is the case of Inayat Husen v. Ali Husen (1). We are not concerned to say whether or not the case in point was rightly decided, but the vice of the decision is contained in a sentence in the judgment which I propose to quote and which unfortunately formed a prominent feature of the head-note. "It is contended," said the Court, "that the suit is governed by Article 144...and the burden of proof was on the defendants to establish adverse possession alleged by them. In our opinion in every suit for possession, the plaintiff must prove not only a legal title to possession, but a subsisting title not barred by the law of limitation."

Where that statement of the law came from it is impossible to say. It is sufficient to say that it is inconsistent with the Privy Council decision in Mohima Chunder Mozoomdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neoghi (5) and has been definitely overruled by the Privy Council in Secretary of State v. Chelikani Rama Rao (2). Inasmuch as the attention of the Privy Council was directed to the several Madras decisions it is not likely that Inayat Husen v. Ali Husen (1) was cited to them. It so happens that each of us sitting alone on different occasions has taken the same view of the law as we think is now established. I happen myself to have expressed my opinion in a judgment which was reported as Muhammad Kamil v. Habibullah (6), where the District Judge had taken the same view as the District Judge in this case and had based himself upon the same authority, and recognizing the danger of holding this view I went out of my way to point out that the Privy Council had really removed all possible misunderstanding upon the question and that any cases in this country which had laid down the law to the contrary must be taken to be no longer binding. I observe that in his supplement to the most recent addition of his book Mr. Rustomji refers to that report and says that my observation must be received with some degree of caution. I hope that advice will always be followed with every observation of mine which happens to find its way into reported cases. The only value of a reported case is the bearing of the principle enunciated upon the particular facts of the case and, therefore, the observations in the judgment must always be received and examined with a degree of caution. But inasmuch as what I said has been referred to in the text book in question, I have taken the trouble again to review the citation of cases in Mr. Rustomji's note and the various decisions on which I had arrived at the conclusion I had formed. I cannot find anything in Mr. Rustomji's note to shake the view which I have expressed more than once that the Privy Council decision in Secretary of State v. Chelikani Rama Rao (2) has in effect overruled the Madras cases and Inayat Husen v. Ali Husen (1). And I think it is not saying too much to ask the inferior Courts, when this question arises again, as it undoubtedly frequently arises, to pay attention to these observations and to examine the Privy Council decision and no longer to hold themselves bound by the decision in Inayat Husen v. Ali Husen (1).

RYVES, J.—I agree generally. The finding of the lower Appellate Court is: "The fact remains that the plaintiff is the Zamindar and the defendant has been in long possession of the land." It has also found that the possession of the defendant has not been proved to have been adverse. That being so, it seems to me that since the publication of the ruling of the Privy Council reported as Secretary of State v. Chelikani Rama Rao (2), the plaintiff must succeed inasmuch as the defendant has failed to prove his adverse possession. I concur in the order proposed.

BY THE COURT.—For these reasons our order is that the appeal must be allowed with costs, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

K. T. V. R. T. VEERAPPA CHETTY—DEFENDANT No. 1—APPELLANT

VELLAYAN AMBALAM AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANTS NOS. 2 TO 4—RESPONDENTS.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 30, 32, 36, 64, 91, 92, 93, 94, 119—Bill of exchange payable at sight or on demand—Dishonour by non-acceptance—Notice of dishonour by non-payment, whether necessary—Presumption on proof of protest, when arises—English Law.

In the case of a bill of exchange payable at sight or on demand there can be dishonour by non-acceptance, though the law does not require that, in the case of such bill, there should be a presentment for acceptance. But if the drawee of such a bill refuses to accept it, it practically amounts to a refusal to pay and becomes dishonour by non-payment. That is to say, there is nothing in law which precludes a bill payable on demand being presented for acceptance, although that may not be necessary. In order, however, to sustain an action against the drawee, there must be dishonour and notice of dishonour given within reasonable time. [p. 372, col. 1.]

Under section 119 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, a Court is entitled to presume the fact of dishonour, but that is only so where there is a proper protest. No such presumption would arise from a mere entry by a Notary Public of the words 'noted for non-payment' without giving the date of dishonour, and in the absence of a certificate of protest [p. 371, col. 1.]

Per Oldfield, J.—The refusal to pay referred to in section 92 of the Negotiable Instruments Act includes a refusal to accept, such as is contemplated in section 91, which is a possible, though not an invariable or obligatory, preliminary to payment being demanded at all. [p. 373, col. 2.]

The Negotiable Instruments Act should be read conformably to the provisions of the English Law, which follows the general commercial law of the rest of the world. [p 373, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The suit which we are dealing with in this appeal was instituted with respect to a Hundi drawn by the 1st defendant, the appellant, on S. R. M. S. Ranganathan Chetty in Rangoon in favour of the 2nd defendant, who assigned it to 3rd defendant and the 3rd defendant assigned it to the 4th defendant's father, who assigned it to the plaintiff. Several defences were raised but we need not deal with all of them. We wish to deal with the questions of fact whether there was presentment of the Hundi and in due time, whether there was dishonour and notice of dishonour, if any, given to the drawer as required by law. The question whether the Hundi was discharged by payment has also been argued before us. The learned Advocate-General has also raised a rather interesting question of law based on the provisions of sections 61 and 74 of the Negotiable Instruments Act read with sections 91, 92, 93, and 94. The case cannot be said to have been tried as satisfactorily as it might have been; but we have to come to a conclusion upon the evidence on record. The whole evidence regarding presentment and dishonour and the alleged discharge is of a very unsatisfactory kind. No witness from the firm of the drawer was examined in support of the case of the plaintiff as to presentment and no explanation is forthcoming for this omission. Nor has there been any attempt to produce the books of that firm which, it is likely, would have contained some record as to the fact of presentment of this bill if it was actually presented as is spoken to by P. W. No. 2. The bill is alleged to have been sent at the request of the 4th defendant's father by a firm in Madura, called V. E. R. M. Firm, for collection. One of the men from that firm, the son of the proprietor, was examined as plaintiff's witness No. 5. He says that he received a letter saying that the bill had been presented for payment and that it was dishonoured. But no attempt was made to produce that letter, nor has any book of account or anything in writing been produced in support of the plaintiff's allegation. It was quite easy for the plaintiff to produce absolutely conclusive evidence on this point. It was argued by the learned Advocate-General that we ought to accept the evidence given by the plaintiff even though it is not the best evidence available, and such as it is, is unsatisfactory because the probabilities of the case, he contends, show that the allegations of the plaintiff are true. But the transaction to say the least was of a very peculiar character. We do not find any proper explanation for the fact that although the bill was presented some time in May or June 1913, if the evidence of the plaintiff is to be accepted on that point, it was noted on only in 1915 and no action was taken on the bill for two years. Then there is really no evidence that any notice of dishonour was given to the first defendant within a reasonable time after such dishonour. The plaintiff says that before instituting the suit, that is, some time in 1915 he asked the 1st defendant for payment and that he promised to pay. That seems to me to be an absolute untruth. The defence of the 1st defendant is that the bill had been long ago discharged. It is inconceivable that, if the plaintiff made a demand upon him, he should have promised to pay. The learned Advocate-General has not really relied on the noting such as there is on this bill for the purpose of drawing any presumption of presentment and dishonour. It is a most peculiar entry by the Notary Public of Rangoon. All that it contains is 'noted for non-payment.' It does not give the date of dishonour as required by section 99 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. Then there is no certificate of protest within the meaning of sections 100 and 101 of the Act. It is only where there is a proper protest that section 119 would apply requiring the Court to presume the fact of dishonour.

As regards the question of discharge, it is one of the pleas of the 1st defendant. Of course the onus lies upon him to prove it. His allegation is that this bill was drawn in order to pay the price of some diamonds which he bought from the 2nd defendant. He says that at his instance the 3rd defendant pledged these diamonds as well as some of his own jewels with one Puduvayal firm and that the 3rd defendant retained this Hundi as a sort of security, although afterwards he (1st defendant) paid off the Puduvayal firm and redeemed the jewels by raising the money from one Thenappa Chetty. This Thenappa Chetty has not been examined, although he was present in Court being brought up under warrant. Nor is there any receipt to show payment either to the 2nd defendant or to the Puduvayal firm. While I am not prepared to say that the entire story of the defence in this connection is unfounded since there is no explanation forthcoming as to why no action was taken nearly two years after the alleged dishonour, at the same time the onus being on the 1st defendant to prove this plea it cannot be said that the evidence, such as it is, has made it out. However, the 1st defendant seems to be entitled to succeed on the other points which I have dealt with.

Then the learned Advocate-General drew our attention to the unhappy wording of sections 91 to 94 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. Section 91 defines dishonour by non-acceptance, section 92 defines dishonour by non-payment and says: 'A promissory note, bill of exchange or cheque is said to be dishonoured by non payment when the maker of the note, acceptor of the bill or drawee of the cheque makes default in payment upon being duly required to pay the same.' Section 93 provides for notice being given in case of dishonour by non-acceptance or non-payment. The learned Advocate-General's argument is that these sections cannot apply to the present case inasmuch as this is not a bill payable after sight or after a fixed date, and, therefore, there can be no question here of acceptance or non-acceptance. Section 92 which defines dishonour by non-payment only deals, it is said, with the default of the acceptor of the bill and not the default of the drawee in cases where the bill does not require to be accepted. But the effect of this argument, if sound, pushed to its logical conclusion must be that there was no dishonour at all in this case, and the suit must on that account fail, because the effect of section 30 of the Act is that the drawer of a bill of exchange is bound to compensate the holder only in case of dishonour by the drawee or acceptor. We were referred to section 37 as also defining the liability of the drawer. That section only says that the drawer of a bill of exchange until acceptance is liable as principal debtor. But if the argument of the Advocate General is right, there could be no question of acceptance in this case and section 39 would have no application.

Apart from that, I do not think that the Legislature intended to lay down that in the case of a bill payable at sight or on demand there can be no dishonour by non-payment. In fact such a position seems to me to be so untenable that the Court would not be justified in imputing any such intention to the Legislature, if it could be helped. As is well known, the Negotiable Instruments Act was based on the principles of English Law. The drafting of some of these sections seems to be rather loose, especially as regards the collocation of certain important phrases. For instance section 93, paragraph 2, is to this effect: "Nothing in this section renders it necessary to give notice to the maker of the dishonoured promissory note or the drawee or acceptor of the dishonoured bill of exchange or cheque." Now if we were to proceed on the line of interpretation suggested by the learned Advocate-General, then we will have to apply the word acceptor to cheques, while in the case of cheques there could hardly have been any question of acceptance within the contemplation of the Legislature. Similar wording occurs in other sections as well. For instance, section 99 says: "When a promissory note or a bill of exchange has been dishonoured by non-acceptance or non-payment, the holder may cause such dishonour to be noted by a Notary Public upon the instrument;" surely the Legislature could not have intended non-acceptance to be applicable to promissory notes and not to bills of exchange, although that will be the result of the order in which the words are allocated. I think the difficulty suggested by the arguments on behalf of the respondent may be met at least in two ways. Section 30 lays down that a drawee is liable to compensate the holder in case of dishonour, provided due notice of dishonour has been given as provided by the Act. Then section 93 says that in case of non-acceptance or non-payment of a promissory note, bill of exchange or cheque, the holder must give notice that the instrument has been dishonoured. I take it that what the Legislature meant was that notice of dishonour should be given either of non-acceptance or non-payment, whichever may be the case in the transaction in question. Then section 94 lays down that such notice must be given within a reasonable time after dishonour. Section 93 indicates the parties to whom notice is to be given in cases where there is a succession of indorsers. But section 30 is specifically applicable to the case of a drawer, and that read with section 94 would be sufficient, so far as the liability of the drawer is concerned, to show that notice of dishonour is to be given in reasonable time. But it seems to me to be quite reasonable on the other hand to go further and say that sections 91, 92 and 93 were intended to be applicable to a bill payable on demand. It is quite true that the law does not require that in case of such bills there should be a presentment for acceptance. But if the drawee of a bill payable on demand refused to accept it, its practical effect is refusal to pay and becomes dishonour by non-payment. That is to say, there is nothing in law which precludes a bill payable on demand being presented for acceptance, although that may not be necessary. The word 'acceptance' is not defined but 'acceptor' is: the drawee becomes the acceptor when he has signed his assent upon the bill. The English Statute, Bills of Exchange Act, defines acceptance as the signification by the drawee of his assent to the order of the drawer. That is clearly what is implied in the definition of the word acceptor in the Negotiable Instruments Act, and I do not see why it should not apply as much to a bill payable on demand as to a bill payable after sight or on a fixed date. Section 18 of the English Act says that a bill may be accepted when it is overdue. That would apply as well to a bill payable on demand as to a bill payable after sight. Section 30 of the same Act corroborates this interpretation. It says that in the case of a bill payable after sight presentment for acceptance is necessary in order to fix the maturity of the instrument, but in no other case is presentment for acceptance necessary in order to render liable any party to the bill. That implies that there may be presentment for acceptance of a bill payable on demand although it is not required by the law. The Negotiable Instruments Act does not expressly lay down that bills payable on demand or bills other than those payable after sight need not be presented for payment. But this undoubtedly followed from sections 61 and 64 which describe the bills that are required to be presented for payment or acceptance.

I am fortified in my interpretation of the Act with respect to this matter by a decision of the Bombay High Court in Ram Ravji Jambhekar v. Pralhaddas Subkarn (1). That was a case of a bill payable after a fixed date, but it was presented for acceptance before the expiry of that date although the Negotiable Instruments Act does not contemplate such presentment. The drawee refused to accept the bill and it was never presented for payment afterwards. It was held that there was a good cause of action and the learned Judges observe at pages 141 and 142 that although the law does not require presentment for acceptance of a bill payable after a fixed date before such date has arrived, yet under the English Law it was not only allowable but was strongly advisable to do so, and that the Negotiable Instruments Act made no alteration in that respect. They point out that presentment for acceptance must always and in every case precede presentment for payment, and that the drawer of a bill contracts that whenever a bill is duly presented, it will, subject to the provisions of section 63, be accepted. Then they say when it is dishonoured by non-acceptance, as well as when it is dishonoured by non-payment, the provisions of Chapter VIII (in which sections 91 to 94 occur) come into play. They point out: 'It is true that there is no explicit declaration of the law upon this subject as in section 43 of the English Act. But the whole scope and tenor of Chapter VIII of the Indian Act appear to contemplate the same result as is there declared to follow from non acceptance.' I may also refer to a ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Jeetun Lall v. Sheo Churn (2), which was before the passing of the Negotiable Instruments Act. It shows that the provisions of the Negotiable Instruments Act are really based on the principles of the English Common Law relating to mercantile instruments, and there can be no doubt whatever that, as pointed out there, the law has always been both in England and in India that there must be dishonour and notice of dishonour given within reasonable time in order to sustain an action against the drawee or any other holder of the bill.

The appeal of the 1st defendant must, therefore, be allowed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge as against him will be set aside and the suit against him dismissed with costs here and in the Court below.

OLDFIELD, J.—I agree with my learned brother's decision on the questions of fact and of law.

As regards the latter I wish to add only that the law of negotiable instruments is, as it has been described, cosmopolitan: and in the present case, where we have no special considerations arising with reference to the circumstances of Indian business we are justified in endeavouring to read the Statute, if it is possible to do so, conformably to the provisions of the English Law, which follows the general commercial law of the rest of the world. There is no dispute that under the English Law the argument of the learned Advocate-General would be absolutely unsustainable, and a reference to the Bills of Exchange Act is sufficient to show that. In those circumstances it is our duty to scrutinize the language used in the Negotiable Instruments Act most carefully, and I am glad to be able to hold that the refusal to pay referred to in section 92 includes the refusal to accept such as is contemplated in section 91, which is a possible, though not an invariable or obligatory, preliminary to payment being demanded at all. That is shortly the ground on which I agree with my learned brother.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 696 OF 1918.
May 14, 1919.
Present:— Mr. Justice Walsh and Mr. Justice Stuart.
PURAN MAL—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versus
MESSRS. FORD AND MACDONALD AND COMPANY, LTD.—PLAINTIFFS RESPONDENTS.

Accounts, settled, re-opening of—Fraud, proof of—

PURAN MAL v. FORD AND MACDONALD & CO., LTD.

Error, whether ground for re-opening accounts—Principal and agent—Agent, duty of—Suit by principal for account of profits earned by agent out of rival business, nature of—Limitation, commencement of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 62, 90.

As the law on the question of re-opening settled accounts is not contained in any Indian legislative enactment, the guiding principles of English law must be applied, whereby a Court will re-open an account only where the accounts are shown to be erroneous to a considerable extent both in amount and the number of items, or where fiduciary relations exist and a less considerable number of errors is shown, or where the fiduciary relation exists and one or more fraudulent omissions or insertions in the account are shown. [p. 375, col. 2; p. 376, col. 1.]

A firm instituted a suit against its former agent, (a) to re-open a settled account, and (b) for an account of the profits which the defendant had made in a business similar to that of the plaintiff firm and owned by the defendant. It appeared that the plaintiff firm were engaged in an extensive brick-making business, and had employed the defendant as one of their agents in charge of an agency. After very many years' service, they discovered that the defendant was interested in, if not the actual proprietor of, a brick-making business at a place some 5 or 6 miles from where the firm's agency was located, and which, in some respects, was adverse to the interests of the firm. His services were accordingly dispensed with but, before he made over charge of the agency, a settlement took place between himself and an accredited representative of the firm, an entry being made in the ledger that the accounts had been checked and the cash balance found correct. Charge was then made over on that date of the stock and cash in hand, the entry being signed by the defendant and the representative of the firm. Subsequently, the firm instituted the present suit. The trial Court dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court, however, decreed the re-opening of the account, and for a rendition of accounts of the defendant's business, holding that in at least five instances fraud had been established against the defendant, and that in one instance an error of very great importance was shown. On appeal to the High Court:

Held, (1) that there was no legal justification for the finding of fraud, inasmuch as no specific instance of fraud had been alleged in the plaint and the finding was based on a superficial investigation and either on no evidence or on a careless view of the evidence; [p. 376, col. 1; p. 377, cols. 1 & 2; p. 378, col. 1.]

(2) that, therefore, the claim for re-opening of the accounts was not sustainable: [p. 378, col. 1.]

(3) that as regards the claim for rendition of the accounts of the defendant's business, the suit was governed by either Article 62 or Article 90 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act, and not having been brought within the period prescribed therein, it was barred by limitation. [p. 378, col. 2; p. 379, col. 1.]

It is the duty of an agent not merely to do nothing to injure the interests of his principal, but to do all in his power to further them, and, therefore, not to place himself in a position in which his interests might be adverse to those of his principal. [p. 378, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Second Additional Judge, Aligarh.

Messrs. G W. Dillon, Satya Chandra Mukerji and Girdhari Lal Agarwala, for the Appellant.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen and Mr. Purshottam Das Tandon, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

WALSH, J.—This was a suit brought by a firm, Messrs. Ford and MacDonald and Co., Ltd., against their former agent Puran Mal and another man Badri Prasad who is not before us. The plaintiff Company is now a limited liability Company. It was formerly a firm of considerable standing and carried on an extensive business, a large portion of which was devoted to the making and selling of bricks. While it remained in its original form as a firm and for some two years after the formation of the limited Company, the present appellant, who was sued by the plaintiff Company, was their agent to manage the Saharanpur branch and others. There were in addition to the agencies committed to his charge other agencies, Badri Prasad being the agent for the Agra branch which included a sub-agency at Muttra. The defendant Puran Mal worked for this firm for very many years, and it is not unimportant, having regard to the charges now made against him, to bear in mind that he was given, according to the evidence in the case, a pretty free hand and apparently during a long period of service gave satisfaction. We mention that fact because we think that amidst the difficulties of ascertaining the exact truth with regard to each item in the books, perhaps sufficient importance has not been given to the fact that Puran Mal was left very much with a free hand, the result of that policy being not, of course, to entitle a man to rob his principal, but, on the other hand, necessarily to result in a somewhat less exact and precise method of recording his transactions. Mr. Parry, who was at the material time a principal of the firm, or director of the Company, and who is now Municipal Engineer at Cawnpur, gave evidence in the case and said that Puran Mal left the employment of the firm in December 1913 by mutual consent, largely on account of the firm having discovered at some prior date Puran Mal's connection with, if not proprietorship of, a brick-making business in Bindraban, which is some six or seven miles from Muttra and which could hardly fail in some respects to be adverse to the interests of his employers who were largely concerned in the brick-making business. What he said was:— "We were annoyed with Puran Mal on his working a brick kiln at another place, probably at Bindraban, and so we dispensed with his services. We did not dismiss him. The work at Delhi agency was complete or nearly so and we could not find work for Puran Mal at another agency. That was also one of the reasons of his services being dispensed with." When Puran Mal left, the accounts up to that date between his principals and himself were necessarily considerable and the course of business had covered a considerable period. At that date, a settlement took place between Puran Mal himself and an accredited representative of the firm. It was not drawn up in any formal document but an entry was made in the ledger, which we have seen, stating that the accounts have been checked and the cash balance in hand is ascertained and found correct. The charge was made over on that date with stock and Rs. 9-8-9 in cash, some of which was noted to consist of bad coins. These entries in the ledger were signed by Puran Mal on his own behalf and Mr. Lansbury on behalf of the plaintiff firm; inasmuch as no other interview took place at which any suggested settlement was attempted, we are satisfied that this was, as it has been called, a settlement of accounts stated between the parties finally settling their respective claims up to that date, with the exception of a private account or bonus account in the form of commission which Puran Mal had against his employers. In respect to this latter transaction, Puran Mal was eventually driven to bring a suit in the year 1914 and he claimed in that suit Rs. 40,000 and the claim was compromised at a sum of Rs. 20,000. It is not without bearing upon the general aspects of the case that, although the plaintiffs' Counsel was justified in saying that the plaintiffs were not bound to bring a cross-claim or a cross-suit to assert the claim that they are now making, nonetheless they refrained from doing so. Subsequently, a person of the name of Manphul appeared upon the scene as a kind of expert, or private detective, and entered the employment of the firm after having been unsuccessfully prosecuted by them through Puran Mal, and it is largely the result of his industry that the plaintiff Company, the leading members of which had been replaced by some other persons who had taken an interest in the Company, filed this suit claiming against the two defendants, the present appellant and his co-defendant Badri Prasad, (a) to re open the settled accounts, and (b) an account of profits which Puran Mal had been making in a separate brick making business of his own at Bindraban, which Mr. Parry has mentioned as the cause of the determination of his agency. The first Court dismissed the plaintiffs' claim with a certain amount of contempt. On appeal the lower Appellate Court has decreed against both defendants the re opening of their accounts with the plaintiff firm, obviously leading to a very serious and elaborate enquiry, and also a rendition of account as against Puran Mal of the brick-making business at Bindraban. The question we have to decide is, whether those decisions or either of them is right. The judgment of the learned District Judge has been defended by the plaintiffs' Counsel, Mr. Bradley, who argued his case with great ability and gave us every assistance in the investigation of this troublesome matter. As we have stated, the claim consisted of two perfectly distinct causes of action. The first cause of action was sought to be established by six specific items which have been dealt with by the lower Appellate Court, being instances of cases in which it is alleged that it can now be shown that Puran Mal, to put the matter plainly, robbed his employers. In five of those instances the learned Judge has held that clear cases of fraud have been established. With regard to the sixth he has come to the conclusion that an error of very great importance is shown.

The law on the question of re-opening settled accounts is not contained in India in any express enactment. Applying the ordinary rule, we have, therefore, to ascertain as best we can what are the guiding principles of the English Law upon the question, which is generally considered to be the test of equity, justice and good conscience. The leading case upon the subject appears to be Williamson v. Barbour (1) decided by the Master of the Rolls, Sir George Jessel, in 1877, and the rule applicable to this class of cases and which we propose to apply in this appeal is stated in these words: "Where you show a single fraudulent entry in the case of persons occupying the position of principal and agent, or trustee and cestui que trust, the Court has actually opened an account extending over a greater number of years and closed for a much longer period than the account I have before me. I mean in the case of Allfery v. Allfery (2) before Lord Cottenham. We, therefore, have this as a sort of guide without laying down any general rule, because every case must depend on its own circumstances, that where the accounts have been shown to be erroneous to a considerable extent both in amount and in the number of items or where fiduciary relations exist and a less considerable number of errors are shown or where the fiduciary relation exists and one or more fraudulent omissions or insertions in the account are shown, there the Court opens the account and does not merely surcharge and falsify." So far as India is concerned, that authority has been adopted by the Bombay High Court in the case of Boo Jinatboo v. Sha Nagar Valab Kanji (3), and we adopt that as being the law governing the Courts in India.

Personally I would myself have thrown out a greater part of this suit, if not the suit in its entirety, upon the grounds laid down in the judgment of Lord Westbury in Parkinson v. Hanbury (4), that substantially no attempt was made in the plaint to specify any single instance upon which the plaintiffs relied for opening up the whole account. It is perfectly true that the burden of requiring the plaintiffs to do that lies on the defendant, and in this case the defendant did not exercise the right which he had. But nonetheless the Court cannot escape its own duty by the neglect of the parties and in my view, at any rate in a suit of this character, nothing can illustrate more forcibly, than the difficulty which we have ourselves experienced in hearing the appeal, the necessity of insisting upon the plaintiff making clear, both to the Court and his opponent, all the precise matters relied upon. Not a single instance of the specific fraud eventually found by the lower Appellate Court in this case is alleged with any approach to specification or any approximation to precision or accuracy in the plaint, and the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has, on a good deal of plausible suggestion, which after all was really based on a superficial investigation, found these five specific cases of fraud without, in our opinion, any legal justification for such finding. The fundamental defect which runs through the learned Judge's consideration of the case—I may note here that Mr. Bradley rightly urged upon us that we had no right to interfere, and we do not propose to interfere, with any specific findings of fact arrived at by the learned Judge if they are supported by any evidence—is that he overlooked the admitted fact which was common ground throughout the case that the accounts under enquiry had been submitted to a systematic and periodical audit by one of the employees of the plaintiff Company and also the whole account had in the ordinary way of business firms been audited from time to time by a firm of professional accountants. Neither of the auditors was called to explain how these matters, which the learned Judge has found were deceits practised upon the firm, escaped the observation of the auditors themselves. In most, if not all, of the important cases we have investigated the entries in the books. They contain auditors' checks, which lead us to think that they had been properly vouched in the presence of the auditors. No material vouchers have been produced by the plaintiff Company and no body in the plaintiffs' employment, who could throw any light upon these transactions and was employed by them at the time they took place, was called. The only person who could be described as a member of the firm and was put in the box is Mr. Parry, and his evidence as far as it went was in favour of the defendant. The whole case seems to have been built up by the investigation of this expert detective, who had no first hand knowledge of the subject, with the addition of surmise and suspicion resulting, as is not unusually the case, in a good deal of misunderstanding and vague inference.

The first case taken by the learned Judge, and as he candidly says in his judgment it was one which substantially influenced his mind in deciding at least one if not more than one of the other cases, was an alleged fraud by the defendant in wrongfully appropriating to himself a sum of Rs. 2,000. The highest at which this case can be put in fact against the defendant, and we are by no means satisfied that even this is shown by the books, but accepting the learned Judge's finding upon it, is this that from the 8th of April 1911 to the 31st of May 1911 the defendant kept in his own possession and used for his own purpose a sum of Rs. 2,000 which belonged to his principals. Inasmuch as the whole of the working capital was floating and considerable cross accounts were carried on between the various branches, it is by no means clear that the principals were deprived of the benefit of this sum. But if they were, all they could possibly have lost was a sum of Rs. 23 calculated as interest at the rate of eight per cent. for the use of the money during that period. Inasmuch as this money was used, whether rightly or wrongly, by Puran Mal at a time when his principals were indebted to him in a sum of at least Rs. 10,000, if not considerably more, it is difficult to understand how anybody could have convinced himself that this was a clear case of fraud. It does not bear a scintilla of fraudulent characteristic about it, and we do not agree with the view which Mr. Bradley pressed upon us that the facts so stated would constitute an offence under the Penal Code.

The next finding is even more lamentable, because the conclusion seems to have been arrived at by an extremely careless view of the material evidence on the point. In the account which the plaintiffs seeks to re-open was alleged to be a debt due to the firm from a man named Karehra of Rs. 230. This debt was the balance of an account earlier in date, shown to be due from the man in September 1912. The account, as we have said, was closed in December 1913. It was, therefore, necessary to show if this, as the learned Judge has said, were a clear case of fraud, that the Rs. 230 had been paid to Puran Mal and that when he carried it forward as a debt due to the firm he knew that the debtor had discharged it before September 1913. There is not a scrap of evidence upon the point. The man went into the box and told the story, which we have no right either to believe or disbelieve and which the learned Judge accepted, that he had at some time or another worked off this Rs. 230 with Puran Mal in labour. If that is true, it was a very improper proceeding on the part of Puran Mal, but it ought to have been obvious that if it took place after December 1913 it could have no bearing upon the account. Nobody condescended to ask him the question when the work was done in payment of this account, and it is entirely consistent with the evidence in the case that it was done in the year 1914 or even later. That being so, the case of fraud wholly breaks down.

As to the third item it is sufficient to say that it is not shown that the payment in question, namely Rs. 200, was not misappropriated by Badri Prasad if by anybody and the respondents' Counsel had to admit that the learned Judge himself had come to a finding on this point, namely, that the money was restored after nine months, without any evidence to justify it. It is clear that the learned Judge did not investigate this case.

In the fourth case a sum of Rs. 637 is alleged to have been paid in advance to a contractor. The learned Judge did not trouble to investigate whether a voucher existed for this payment although in fact it must have been vouched by the auditors, but further than that the learned Judge merely came to the same conclusion that either the defendant or somebody else must have received the money. Upon such a conclusion as this no charge of fraud can be held to be established.

In the fifth case, which is a small item and in which the defendant is supposed to have supplied flour to his friends at the expense of his principals, it is sufficient to say that the learned Judge assumes, we have little doubt, because of the adverse findings at which he has arrived at the earlier stage of the case, that the defendant had in fact done so. There is really not evidence worthy of the name to establish fraud.

The sixth item is held by the learned Judge to be a serious error. It may have been an error in the account, we are not called upon to decide one way or the other; but if it be one, it is an error of the Agra agency for which Badri Prasad would be answerable and not this defendant.

So far as I am concerned, the five main charges having wholly broken down, I should in any event have been prepared to treat a mistake of this kind as one of little or no importance. Certainly there is no such ground as justifies the re-opening of the account within the rule of Williamson v. Barbour (1). In our opinion, the case for re-opening accounts fails and further the plaintiffs have also failed to make out a case for surcharging the defendant with any specific item. This portion of the suit must be dismissed with costs.

We now come to the second cause of action, which from the legal point of view has given us a little trouble. As I have already stated, the defendant in some way or another, the facts are not at all clearly found but the substance is not disputed by the defendant, became interested in, if not a proprietor of, a brick-making business in Bindraban and ran this concurrently with the agency which he was carrying on for the plaintiffs, so near to Muttra that it is impossible for anybody to say that within the meaning of section 88 of the Indian Trusts Act of 1882 his interest might not become adverse to Messrs. Ford and MacDonald and Co., Ltd. To put the matter plainly Messrs. Ford and MacDonald and Co., Ltd., had a sub-branch at Muttra interested in carrying on their business as a whole which, as I have said, included brick-making on a considerable scale and it was the duty of the defendant as agent, not merely to do nothing to injure the interests of the firm, but to do all in his power to further them, and, therefore, not to place himself in a position in which his interests might be adverse. It is quite obvious that with a brick-making business belonging to the defendant at Bindraban in the same district where prices would, no doubt, rule at the same rate, an order for bricks arriving addressed to him at Muttra and dealt with by one of his servants at Muttra might quite easily have been forwarded to and executed by his brick-making business at Bindraban. It is not necessary for us to look outside the provisions of the section. We think that that section made him hold any pecuniary advantage which he derived from the Bindraban brick business for the benefit of Messrs. Ford and MacDonald and Co., Ltd.

In this respect we agree with the lower Appellate Court. The question which has given us trouble has been whether this really gives the plaintiffs any cause of action and justifies us in ordering an account of that business to be taken. We have come to the conclusion that whichever way the thing is looked at, the present claim of the plaintiffs, brought as and when it was, is barred by Statute and must be dismissed. It is clear law that the liability of an agent for a specific sum in his hands, such as pecuniary benefit mentioned by section 88 of the Indian Trusts Act or any other money earned or stolen by him in his capacity as agent and which the law makes him liable to pay over to his employer, whether fraud enters into the cause of action or not, is money which could be, in ordinary common law Courts in England, recovered from the agent as money had and received to the use of the principal. In this view of the case Article 62 of the Limitation Act applies, and the time within which the suit must be brought begins to run from the time when the money is received. This suit was brought on the 12th of December 1916. There is no evidence that any profit had been derived from this business within three years of that date. It is not always possible to state with mathematical precision the precise scientific definition of an action of this kind. The cause of action arises out of mixed considerations, and we are not prepared to say that it may not come within the definition contained in Article 90 of the Limitation Act. It may well be described as a suit by the principal against the agent in respect of either misconduct, or at any rate neglect of his master's interests within the meaning of that Article. As a matter of fact most actions of this kind can probably be brought within at least two if not three of the definitions given in the very long schedule to the Statute of Limitation. But this alternative does not assist the plaintiffs, and it is, therefore, immaterial whether the view which we prefer, namely, Article 62, or the view that Article 90 is applicable, be the correct view. In the case of Article 90 the plaintiffs would have to sue within three years of the neglect or the misconduct coming to their knowledge. The notice of dismissal in this case was given on the 12th of November 1913, more than three years before the institution of the suit. It is admitted by the only representative of the plaintiffs who was called that that notice was largely influenced by the knowledge of this business. The action is also, therefore, barred by limitation under that article The appeal must be allowed and as regards the defendant the suit wholly dismissed here and below with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

STUART, J.—I have very little to add. I find that none of the instances as established can bring the case within the essential conditions laid down in Williamson v. Barbour (1). The re-opening of the account cannot be justified. I should have doubts, even if these instances had been established better than they were, whether they would be of sufficient importance to justify a re-opening of an account which had been closed, in view of the facts that the members of the firm had had every opportunity of ascertaining the accuracy or inaccuracy of the entries, that the accounts had been audited by competent auditors, and that Puran Mal's conduct had not been criticised or made the subject of complaint by any of the persons entrusted with the management until some period after he had severed his connection with the firm. With regard to the question of limitation in connection with the profits of the Bindraban business, the learned Counsel for the respondents has brought to our notice the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Asghar Ali Khan v. Khurshed Ali Khan (5) and of a Bench of the High Court of Calcutta in Shib Chandra Roy v. Chandra Narain Mukerjee (6). In the Privy Council case their Lordships have found that Article 89 applied to a suit brought by one brother against another brother in respect of old accounts connected with profits of joint family property. They held that each brother was an agent of the other brother and applying Article 89 in a suit for account of profits received, they found that money was moveable property within the meaning of the Article. In the second case it was also clear that the amount had been received by an agent on behalf of his principal, for his principal and in the name of his principal, and adopting the same view that money was moveable property, a Bench of the High Court of Calcutta applied the same Article. But here the case is very different. If Puran Mal had received the profits of the Bindraban business as agent for Messrs. Ford and MacDonald & Co., Ltd., Article 89 would undoubtedly apply, but here the case is that he was working against the interests of Messrs. Ford and MacDonald & Co., Ltd., and Messrs Ford and MacDonald & Co., Ltd., in preference to suing him for damages have chosen to claim under the provisions of section 85 of the Trusts Act the profits which he may have made in the business. I do not see how by any possible reasoning the profits of the Bindraban business could be considered to be moveable property received by Puran Mal on behalf of Messrs. Ford and MacDonald & Co, Ltd. Those profits were not received by Puran Mal for Messrs. Ford and MacDonald's use within the meaning of the word in English Law, for they were not received on their account. Therefore, it is established that Article 89 would not apply in this case. It is not of importance whether Article 62 or Article 90 applies. One must apply and under either this portion of the suit is barred by limitation. I agree with the decision that the appeal must be allowed and the suit against Puran Mal dismissed with costs.

BY THE COURT.—We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit as against Puran Mal with costs here and below. Costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Kistna at Ellore, in Original Suit No. 50 of 1917.

Mr. V. Suryanarayana, for the Appellants—The suit for declaration is maintainable under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The effect of the widow's setting up the Will giving her power to adopt is to challenge plaintiff's right to succeed to her. He can at once establish his right. The suit is in the nature of a suit quia timet. To deny to him the right to sue for a declaration would virtually be to deny to him the right to contest the Will. He need not wait to exercise his right till the best evidence has disappeared. This is a matter in which the Court will wisely exercise its discretion of allowing a declaratory suit. Padmanabjudu v. Buchamma (1).

has been dissented from in Padmanabjudu v. Buchamma (1), which I prefer to follow. I am unable to agree with the observation in the former case that section 42 of the Specific Relief Act does not authorize such a suit as this. The effect of the widow's setting up a Will giving her power to adopt is, in my opinion, to challenge the absolute right of the plaintiff to succeed on her death if he survives her, and to convert him, in the language of English Law, from an heir apparent into an heir-presumptive. The rule that Courts in India will not entertain a suit by the plaintiff for a declaration that he is a nearer reversioner than the defendant is not, in my opinion, based on the view that such a suit does not come within the terms of section 42, but on the settled practice of the Court in the exercise of its discretion under the section, and has been so treated by Lord Parker of Waddington in Saudagar Singh v. Pardip Narayan Singh (3). Where a Will giving authority to adopt is being set up by a widow, it is expedient that the question should be settled at once, and not left open until the best evidence has disappeared, and a suit such as this may, therefore, be regarded as in the nature of a suit quia timet. I would allow the appeal, reverse the decree, and remand the suit for disposal according to law.

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Patna, dated the 2nd December 1918.

Mr. Sd. Mohd. Hafiz, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sd. Mohd. Tahir, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This miscellaneous appeal comes before me from the decision of the District Judge of Patna, dated the 2nd December 1918.

The plaintiff sues as a co-sharer proprietor to recover in one suit his share of the rent of more than one holding without joining his other co sharers as parties to the suit.

The tenant against whom the decree has been obtained contends, first, that the decree so obtained is not a rent decree in the ordinary acceptation of the term as understood and defined by the Bengal Tenancy Act, but that it is merely a money decree, and that consequently in the execution of such decree the plaintiff as a co sharer proprietor is not entitled to bring the holding to sale in respect of such decree. Secondly, it is contended by the tenant by way of petition against the sale of the holding in execution proceedings, that the holding being non-transferable by custom the tenant is entitled to prohibit the landlord from selling the same without the tenant's consent, if the holding is brought to sale in execution of a rent decree.

The learned Munsif found in favour of the respective contentions put forward on behalf of the tenant, and struck off the execution proceedings. On the other hand the learned District Judge took a contrary view and held that though the decree that was obtained was strictly speaking a money decree, that yet as it was a decree between two persons occupying the position of landlord and tenant, the tenant was debarred from raising as against the landlord the contention that the holding could not be sold by reason of there being no custom in favour of transferability, and the learned Judge, therefore, directed that the execution proceeding should proceed. In my opinion the learned Judge was clearly wrong in the conclusion at which he arrived.

It is established by a long and consistent line of authority that where a landlord seeks to recover in one suit the rent of more than one holding, a decree so obtained in such suit is a money decree and not a rent decree, and this is so in cases where a landlord as a co sharer seeks to recover in one suit his shares of the rent of more than one holding, without joining his co-sharer proprietors as parties to the suit. All the cases are collected in Mr. Sen's Book on Bengal Tenancy Act, page 602. In all there are some 12 or 15 authorities in support of the contention put forward by the defendant. The following authorities may be referred to:—

Hridaynath Das Chowdhry v. Krishna Prasad Sircar (1), Baikanta Nath Roy v. Thakur Debendro Nath Sahi (2), Bipra Das Dey v. Rajaram Bandopadhya (3) and Rashmohini Dasi v. Debendra Nath Singha (4).

Accordingly in my opinion the decree that was obtained by the plaintiff in this suit was not a rent decree, but a money decree; and the fact that the co-sharer proprietors of the plaintiff were not joined as parties to the proceedings, in my opinion, negatives the possibility of the decree that was obtained by the plaintiff being a rent decree.

The question remains to be considered whether the defendant as a tenant is entitled to object to the landlord selling the holdings in respect of which a decree for rent was obtained, on the ground that the holdings were not transferable by custom.

This proposition has been considered three times in this High Court since its constitution and the point now urged before me seems amply covered by authority. The case reported as Macpherson v. Debi

(1) 34 C. 293; 11 C. W. N. 497; 6 C. L. J. 153.
(2) 11 C. W. N. 676.

(4) 13 Ind. Cas. 604; 16 C. W. N. 395.

Bhushan Lal (5) is an express authority that a tenant in execution proceedings is entitled to assert the right that the landlord is not entitled to bring a holding to sale in pursuance of a rent decree if the holding is not transferable. A tenant's right of occupation of a non-transferable holding is merely a personal right which a tenant is entitled to assert as against his landlord, and a landlord has a corresponding right as against his tenant; and this is so whether the alienation contemplated by either is voluntary or involuntary.

The cases reported as Macpherson v. Debi Bhushan Lal (5) was followed in a later case reported as Madhu Padhan v. Jagu Jena (6). The case reported as Madhu Padhan v. Jagu Jena (6) is stated to be distinguishable by reason of the fact that it was a decision upon the construction of the transfer section of the Orissa Tenancy Act; but a perusal of that section would show that the principle of that decision equally applies to cases under the Bengal Tenancy Act where holdings are not transferable save by custom or consent.

Like authorities are to be found decided in the cases reported as Sadari Kunwari v. Palaknath (7). Therefore, I am satisfied on authority that the learned District Judge was wrong and that the decision of the learned Munsif was right. The plaintiffs are only entitled to a money decree and are not entitled by virtue of that fact to bring the holding to sale; and if the decree be a rent decree, the defendant as tenant is entitled as against the landlord to assert that the holding cannot be sold by reason of the fact that it is non-transferable.

Accordingly I reverse the order of the learned District Judge and I direct that the execution proceeding be struck off, and I award three gold mohurs costs as against the respondents.

Order reversed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 49—Suit to recover moveables deposited for specified period--Limitation, commencement of.

Where moveables are entrusted to any person on the condition that they will be returned on the expiry of a specified period, the fact that they are detained beyond that period and no demand is made for their return, does not render the detainer's possession unlawful. It is only when a demand is made and there is a refusal to comply with the demand that possession becomes unlawful, and the period of limitation for a suit for the return of the moveables, or, in the alternative, for their value, commences to run from the date of such refusal under Article 49 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 383, col 1.]

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Bareilly, dated the 28th March 1917.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by the plaintiff against the brother of her deceased husband for recovery of certain moveable property or in the alternative for the value thereof. The plaintiff's allegation was that her husband died on the 22nd of March 1911, and that on that date she handed over the articles claimed by her to the defendant for safe custody, as she was a minor. It appears that she was prosecuted for having poisoned the wife of the defendant and was convicted and sentenced to transportation for life. This sentence she is now serving. Her brother on her behalf sent a notice to the defendant in May 1912 demanding the articles but as they were not returned and the defendant denied that he had received them, the present suit was instituted. The Court of first instance found in favour of the plaintiff and decreed the claim. Upon appeal the learned Judge did not go into the merits. The case on the face of it was not a very probable one. There was no writing as to the receipt of the articles by the defendant and if it is true that they were handed over to the defendant and the latter, as alleged, falsely got up the criminal case and implicated her in connection with the death of his wife, it is somewhat strange that no claim was advanced until nearly three years after the date of her conviction. However, as we have said above, the learned Judge did not go into the merits of the case. He dismissed it on the ground of limitation. He holds that according to the allegation of the plaintiff's witnesses the articles were to be returned upon the expiry of the period of the plaintiff's iddat, that that period expired on the 1st of August 1911 and that the suit was instituted after three years from that date. The learned Judge was of opinion that Article 115 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act was applicable to the case. He did not find that the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses was true but he apparently decided the suit upon a mere hypothetical case. In our opinion the article applicable is Article 49, which provides for a suit for specific moveable property or for compensation for wrongfully detaining it. The present suit is for specific moveable property and in the alternative for compensation for wrongfully detaining it. The period of limitation is three years to be computed from the date when the property was wrongfully taken or when the detainer's possession became unlawful. In the present case, according to the plaintiff's allegation, the property was not wrongfully taken but it is said that the defendant detained it and his possession has thus become unlawful. The mere fact that the articles were not delivered back upon the expiry of the period of iddat did not, in our opinion, make his possession unlawful, unless a demand was made and he refused to comply with it. This was the view taken by the Madras High Court in the case of Gopalasami Iyer v. Subramania Sastri (1). That ruling was approved of by a learned Judge of this Court in Singer Manufacturing Company v. E. Felyun (2). The ground, therefore, upon which the suit has been dismissed is untenable. We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below, and as that Court has decided the suit on a preliminary point we remand the case under Order XLI, rule 23, of the Code of Civil Procedure with directions to re-admit it under its original number in the register and to dispose of it on the merits. Costs hitherto will be costs in the cause and the costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

BASUDEVA JHA AND OTHERS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, r. 97—Execution of decree—Application by auction-purchaser for recovery of possession as against prior auction-purchaser, nature of—Appeal, whether lies—Appeal, second, maintainability of.

An application by an auction-purchaser, alleging that he was obstructed by the opposite party in obtaining possession of the property purchased by him, on the ground that the latter was a prior auction-purchaser, and praying that he might be put in possession, is an application under Order XXI, rule 97, of the Civil Procedure Code and not under section 47 of the Code. [p. 384, col. 2.]

An order made under Order XXI, rule 97, of the Civil Procedure Code is not appealable to the District Court and is consequently not open to second appeal. [p. 384, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Darbhanga.

Messrs. Purnendu Narain Singh and Murari Prosad, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Lakshmi Kant Jha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—These analogous matters come before me from the judgment of the District Judge of Darbhanga and arise out of a proceeding instituted by the appellants for delivery of possession. It is a matter of dispute between the parties whether the application of the appellants was an application under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, or it was an application under Order XXI, rule 97, Civil Procedure Code. If it was an application under Order XXI, rule 97, Civil Procedure Code, then it is conceded that there was no appeal to the lower Appellate Court and consequently there is no second appeal to this Court.

The facts, so far as they are material for the purpose of these matters, are as follows. There was a decree against the respondents and in execution of that decree the appellants purchased the holding which was of the judgment-debtors. The appellants went to take possession of the property purchased by them, when they were resisted by the respondents before me who claim to be the prior purchasers of the property from the judgment-debtors. Owing to this obstruction the appellants presented a petition before the learned Munsif stating that they had been obstructed by the respondents and asking for possession to be made over to them.

It is true that the appellants did not describe their application as an application either under section 47 of the Code or an application under Order XXI, rule 97, but it is pointed out that if they were making an application under Order XXI, rule 97, the allegations would have been exactly the same. Upon the presentation of this application the respondents came before the Court and filed two petitions objecting to the deputation of the Nazir. Upon this the Court treated the appellants' petition as a petition under Order XXI, rule 97, and it proceeded to investigate the matter under Order XXI, rule 97. No objection was taken to this procedure by the appellants. The Court came to the conclusion that the decree obtained against the judgment-debtors was a money decree and that the respondents were the prior purchasers of the property. Accordingly the Court of first instance dismissed the appellants' application altogether.

The appellants appealed to the lower Appellate Court. The lower Appellate Court came to the conclusion that there was no right of appeal at all from an order passed in an application under Order XXI, rule 97. The learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the appellants in this Court contends that the application was not an application under Order XXI at all but under section 47. I am of opinion that this contention must be overruled, because, in my opinion, they never objected to the procedure adopted by the Court of first instance when the application was put in on their behalf. Therefore, it must follow that there is no appeal in this Court. The learned Vakil, however, argues that the lower Appellate Court should have decided the question whether the decree obtained by the Maharaja of Darbhanga was a rent decree or a money decree and in declining to decide that question it has declined a jurisdiction which was vested in it by law and that, therefore, this Court should interfere with that order under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. In my view the Court of first instance in an elaborate judgment came to the conclusion that the decree was a money decree and not a rent decree. It may be that that decision is erroneous, but the Court of first instance had jurisdiction to decide the question in the way it did. It follows that the learned District Judge had no power to interfere with that finding under any provision of the Code at all and, in my opinion, I have no power to interfere with the order recorded by the Court of first instance on this point. In my opinion, the second appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs and the Rule obtained by the petitioner must also be discharged with costs, which I assess at one gold mohur.

Appeal dismissed; Rule discharged.

DEBI SINGH—ACCUSED—APPELLANT
versus
EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 33—Statement in civil suit, admissibility of, in criminal case between same parties after death of deponent.

Accused, when defendant in a civil suit brought against him to recover a certain debt, produced a receipt purporting to have been signed by the plaintiff, showing that the debt had been discharged. The plaintiff was examined as a witness in the suit and he deposed that the receipt was a forgery. The prosecution of the accused was thereupon ordered, but before the trial came off the plaintiff died and his statement in the civil suit was admitted in evidence in the criminal case against the accused. The accused was convicted and the question in appeal before the High Court was, whether the statement of the deceased plaintiff was admissible in evidence and whether the Court was justified in believing that statement:

Held, that the statement had been rightly admitted; as the accused had an opportunity of cross-examining the deponent at the time the statement was made, and the proceedings were between the same parties within the meaning of the explanation to section 33 of the Evidence Act, and that if the Court was satisfied on a review of the entire evidence that the deponent had spoken the truth, his statement in the civil suit was sufficient to prove that the receipt was a forgery.

Criminal appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Aligarh, dated the 30th April 1919.

Messrs. S. C. Mukerji and Panna Lal, for the Appellant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The case against the appellant, Debi Singh, was that he produced a receipt for the payment of a sum of Rs. 2,340, which receipt purports on the face of it to have been signed by one Kishen Singh. This receipt was produced before a Civil Court when Debi Singh was being sued for the recovery of a certain debt, and his case was that he had discharged that debt in its entirety by means of the payment evidenced by the receipt above mentioned. Kishen Singh was examined as a witness before the Civil Court and deposed that the receipt was a forgery. It so happened that Kishen Singh was dead before the appellant could be put on his trial on the criminal charge; but I am satisfied that the statement of Kishen Singh made before the Civil Court has been rightly admitted in evidence. The appellant had an opportunity of cross-examining Kishen Singh at that time and the proceedings were between the same parties within the meaning of the explanation to section 33 of the Indian Evidence Act. The real question, therefore, is whether the Court below was justified in believing the sworn statement of Kishen Singh, to the effect that he had never signed this receipt. In the judgment under appeal the evidence produced in the case is set forth and discussed in considerable detail. The learned Sessions Judge has pointed out that there is a suspicious mistake apparent on the face of the receipt itself and that there is a mass of circumstantial evidence tending to show that Debi Singh could not have paid a sum of Rs. 2,340 in cash to any one on the date given in the receipt. It has been contended before me in argument that Debi Singh has really been convicted because he failed to prove affirmatively the payment of the money in question, but this is not a correct view of the case. The Court had before it the testimony of Kishen Singh, admissible under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, as already noticed. That testimony was sufficient to prove that the receipt was a forgery, if the Court was satisfied on a review of the entire evidence that Kishen Singh had spoken the truth. The circumstances relied upon in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge are, in my opinion, very strong reasons in favour of believing Kishen Singh to have spoken the truth. I think the appellant was rightly convicted and I dismiss his appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Babu SATISH CHANDRA GHOSH —RESPONDENT.

Bengal Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1884), ss. 241, 273—Building Regulations of Giridih Municipality, r. 13 (2)—Building still below plinth level—Conviction for contravention of rule, legality of.

Accused was convicted under section 273 of the Bengal Municipal Act for having infringed clauses 1 and 2 of rule 13 of the Building Regulations of the Giridih Municipality made under section 241 of the Act. The evidence for the prosecution showed that the accused had only laid the foundation a few feet below the ground level, the brickwork of which had not even reached the plinth level, and there was no evidence to show what kind of building the accused was going to construct, and whether the main building when completed would contravene the clauses of the rule for infringing which he had been convicted, nor had the Municipality taken steps to enforce the submission of a plan:

Held, that the conviction could not be maintained, because there was in fact no building in existence and it was not known whether and where the building would be erected. [p. 389, col. 1.]

Reference made under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, by the Judicial Commissioner, Chota Nagpur, dated the 23rd April 1919, in the following terms:—

"The applicant has been convicted on a summary trial of an offence under the Bengal Municipal Act for contravening the Building Regulations in force in the Municipality of Giridih and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 20. He has further been directed to comply with those regulations. He is a resident of Pachamba, which is now a portion of the Giridih Municipality.

"I have heard the Pleader for the applicant and the Public Prosecutor. The conviction is valid if the Building Regulations are in force in Pachamba but not otherwise. In my opinion they are not in force therein and accordingly I recommend that the conviction and sentence be set aside.

"The facts are briefly these.

"In November 1902, Part VI of the Municipal Act was extended to the Giridih Municipality by Notification No. 2703M. At that time Pachamba was not a part of Giridih. It is conceded on both sides that the Municipality of Giridih had been in existence for many years before 1902, although the date when it was created is not in evidence.

"On 20th May 1918 the Building Regulations with which we are now concerned and which had been framed by the Commissioners under section 241 of the Municipal Act received the sanction of the Local Government by Notification No. 6754M.

"Two days later, on 22nd May 1918, Pachamba was included within the Giridih Municipality. By Notification No. 6867M. made under sub-section 2 of section 9A, the Local Government gave effect to the proposal of the Commissioners to include Pachamba within the limits of the Giridih Municipality The notification makes no mention of Part VI.

"It does not clearly appear whether before the Building Regulations were adopted section 241 had been extended to the Giridih Municipality. Section 241, although occurring in Part VI, nevertheless is required to be specially extended by sub section 4 and it would seem such special extension is necessary before the Local Government may give its sanction to the proposed regulations under the sub-section.

"2. I will assume, as the contrary does not appear, that this section was specially extended.

"At the time when the Building Regulations were adopted Pachamba was not a part of the Municipality. The contention of the learned Public Prosecutor is that these regulations automatically came into force when Pachamba was included.

"The introduction of Part VI cannot be considered as being a normal feature of a Municipality. Section 220 makes it very clear that Part VI is not to be extended to a Municipality without the fullest formalities. The Giridih Municipality managed without Part VI for many years.

"When Part VI is introduced, it is not necessarily extended to the whole of the Municipality. Even if it is in force, the Commissioners may take steps to exclude a portion of the Municipality from its operation under section 221. Part VI can only come into force when the Commissioners have fully considered not only whether they will resolve to introduce it at all but also to what particular places within the Municipality it shall apply.

"The adoption of the argument of the learned Public Prosecutor would force us to the conclusion that the Commissioners, when they discussed the matter of the introduction of the Part VI in the year 1903, had under contemplation the extension of the Act sixteen years later to Pachamba and decided amongst themselves that it would be well if Part VI were extended also to Pachamba and that the Local Government, when they sanctioned the proposal, had the same thing in mind. Such a view is artificial.

"In my opinion Part VI is not in force in Pachamba and I consider the conviction to be illegal."

Rule 13 of the Building Regulations published in the Behar and Orissa Gazette, dated 20th May 1918, runs as follows: —

(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in these rules no building of any kind shall be erected within two feet of any public road, lane or drain, but, with the permission of the Commissioners at a meeting, platform or boundary walls may be raised under such conditions and restrictions as the Commissioners at a meeting may impose.

(2) The distance between the perpendicular from the eaves of a house to the nearest boundary of the holding on which such house has been or is about to be erected must be at least three feet and such space must be kept free from all obstructions. Provided that the Commissioners at a meeting shall have the power to exempt cases of hardship from the operation of this rule.

The case was originally heard by Das, J., on the 15th May 1919, who in view of the importance of the question involved referred it to a Divisional Bench.

Mr. Yunus, for the Petitioner, amplified the reasonings of the learned Judicial Commissioner stated in his order of reference, quoted above.

Mr. Manohar Lal (Assistant Government Advocate), on behalf of the Municipality, submitted that at the time when the Pachamba area was added to the Municipality of Giridih under section 9 (c), the Building Regulations were already in force and by virtue of this inclusion the added area enjoyed the privileges available in the Municipality as well as became subject to all laws, rules, regulations, restrictions and liabilities which obtained in the larger municipality.

The contention of the other side that under section 221 the Commissioners have never considered that Pachamba shall be subject to the operation of the Part VI, and, therefore, of the Building Regulations, is not sound because the section plainly contemplates, first, the extension of the parts of the Act referred to therein and then an exclusion, if considered necessary. Further there is no hardship to the petitioner because under section 9A he could have objected to the proposed annexation of Pachamba area. As he has not done so, he must submit to the laws that are in force in the Municipality of Giridih.

[Their Lordships intimated that this point need not be pursued further but desired to know what evidence there was on the record to shew that the accused had constructed a building in contravention of rule 13.]

The rest of the argument being on facts is not material for this report.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—This is a Reference by the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, recommending that the conviction of the accused under section 273 of the Bengal Municipal Act, III of 1884, by the Deputy Magistrate of Giridih by his judgment, dated the 10th February 1919, be set aside. The reference is opposed by the learned Assistant Government Advocate.

Mr. Yunus appears in support of the reference. The principal ground upon which the recommendation has been made by the learned Judicial Commissioner is that the place where the building in question is alleged to have been created by the accused is situate in a village called Pachamba adjoining the Giridih Municipality, to which the Building Regulations made by the Municipality of Giridih under section 241 of the Bengal Municipal Act, and sanctioned by the Local Government under clause 2 the section, do not apply. This ground does not commend itself to us. The Municipality of Giridih was created some time in the year 1902 and thereupon the Bengal Municipal Act, III of 1884, applied to and had its effect in the area declared to be within the Giridih Municipality by virtue of section 8 of the Act.

Under section 220 of the Act the provisions of Part VI only apply to a Municipality when it is expressly extended thereto by the Local Government in the manner provided by the succeeding sections. In November 1902 some time after the creation of the Giridih Municipality, Part VI of the Act was extended to the Municipality by Notification No. 2703 (M). This Part VI deals amongst other matters with rules relating to the erection and re erection of buildings within a Municipality. Section 241 in that part provides for rules to be made by Commissioners at a meeting to regulate the erection of houses, not being huts, within the Municipality in respect of all or any of the matters enumerated therein. For the first time certain rules under this section were framed by the Giridih Municipality in the year 1918, which received the sanction of the Local Government under sub-section 2 of the section on the 20th May 1918. Two days later, that is, on the 22nd May 1918, Pachamba was included within the Giridih Municipality by Notification No. 6867 (M) made and published under sub-section 2 of section 9 of the Act. From the date of the aforesaid notification the area included within what is called Pachamba village became part of the Giridih Municipality, and by virtue of section 9, clause (c), read with section 7 the Bengal Municipal Act applied in its entirety and with full force to the added area Pachamba from the said date. No doubt the Commissioners at a meeting are empowered to recommend to Government for excluding from a Municipality any local area comprised therein or to withdraw any Municipality, from the operation of the Act; but so long as this is not done, all the provisions of the entire Act in force in a Municipality, at the time when its area is extended, apply to the newly added area. It has already been shown that Part VI as well as the Building Regulations framed by the Giridih Municipality and sanctioned by the Local Government under section 241 of the said part were in full force two days before Pachamba was included within the Giridih Municipality and hence they would apply to the added area Pachamba, within the ambit of which the site on which the accused is said to have commenced the erection of the building in question is situate. Under clause (3) of the section, the building rules and regulations acquired the force of law from the 20th May 1918, when they received the sanction of the Local Government. The accused was amenable to and would have been liable for any contravention of the said rules in erecting the building in question. Had the reference rested solely upon the ground stated by the Judicial Commissioner, that Part VI or section 241 did not apply to the added area Pachamba, we would have had no hesitation in rejecting it and upholding the conviction of the accused by the Deputy Magistrate.

It appears, however, that the accused committed no offence at all under section 241 of the Act. The Magistrate has convicted him under rule 13, clauses 1 and 2 of the Building Regulations published in the Bihar and Orissa Gazette, dated the 20th May 1918.

Under clause 1 of that rule no building is permitted to be erected within two feet of a public road, lane or drain. Under clause 2 the distance between the perpendicular from the eaves of a house to the nearest boundary of the holding on which such house has been or is about to be erected must be three feet and such place must be kept free from all obstructions.

None of the clauses 1 and 2 of rule 13 apply to the present case, as there is nothing to show that the accused in any way contravened the requirements of these clauses, inasmuch as the building has not been constructed and there is no building in existence. The evidence on behalf of the prosecution shows that the accused had only laid the foundation a few feet below the ground level, the brickwork of which had not even reached the plinth level. There is nothing to show on behalf of the prosecution what kind of building the accused was going to construct and whether the main building would be two feet from the public road, or where the eaves of his house when complete would be situate, or whether a perpendicular from the eaves of that house would be situate within or beyond the prescribed limit of three feet from the road. There is no building at all at present in existence, nor is it known whether and where the actual building would be. It might be that the accused would only construct a chotera or plinth without any structure upon it. The Municipality did not take steps to enforce the submission of a plan by the accused in order to see whether the proposed building would contravene the provisions of Part VI or any of the rules and regulations framed under section 241. The prosecution was perhaps started a little too early and without any regard to the provisions of Part VI of the Act. The accused had no right to erect any building without having obtained sanction from the Municipality and without first having submitted a plan of the proposed house to the Municipality and if the Municipality had taken proper steps under the Act, there would have been a possibility of having from the accused a plan of the house and to know exactly whether the accused was going to contravene the provisions of the regulations in the construction of his house. As the matter stands at present, the accused cannot be convicted. We have no doubt declared that Pachamba, where the site of the present proposed building is situate, is within the Municipality and is governed by Part VI and the Building Regulations framed under section 241 of the Act, so that if the accused in future contravenes the provisions of the said regulations or the Act in any way by building any house on the site in question or otherwise, he will be amenable to law.

The recommendation of the Judicial Commissioner is accepted and the accused is acquitted. The fine, if already realised, must be refunded to the accused.

ATKINSON, J.—I agree.

Held, (per Richardson, J.)—That as the accused knew that the parcel sent to him contained opium, the possession of the railway receipt constituted possession of the opium within the meaning of section 9 of the Opium Act. [p. 390, col. 1.]

Per Shamsul Huda, J.—That, although, under the circumstances of the case, it was doubtful whether the accused was guilty of the offence of possessing opium under clause c), he was clearly guilty of importing opium under clause (e) of section 9 of the Opium Act. [p. 390, cols. 1 & 2.]

The Hon'ble the Advocate-General (with him Babu D. Sanyal), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—The petitioner, Fong Khun, has been convicted under section 9 of the Opium Act (I of 1878) of being in possession of contraband opium and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for six months. A railway receipt was traced to the possession of the petitioner which covered a parcel consigned to him by a correspondent in Assam. A letter addressed to the petitioner advising him of the despatch of the parcel was recovered at the same time. In that letter the contents of the parcel were described as "five numbers." The parcel was subsequently opened and found to contain five seers of opium. The circumstances leave no room for doubt that the petitioner was trafficking in smuggled opium.

It was held in Kashi Nath v. Emperor (1) that in such a case, the consignee knowing that the parcel had been sent to him and that it contained opium, the possession of the railway receipt constituted possession of the opium within the meaning of section 9 of the Opium Act. That case was followed, though reluctantly, in Ashruf Ali v. Emperor (2) and we are bound by these decisions, unless we are able to hold, as the Court held in Kali Charan Mukherjee v. Emperor (3), that on the facts they are distinguishable.

It is suggested here that because two days before the railway receipt came into the petitioner's hands, the Police, acting on information received, had told the railway parcel clerk not to part with the parcel and had tied a piece of red tape round it and sealed it, therefore, the petitioner as holder of the receipt had no possession of the parcel. The precautions taken by the Police were intended merely to prevent delivery being given without their cognizance. At the time neither the Police nor the parcel clerk knew for certain what was in the parcel. Nothing was done which affected the legal rights of the parties or deprived the petitioner of possession or right to possession under and by virtue of the receipt. His possession continued until the parcel was opened and the opium was actually seized. That was after the receipt had been obtained from the petitioner. The facts, as it seems to me, do not justify a distinction being drawn between the present case and the cases to which I have referred.

On that ground or on the ground suggested by my learned brother that the petitioner was at any rate guilty of importing opium, in my opinion this is not a case in which we ought to interfere in revision and the Rule must be discharged.

The petitioner must surrender to his bail and undergo the unexpired portion of his imprisonment.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I feel considerable doubt whether in the circumstances proved in this case the petitioner could be said to be in possession of opium within the meaning of section 9, clause (c), of the Opium Act. In my opinion, however, the petitioner was clearly guilty of importing opium under clause (e) and might have been convicted of that offence. In the view I take I do not think that this is a fit case for our interference in revision.

I accordingly agree with my learned brother in discharging the Rule.

Rule discharged.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 15 OF 1919.

June 23, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Atkinson.

BACHU BEHARI LAL—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 195, 476—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 463, 466—Order directing prosecution for forgery, whether can be made against person not party to proceedings—Offence under s. 466, Penal Code, whether included in s. 195, Criminal Procedure Code—Judicial proceeding, what is.

A plaintiff in a civil case sought to enforce a right by means of a forged deed. The Court sanctioned his prosecution for an offence under section 209 of the Penal Code. He was tried and acquitted. An appeal was then made to the Sessions Judge who, purporting to act under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, sanctioned the prosecution of the petitioner in this case for an offence under section 466 of the Penal Code. An application to revise this order was made to the High Court, and it was contended that, inasmuch as the petitioner was not a party to the civil suit out of which the original prosecution arose, the order was bad in law as made without jurisdiction:

Held, that the Sessions Judge was entitled, under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to direct the prosecution of the petitioner for forgery, irrespective of the fact that he was not a party to the original proceedings. [p. 393, col. 2.]

It was further contended that the Sessions Judge had no power to order the prosecution for an offence under section 466 of the Penal Code, because that section is not specifically mentioned in section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code:

Held, that, inasmuch as section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code confers jurisdiction to grant sanction to prosecute under section 463 of the Penal Code, and as the latter section, in its comprehensive and general terms, covers an act of a particular kind of forgery which may constitute a separate offence under the specific enumeration of crimes provided for by the Penal Code, the Sessions Judge had power to make the order. [p. 394, col. 1.]

BACHU BEHARI LAL v. EMPEROR.

Lastly, it was contended that the Sessions Judge had no right to exercise the powers vested in him by section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, inasmuch as the matter out of which the prosecution arose did not come before him in the course of a judicial proceeding:

Held, that as there was an appeal to the Sessions Judge from the order discharging the original accused under section 209 of the Penal Code lawfully presented to a proper Court and that Court was of opinion that the petitioner should be prosecuted, the Sessions Judge did have before him a judicial proceeding in the course of which he became acquainted with the facts as to the petitioner's participation in the act of forgery, and that he did not exceed his powers in making the order in question.[p. 394, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Saran, dated the 7th May 1919, directing the prosecution of the petitioner under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, which was as follows:—

"Heard argument on behalf of Bachu Behari Lal.

"My order under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, has been opposed on three grounds:—

"(1) that the proceedings in the course of which his alleged offence was brought to my notice were not judicial proceedings;

"(2) that Bachu Behari Lal not being a party to the suit in connection with which the alleged forgery is said to have been committed, no orders can be passed against him under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code;

"(3) that on the merits the case is not a strong one and conviction is doubtful.

"As regards the first point, a petition had been filed before me on behalf of the complainant Gokal Singh in a criminal case against one Bali Ram Sahai, asking me to set aside the order of discharge passed by the Deputy Magistrate in that case and to order a further enquiry. It was in connection with those proceedings that the alleged offence was brought to my notice.

"It seems to me that there can be no doubt that those proceedings before me were judicial proceedings. I cannot imagine what else they can be called.

"Reliance was placed upon the definition of judicial proceedings given in section 4, clause (m), Criminal Procedure Code, and it was urged that I was not entitled to take evidence in the course of those proceedings, hence they were not judicial proceedings. However, this definition on the face of it is not exhaustive and it shows that the words 'judicial proceedings' may also include proceedings in which evidence cannot be taken. Personally I see no reason to doubt that the proceedings before me were judicial proceedings within the ordinary meaning of the words. Moreover, the opinion expressed in Sangilia Pillai v. District Magistrate of Trichinopoly (1) supports my view.

"As regards the second objection, there is no force in it. Section 195, clause (c), Criminal Procedure Code, shows that the sanction is necessary in the case of certain offences of forgery that are committed by a party to a proceeding. In other words, persons who are not parties may be prosecuted for such offences by a private party without obtaining the sanction of the Court. This does not mean that the Court itself can take no action under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, against persons who are not parties to a case and who commit such offences. In fact the words 'when such offence has been committed by a party to any proceeding,' which are found in section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, have been expressly and purposely omitted from section 476.

"As regards the third objection that the case is not a strong one and the conviction is unlikely, I find it hard to imagine how there could be a stronger prima facie case of forgery of a judicial record; Bachu Behari Lal must certainly stand his trial.

"I, therefore, make my order absolute and I direct that Bachu Behari Lal, be prosecuted for an offence under section 466, Indian Penal Code, (or for any other offence which the evidence may disclose) upon the grounds mentioned in my proceedings of 22nd April 1919.

"Let the record with a list of prosecution witnesses be sent to the District Magistrate for favour of disposal either by himself or by some other Magistrate subordinate to him.

"Let Bachu Behari Lal, who is present in Court, be released on bail of Rs. 300 for his appearance before the District Magistrate when required."

Mr. S. P. Varma, for the Petitioner.

The Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

The arguments at the Bar are sufficiently clear from the judgment of Atkinson, J.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner in this application seeks to have the order of the learned Sessions Judge of Saran, dated the 7th May 1919, set aside.

The learned Judge by his order directed the petitioner to be prosecuted for an offence under section 466 of the Indian Penal Code.

The facts upon which this application is founded may be briefly stated.

A suit was instituted in the year 1915 bearing No. 21. It was a title suit between one Gokal Singh as plaintiff and Balaram Sahay as defendant.

By this suit Gokal Singh sought to enforce his right to a sale of certain property under a sale-deed executed in the year 1914.

The defence filed by Balaram Sahay to resist the suit was based upon a compromise effected in a previous mortgage suit; and by the defence in Suit No. 21 of 1915 it was pleaded that the sale-deed of 1914 had been annulled by virtue of the compromise. The compromise so referred to in the proceedings is Exhibit 2, and the compromise bore date 21st November 1916. The compromise was filed in Court in the original mortgage suit and in effect operated as a decree in that suit.

When Gokal Singh ascertained the nature of the defence which had been asserted by Balaram Sahay in Suit No. 21 of 1915, he immediately observed that the compromise referred to purported to annul and cancel the sale-deed. But on examination it was obvious that the compromise had been altered so as to make it appear that the sale-deed was annulled, which was never intended between the parties in the prior mortgage suit in which the compromise had been arrived at.

Accordingly Gokal Singh applied to the Subordinate Judge in Suit No. 21 of 1915 to direct the prosecution of Balaram for forgery.

The learned Subordinate Judge granted sanction and accordingly Balaram was prosecuted.

The prosecution of Balaram Sahay came before the Deputy Magistrate on the 10th March 1919 for trial, and he directed that the accused should be acquitted of the offence with which he was charged under section 209 of the Indian Penal Code, inasmuch as there was no reliable evidence against him in respect of the charge on which he had been tried.

From the order of acquittal pronounced in favour of Balaram made by the Deputy Magistrate, Gokal Singh applied to the Sessions Judge in appeal to reverse the order passed by the Deputy Magistrate, and in the course of this appeal at the suit of Gokal Singh against the order of the Deputy Magistrate, Mr. Monahan as Sessions Judge of the district of Saran directed that the petitioner Bachu Behari Lal should be prosecuted for an offence under section 466, Indian Penal Code.

The learned Sessions Judge in directing the prosecution of the petitioner purported to exercise the powers vested in him under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

It is contended before me that the order of the learned Sessions Judge is erroneous and made without jurisdiction.

Three contentions were put forward for the purpose of impeaching the order of the 7th May passed by the learned Sessions Judge.

First, it is contended that section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure incorporates within its terms all the provisions, limitations and qualifications specified in section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. That is to say, that the reference by incorporation to section 195 in section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, is not merely confined to an enumeration of the sections of offences in respect of which a Court may direct a person to be prosecuted; but it also applies with regard to the qualifications as to the persons against whom proceedings may be taken. Therefore, it is contended that inasmuch as the petitioner was not a party to the Suit No. 21 of 1915 instituted by Gokal Singh that, therefore, the Court had no power under section 476 to direct his prosecution for an offence under section 466, Indian Penal Code.

Two authorities are cited in support of this contention, viz., the rulings reported as Jadunandan Singh v. Emperor (2) and Kallaru Ramalingam, In re (3). It is perfectly true that these two decisions are authorities in favour of the contention put forward on behalf of the petitioner. Mr. Justice Mukerjee in the case reported as Jadunandan Singh v. Emperor (2) gave an elaborate judgment, in which he enunciated the principle that in construing section 476 a Court in exercising the powers conferred on it by that section must have regard to all the provisions and qualifications specified in section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

If the ruling referred to was the governing authority determining the law in this Province, no doubt the petitioner would be entitled to succeed in the application which he has made before me.

However, the ruling of Mr. Justice Mukerjee reported as Jadunandan Singh v. Emperor (2) has been dissented from in this Court. My learned brother Mr. Justice Mullick, as a member of a Division Bench of this Court, has distinctly laid down in the case reported as Abdul Sattar v. Emperor (4) that section 476 merely for the sake of abbreviation incorporates section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code within its terms qua the enumeration of offences only specifically mentioned in that section as offences under the Indian Penal Code in respect of which the persons authorised by section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code may direct the prosecution of a person guilty of any such offences.

Apart from the two decisions to which I have referred reported as Jadunandan Singh v. Emperor (2) and Kallaru Ramalingam, In re (3), the weight of judicial authority seems to be in favour of the view of the ruling of the Division Bench of this Court. It is quite erroneous for learned Counsel on behalf of the petitioner to state or argue, as he has done before me, that Mr. Justice Mullick failed to consider the importance and value of the judgments in the two reported cases which I have mentioned. Mr. Justice Mullick was emphatically of opinion that the rulings in Kallaru Ramalingam, In re (3) and Jadunandan Singh v. Emperor (2) were not acceptable or binding as a correct interpretation of the law in this Province; and ample authority will be found in support of the view of my learned brothers in the following reported cases, viz., Rajkumar Singh v. Emperor (5), Akhil Chandra Sen v. Queen Empress (6), Ganga Ram v. Emperor (7), Devji, In re (8) and Keshav Narayan Manolkar, In re (9).

Therefore, I hold that the first contention put forward by the petitioner is unmaintainable and that the learned Judge was entitled to direct his prosecution for forgery under section 476 irrespective of the fact that he was not a party to the proceedings in Suit No. 21 of 1915 instituted by Gokal Singh against Balaram.

The second argument addressed to me by Mr. Varma is clear. His argument was that the learned Judge had no power under section 476 to direct the petitioner's prosecution for an offence under section 466 of the Indian Penal Code, inasmuch as section 463 is not specifically mentioned in section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

This point was suggested by the Court when petition of admission in this matter was made to a Division Bench of this Court, and we allowed this point to be taken as an additional ground in revision by the petitioner's petition.

I am satisfied, however, after careful consideration of the matter that there is no substance in this objection.

Section 195 confers jurisdiction upon a Court to grant sanction to prosecute for an offence under section 463 of the Indian Penal Code. Section 463 is the general section which defines what forgery is, and that section is couched in wide and comprehensive terms and is intended, in my opinion, to apply to all classes and kinds of forgeries, howsoever committed.

No doubt the offence charged under section 466 against the petitioner is an offence of forgery of a Court record, a heinous and grave crime. This section deals only with a particular kind of the general species of forgery specified in section 463. It would be almost absurd to hold that section 463, which embraces all forgeries, is limited and restricted in its application so as to be inapplicable to the act of forgery committed within the meaning of section 466. The point, however, is not without authority, and I express my concurrence with the view of the law stated in the case reported as Queen-Empress v. Tulja (10). The Calcutta High Court has also taken the same view in the case reported as Teni Shah v. Bolahi Shah (11), and in both these cases it has been held that section 463 in its comprehensive and general terms covers an act of a particular kind of forgery which may constitute a separate offence under the specific enumeration of crimes provided for by the Indian Penal Code.

Therefore, I hold that on the second contention submitted the argument of the petitioner must fail.

The third and last contention submitted for my consideration was that Mr. Monahan had no right to exercise the powers vested in him under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, inasmuch as the matter out of which this prosecution has arisen did not come before him in the course of a judicial proceeding.

This contention is, in my opinion, absolutely unsustainable.

Gokal Singh preferred an appeal from the order of the Deputy Magistrate discharging Balaram Sahay of the offence with which he was charged under section 209. In the course of that proceeding there was an appeal lawfully preferred to a proper Court; that Court was of opinion, in the course of that proceeding, that Balaram was not the person to be prosecuted, but that Bachu Behari Lal was. It would be impossible to hold in point of law or fact that the learned Judge did not become acquainted with the facts as to petitioner's participation in the act of forgery relied on to justify his prosecution in the course of a judicial proceeding.

Accordingly I hold that the third argument submitted on behalf of the petitioner is unsustainable in point of law, and I accordingly reject this application and direct the prosecution of the petitioner do proceed forthwith.

The learned Government Advocate asks for costs; this application is refused.

Application rejected.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 239—Joint trial of persons charged with attempting to use forged document and abetment of same, legality of.

Where two persons are jointly concerned in the production in evidence of a forged document, and are tried the one as the principal and the other for abetment, the trials should be separate. The Court ought not, in such a case, to assume that the evidence against the two accused is the same and that it must necessarily come to the same finding in the two cases. [p. 395, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Aligarh, dated the 30th April 1919.

Messrs. S. C. Mukerji and Panna Lal, for the Accused.

Mr. L. M. Banerji (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is closely connected with another* which I have just disposed of, but the two cases differ in one essential point. In a certain civil suit, in which one Debi Singh was being sued as a defendant for the recovery of a certain sum of money, Debi Singh produced in evidence a receipt purporting to have been given him by one Kishen Singh. The Civil Court decided against the genuineness of that receipt and eventually Debi Singh was put on his trial for having produced in evidence a forged document, knowing it to be forged, and Kadhe Mal was separately placed on his trial for abetment of the forgery and for having given false evidence before the Civil Court. The two accused persons were tried separately as required by the law, but in reality there has been no separate trial. The learned Sessions Judge commences his judgment against Kadhe Mal with the remark that the receipt in question has already been found to be a forged document in the trial of Debi Singh He does not, of course, mean to say that this fact is conclusive against Kadhe Mal, but he has assumed that the evidence against Kadhe Mal is the same as that against Debi Singh and that the same Court must necessarily come to the same finding in the two cases. Now Kishen Singh, whose signature appears on the receipt, had died before criminal proceedings were taken. The deposition which he had made at the civil trial was admissible in evidence against Debi Singh but was not admissible against Kadhe Mal. If both the cases had been tried with the aid of a Jury, and Kadhe Mal's case had come before a different Jury, it would have been the duty of the Court to exclude from evidence the statement which Kishen Singh had made at the trial in the civil suit, and the Jury would have been asked to return a verdict as against Kadhe Mal on the evidence available after the exclusion of that deposition. In my opinion no Jury could have returned a verdict of guilty without having before them the sworn testimony of Kishen Singh. As I have pointed out in my judgment on Debi Singh's appeal, this sworn testimony is the decisive feature in the case. The rest of the prosecution evidence amounts to circumstantial evidence corroborating Kishen Singh's statement and warranting the Court in believing him to have spoken the truth. It is not, in my opinion, evidence such as to justify affirmatively the finding that the receipt in question is a forged document. It may be that Kadhe Mal has been unduly fortunate in the circumstances of his trial; but the law requires him to be tried separately from Debi Singh, and I cannot overlook the fact that the evidence against the two men is by no means the same. I accept the appeal of Kadhe Mal, set aside the conviction and sentence against him and direct that he be released.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 34, 111, 394, applicability of—Robbery committed by four persons—Abetment—Death caused by one alone, whether probable consequence—Liability of others.

A robbery was committed by 4 men; two, one of whom was the accused, went from house to house bullying and ill-treating the inmates and making them give up their valuables, while the other two kept guard on the house tops. Of the latter pair one was armed with a gun which he fired off several times, and towards the close of the affair when the villagers began to make it unpleasant for the robbers by stone throwing, he aimed at one of the villagers who took a prominent part in stone throwing, and shot and killed him. The accused, having been convicted of murder, appealed to the Chief Court:

Held, (1) that inasmuch as the fatal shot was fired by one man alone, the accused could not be convicted of murder by reason of section 34, Indian Penal Code: [p. 397, col 1.]

(2) that in order to apply section 111, Indian Penal Code, it must be found (1) that the appellant was an abettor of the robbery and (2) that the murder was a probable consequence of the abetment and was committed in pursuance of the conspiracy to commit the robbery; [p. 397, col. 2.]

(3) that the appellant was one of the principals in the robbery and not merely an abettor; [p. 397, col. 2.]

(4) that even assuming that he was an abettor, it could not be said that murder was a probable consequence of the abetment to commit robbery; [p. 397, col 2.]

(5) that the accused was guilty of an offence under section 394, Indian Penal Code.[p. 398, col. 1.]

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Hissar, dated the 21st October 1918, convicting the appellant.

Mr. Gullu Ram, for the Appellant.

Lala Mul Chand, R. S., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Harnam Singh has been convicted of the murder of Umar Hyat and sentenced to death. The case is before us on appeal, and also under section 374, Criminal Procedure Code, for orders as to confirmation of the death sentence.

The murder in question occurred in the course of a robbery which took place in the houses of Jainti, Santu and Ishari at Badalgarh soon after sunset on the 9th November 1917. The facts of the robbery are related at length in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge, and it is unnecessary to repeat them in full detail here. Briefly it may be said that the robbery was committed by four men; two, one of whom is alleged to be the appellant, went from house to house, bullying and ill-treating the inmates and making them give up their valuables, while the other two kept guard on the house tops. Of the latter pair one was armed with a gun, which he fired off several times, and towards the close of the affair, when the villagers began to make it unpleasant for the robbers by throwing stones he aimed at Umar Hyat, who was taking a prominent part in the stone throwing, and shot and killed him. The robbers then made off with their booty.

The manner in which the investigating Police came to the conclusion that Harnam Singh was one of the robbers and arrested him in Calcutta in April 1918 is described in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge.

That the robbery and the murder took place as described by the witnesses is not denied, and the only question of fact arising for decision in this appeal is whether it has been proved that the appellant is one of the four robbers.

On this point the principal evidence is that of Lekhu, son of Jainti, Ganeshi, brother of Santu, Musammat Gangi, wife of Lekhu, and Musammat Rakhi, wife of Ishari, who all swear to the appellant as one of the two who committed the actual robbery while their two companions mounted guard on the house tops. There is reliable evidence as to these four witnesses having picked the appellant out of a group of men in the Hissar Jail in the presence of Rai Gopal Das, Treasury Officer. We see no reason whatever to suppose that the identification was not perfectly genuine. It is urged that the Police may have allowed the witnesses opportunity of seeing the appellant before the identification parade took place, or that the witnesses may have seen beforehand the other persons with whom the appellant was grouped. But if any tricks of this sort were to be played, how is it that Rura, Jainti and Santu were not also induced to identify the appellant? The robbers were in the houses of the witnesses for a considerable time, so we have no doubt that the witnesses had opportunity of noting their features, even though their faces were partially covered as the witnesses admit.

It might, of course, be urged that the appellant was picked out because he happens to resemble one of the robbers, but there is other incriminating evidence. After Harnam Singh was arrested, Karima was shut up with him in the lock up for the night, posing as a man arrested for cattle theft, and the next day Karima gave the Police information which led to the house of Kanshi goldsmith and of appellant's wife and sister being searched. In possession of Kanshi and the appellant's sister were found ornaments which have been satisfactorily identified as part of the loot. Kanshi Ram (P. W. No. 42), no doubt, claims the ornaments found in his possession as his own, though he admits certain dealings with appellant's father in the Diwali of 1917. But Musammat Ratno, sister of the appellant (P. W. No 35), admits that she got the ornaments from her brother, and in the absence of any good evidence to shew that she has been coerced into giving this evidence, we decline to suppose that she is giving false evidence against her own brother.

So we have not only identification by four of the victims of the robbery but also evidence proving his connection with part of the ornaments looted in the robbery.

It is unnecessary now to dwell on the evidence of Karima and Sharfu. We may, however, remark that Karima's story of the booty having been divided in his presence and of his being told that it was stolen property may easily be true, but points strongly to his being an associate of the culprits. Further, according to his own shewing he withheld the name of one of the real culprits when he first gave information to the Police, and he appears to us to be a man on whose uncorroborated evidence it would be dangerous to place reliance. As to Sharfu all that his evidence proves is that about the time of the robbery he saw the appellant and two other Sikhs in Bananwali, a village a long way off from the scene of the robbery.

The evidence of the two defence witnesses is not worth comment. We hold it clearly proved that the appellant is one of the four men who committed the robbery.

Next comes the question what offence he is guilty of. He was not the man who fired the gun and killed the deceased. The learned Sessions Judge has applied section 34 of the Indian Penal Code, but we are of opinion that this section is frequently misapplied and we do not consider it applicable to the present case. The section runs thus: "When a criminal act is done by several persons, in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone." Thus if two men were jointly to beat a man to death each of the two would be liable, though he alone had not caused the death. But here there is no question of an act causing death being done by several persons. The fatal shot was fired by one man alone, and if the appellant is to be convicted of the murder it must be not by reason of section 34, Indian Penal Code, but as an abettor. We note that in many such cases the difficulty of fixing responsibility on to all the gang does not arise, because such robberies are often committed by gangs of 5 or more men, and then section 149 is applicable,—a section which goes much further than section 34, as it relates not merely to acts done in furtherance of the common object but also to such acts as the offenders knew to be likely to be committed in furtherance of that object. There is also section 396, Indian Penal Code, which lays down that if any one of 5 or more dacoits commits a murder in the course of the dacoity, every one of the dacoits may be punished with death. Here, however, there were only four culprits, so neither section 149 nor section 396 can be applied.

The question remains whether the appellant is guilty of abetment of the murder. The appellant knew, of course, that one of his comrades was armed with a gun, and it must be presumed that he knew, not merely that the gun would be fired off to frighten the villagers, but that it might be used in case of necessity to effect the escape of the robbers by causing death. But there was presumably no intention formed beforehand of killing anybody. Several shots were fired, but seeing that only one at the very end of the affair took effect, it would appear that the earlier shots were not intended to hit. And the two robbers inside the house only inflicted simple hurts. So we can scarcely hold that the appellant instigated the fatal shot, or engaged in a conspiracy for it to be fired or aided the firing of that shot. On behalf of the Crown section 111, Indian Penal Code, is quoted, and it is urged that the fatal shot was a probable consequence of the robbery. Section 111 runs as follows: "When an act is abetted and a different act is done, the abettor is liable for the act done in the same manner and to the same extent as if he had directly abetted it: provided the act done was a probable consequence of the abetment, and was committed under the influence of the instigation or with the aid or in pursuance of the conspiracy which constituted the abetment."

So in order to apply section 111 to the present case we shall have to find (1) that the appellant was an abettor of the robbery, and (2) that the murder was a probable consequence of the abetment and was committed in pursuance of the conspiracy to commit the robbery.

Now the appellant was one of the principals to the robbery and not merely an abettor, and the section as formed and the illustrations which accompany it seem to point merely to abettors. But illustrations are not exhaustive, and it may be argued with some force that when two or more persons jointly commit an offence each of them is not merely a principal, but is also an abettor of his companions since he is aiding them in the doing of the act We need not, however, decide this point, since we are not prepared to hold that the murder was a probable consequence of the abetment to commit robbery. When the chances are in favour of a certain event happening, then that event is probable; when the chances are against its happening, it is improbable. When the chances are even, we get the middle line between probability and improbability. Improbability, if increased to the extreme limit, becomes impossibility; probability if increased to the limit becomes certainty. The halfway line in neither probability nor improbability. Now in a robbery of this kind, when there is no previous enmity of any sort firearms are taken with the main object of frightening the villagers, and it is not the intention of the robbers to use the firearms with deadly effect, unless it should be necessary to do so in order to effect their escape. If the appellant and his comrades had been asked by a friend shortly before the robbery what were the odds on a murder being committed during the course of that robbery, we imagine that they would have said the odds were against anybody being killed. And we think that such an answer would have been right. Many such robberies take place without any one being killed. We do not, however, mean to lay down any general rule as to probabilities in such cases, every case must be judged as far as possible on its own merits. We cannot, therefore, uphold the conviction of murder by reason of section 111.

But section 394 is clearly applicable; this section provides that if any person in committing robbery voluntarily causes hurt, he and any other person jointly concerned in committing the robbery shall be punished with transportation for life or with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine. We think the maximum sentence allowed by this section should be passed. Robberies by armed gangs at night require rigorous repression, as the Legislature clearly recognizes when providing special punishments for gangs of five or more persons committing such offences. Here the gang just fell short of five, and so the offender is not liable to the death sentence to which he would otherwise have been liable under section 396.

We so far accept the appeal as to alter the conviction to one under section 394, and the sentence to one of transportation for life.

Appeal partly accepted;
Sentence reduced.

DAROGA CHOWDHURY AND OTHERS —PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 350—Transfer of Magistrate—Trial de novo—Re-transfer of Magistrate—Trial proceeded with from where he had left it—Procedure, legality of.

The accused were charged with certain offences under various sections of the Penal Code and the Cattle Trespass Act. The case was assigned to Mr. T, the Joint Magistrate, who, however, was transferred from the district before he was able to complete the case. The Sub-Divisional Officer transferred the case to his own file and heard the case de novo, disregarding all the evidence recorded by Mr. T. Before the Sub-Divisional Officer had concluded the case, Mr. T. was re-transferred to the district, whereupon the Sub-Divisional Officer transferred the case to Mr. T.'s file with a direction that Mr. T. should take it up from where he had left it before being transferred. This was done, and resulted in the accused being convicted;

Held, that the trial was illegal and must be set aside, and the accused tried de novo; that the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer was ultra vires and without jurisdiction, because all that had taken place before Mr. T. had been superseded, and formed no part of the record in the proceeding then actually pending and being prosecuted against the accused, and that, as a consequence, Mr. T. had no authority or jurisdiction to act on the record of the proceedings which had been antecedently taken before him, the result being that the accused were gravely prejudiced in their trial. [p. 400, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Monghyr, dated the 14th April 1919, affirming in appeal the conviction and sentence of petitioners by the Magistrate, Monghyr, dated the 14th March 1919.

Mr. Gour Chandra Pal, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—The seven petitioners apply that the order of the learned Sessions Judge, dated the 14th April 1919, may be set aside, and that consequential upon setting aside of the same that the order of the Joint Magistrate Mr. Tadani, who convicted them on the 14th of March 1919, should also be set aside.

Two points were taken in support of the application on behalf of the petitioners. The petitioners were charged with having committed certain offences under various sections of the Indian Penal Code and the Cattle Trespass Act.

The case against the accused was originally assigned to the Joint Magistrate, Mr. Tadani, for hearing and disposal. Mr. Tadani commenced the hearing of the case on the 22nd August 1918, and he continued the investigation of the charges against the accused up to 24th October 1918. Mr. Tadani was then about to be transferred from the District of Monghyr; and he applied to the Sub-Divisional Officer requesting that the trial of this prosecution might be transferred to the file of some other officer for final disposal.

Accordingly on the 24th October 1918 the Sub-Divisional Officer, Mr. Majid, transferred the case from the file of Mr. Tadani to his own file, he being the Magistrate most suitable to dispose of the prosecution instituted against the accused.

Immediately after the transfer to the file of the Sub Divisional Officer the accused in the exercise of their statutory right applied for a de novo or fresh trial: which application was granted by the Sub-Divisional Officer.

The Sub-Divisional Officer proceeded de novo to have the evidence recorded afresh; disregarding all the evidence which had been originally taken and recorded by Mr. Tadani during the period he acted as Magistrate in the trial of the prosecution case against the accused.

The Sub-Divisional Officer proceeded in the usual way and recorded the evidence on behalf of the prosecution.

On the 15th January 1919 Mr. Tadani was re-transferred back to the district of Monghyr; whereupon the Sub-Divisional Officer re transferred the trial of this prosecution to the file of Mr. Tadani, remarking that it would economise time if he would take up the case from where he, Mr. Tadani, had left it off. The Sub-Divisional Officer had not proceeded in the course of his investigation as far as Mr. Tadani had at the time that the case was originally transferred to the file of the Sub Divisional Officer in October. The wording of the Sub-Divisional Officer's order is as follows:—"This will economise time, since he, Mr. Tadani, will take up the hearing at the point where he had left."

Now it is contended before me that that order of the Sub-Divisional Officer, dated the 15th January 1919, was an improper and illegal order made without jurisdiction and consequently that the order of conviction by Mr. Tadani was illegal and void in law, and that the accused have been gravely prejudiced in this trial by reason of the illegal order of transfer made by the Sub-Divisional Officer, and that no appeal properly lay therefrom; and in addition it is contended that the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge of Monghyr in this case was a judgment not in accordance with law, and that, therefore, it should be set aside.

I may say that the argument on the second point was not seriously pressed by Mr. Pal. He devoted the entire of his argument to the first ground of the objection, and I cannot say that I was impressed by his observations with reference to the second ground asserted for impeaching the validity of the conviction of the accused.

Mr. Pal's contention is that the law requires, speaking generally, that the person who convicts an accused shall be the person who has heard the evidence and seen the witnesses at the trial; and the law, prima facie, does not contemplate or permit a change or transfer of Judges during the intervening stages of the trial between the commencement and the end of the prosecution. Sometimes it is inevitable that a transfer may take place of an officer pending a trial, and in such cases section 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code seems to make provision as to the procedure to be adopted in such event. Sub-clause (b) of section 350 provides that "Where a Magistrate is transferred and the evidence is partly recorded by one and partly by the other who acts as successor then it is competent for the successor to convict the accused on the evidence recorded by his predecessor: provided that no prejudice thereby be done to the accused."

I admit that clause (b) has no application to the facts of this case. Section 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code, in my opinion, applies to all cases of transfers as well as to cases in which one Magistrate succeeds another in succession and discharge of the duties of his office.

Clause (a) of section 350 undoubtedly confers a right upon accused persons, where a transfer takes place in the constitution of the Tribunal which commenced to try the case, to have a fresh trial de novo. I take it that this means that the succeeding Magistrate must start afresh as if nothing had been done; and that all that had been done was completely blotted out and superseded and was no longer any part of the case; otherwise it would be senseless to refer to such right as giving birth to a right of fresh trial de novo.

I take clause (a) of section 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code to mean a new beginning, a new start unfettered and unrestricted by anything that antecedently had taken place.

If that is so, then in my opinion the Sub-Divisional Officer had no power, jurisdiction or right to transfer the case to Mr. Tadani, directing him to proceed with the trial at the point where he, Mr. Tadani, originally left off when he had due seisin of the hearing of the prosecution, because all that had taken place before Mr. Tadani had been superseded, and must be deemed to be considered as forming no part of the record in the proceeding then actually pending and being prosecuted against the accused. If the learned Sub-Divisional Officer had merely transferred the case to Mr. Tadani to proceed from the point where he, the Sub-Divisional Officer, had left off when he re-transferred the case to Mr. Tadani, then I think no objection could be urged against the conviction of the accused by Mr. Tadani acting upon the record of the proceedings in the de novo trial initiated before the Sub-Divisional Officer.

Consequently, in my opinion the order of the learned Sub Divisional Officer, dated the 15th January 1919, transferring the case to Mr. Tadani in the manner in which he did was ultra vires and without jurisdiction; and that consequently Mr. Tadani had no authority or jurisdiction to act on the record of the proceedings which had been antecedently taken before him. Thus in my opinion the accused have been gravely prejudiced in their trial by reason of the course the proceedings took owing to the invalid order made by the Sub-Divisional Officer on the 15th of January 1919.

There are many cases on this point argued before me. Two cases are to be found reported as Sobh Nath Singh v. Emperor (1) and Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Upendra Kumar Ghose (2) respectively; in which the Courts laid down in most emphatic terms that non-compliance with the provisions of section 350 of the Code of Criminal Procedure involves prejudice to an accused person.

I do not go so far myself as to say that per se non compliance with the provisions of section 350 must necessarily involve prejudice to an accused in every case, but I say it may do so under certain circumstances, and if prejudice ensues, the accused is entitled to a new and fair trial. In the particular case before me, I am satisfied that the attempt to revive the proceedings which were dead undoubtedly did prejudice the accused, having regard to the fact that in the second edition of the prosecution case oral evidence was given by the witnesses before Mr. Majid, the Sub-Divisional Officer, which was at variance with that originally recorded by Mr. Tadani and that it was impossible for the accused under the circumstances of this case to have used the proceedings recorded before Mr. Tadani, in the subsequent case before the Sub-Divisional Officer, to impeach the inaccuracy of the subsequent evidence, nor would it have been possible, on re-transfer of the case to Mr. Tadani, for the accused to have used the proceedings before the Sub-Divisional Officer to challenge the evidence originally recorded before Mr. Tadani.

I am satisfied, therefore, on the entire case that the accused have been materially prejudiced by the course the trial took owing to the defective order of the learned Sub-Divisional Officer, and I accordingly set aside the conviction of the accused before Mr. Tadani, dated the 14th March 1919, and their conviction on appeal before the Sessions Judge, dated the 14th April 1919, and I direct that all the accused be tried de novo.

KARIM BUKSH SHEIKH—PLAINTIFF—DECREE-HOLLER—RESPONDENT IN NO. 40 OF 1917

MOYNUDDIN MONDAL AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS IN NO. 41 OF 1917.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Decree for ejectment directing payment of compensation within period fixed - Payment after date fixed—Order accepting payment—Appeal, whether lies.

The judgment in an ejectment suit made the ejectment conditional upon the payment of compensation by the plaintiff; in the decree, however, no mention was made of this condition, but it only directed payment of the compensation within the date fixed. The plaintiff deposited the money after the period had expired, and, notwithstanding the defendant's objection, the Court made an order that the money be received:

Held, that as the decree had not been put into execution, the order was not one under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and was, therefore, not appealable. [p. 402, col. 1.]

Appeal against the orders of the Subordinate Judge, Assam Valley Districts, dated the 21st of November 1916, affirming those of the Munsif, Dhubri, dated the 25th of February 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Bimal Chandra Das Gupta, for the Appellant.—The defendant is the appellant. Plaintiff obtained a decree against him in a suit for ejectment. The decree was conditional on payment by plaintiff to him of compensation. Appeal against that decree was dismissed for non-prosecution. The point is that the time for depositing the money having elapsed the suit is barred. The Courts below found that the execution of the decree was within time, as they thought that time should be extended on account of the appeal. The only mode left to the plaintiff was to make an application for review. The only decree capable of execution was the Munsif's decree. The appeal was infructuous. And that became incapable of execution as the condition was not complied with. The appeal and its withdrawal would not have the effect of extending time. See Ramaswami Kone v. Sundara Kone (1), Ghanshiam Lal v. Ram Narain (2), Pureshnath Ghose Mundul v. Kristo Lall Dutt (3). The executing Court cannot also extend time. See Dr. Ghosh's Law of Mortgages, (4th Edition), Volume I, 600. Even the remedy by way of application for review is not open to the other side. See section 47, Civil Procedure Code. Then the further question arises whether a proper case has been made out entitling the other side to an extension of time. I submit not. The order of the Court should be construed strictly in favour of the defendant and the condition precedent not having been fulfilled, the plaintiff is not entitled to execute the decree.

Babu Jnanendra Mohan Das, for the Respondent in Appeal No. 40.—The question is one of construction of decree. In the decree no condition precedent is attached. So far as ejectment is concerned, the order is not conditional. The decree is clearly in plaintiff's favour.

Babu Biraj Mohan Mojumdar, for the Respondents in Appeal No. 41.—I adopt the argument of my learned friend. My further submission is that section 148, Civil Procedure Code, authorises the Court to extend time for payment of money. The order appears to be under section 148, Civil Procedure Code, and is, therefore, I submit, not appealable, because it is not covered either by section 104 or Order XLIII, rule 1. The argument that the executing Court has no power to extend time, has no substance in it. It has, I submit, got power to decide the matter in dispute.

Babu Bimal Chandra Das Gupta, in reply.—The decree has got to be read along with the judgment, and the judgment is perfectly clear that the order of ejectment is conditional on payment by the plaintiff of the money within a certain time. Section 148 can have no application in a case like this. That section applies where the order is made for the payment of money required under the Civil Procedure Code only. The matter arises out of proceedings under section 47. Hence I have got a right of second appeal.

JUDGMENT.

APPEAL No. 40 OF 1917.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—This is an appeal against an order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge of the Assam Valley Districts, affirming an order of the Munsif of Dhubri, dated the 25th of February 1916. The facts are shortly these:—The plaintiff obtained a decree for ejectment against the defendant, who is the appellant before us. In the judgment the ejectment was made conditional upon payment of a certain sum of money by the plaintiff as compensation to the defendant and the date for such payment was fixed on or before the 17th October 1915. In the decree that was drawn up, nothing was said about the ejectment being conditional upon payment of the compensation money, but it only directed the plaintiff to make the payment within the date fixed. Against that decree, the defendant preferred an appeal which was dismissed, and shortly after the dismissal of the appeal, on the 23rd November 1915 the plaintiff made the deposit. The defendant objected to the money being received, but the learned Munsif thought that it was within his competency to receive the money on that date. He accordingly overruled the objection. This order was passed by the successor of the learned Munsif who decided the case originally. The defendant has now preferred this second appeal to this Court, and the first question that we have to consider is whether an appeal lies. It seems to me that the order passed is not an order under section 47, Code of Civil Procedure. The decree has not been put into execution yet and the order passed is not an order relating to execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree passed by a Court executing such a decree. Upon this view the appeal fails and is dismissed without costs.

APPEAL No. 41 OF 1917.

The judgment just delivered in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 40 of 1917 will govern this appeal also. This appeal is also dismissed. The appellant will pay to the respondent in this appeal his costs, the hearing fee being assessed at two gold mohurs.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Female member, property acquired by—Presumption—Benami transaction effected in order to defeat creditor—Real owner, whether can attack benami—Fraud.

Where property is acquired by a lady, whose husband is a member of a joint Hindu family, for her own benefit, and for the benefit of her children, the acquisition cannot be held to be for the benefit of the entire joint family. [p. 404, col. 2.]

Where a benami transaction is effected in order to defeat a creditor and the creditor is defeated, the real owner cannot subsequently attack the benami transaction. [p. 404, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Shahabad, dated the 17th December 1917, confirming that of the Munsif, Buxar, dated the 26th May 1917.

FACTS.—The plaintiffs and defendants were members of the same family. In 1875 the joint ancestral dwelling house together with a shop and 3 Khandhars was sold in execution of a decree and purchased by the decree-holder, the Maharaja of Dumraon. In 1881 the auction-purchaser transferred the dwelling house and the 3 Khandhars under a Bakshishnama on payment of a Nazrana of Rs. 700 to Musammat Phuljharia, wife of Sital, one of the members of the joint family of the plaintiffs and the defendants The plaintiffs were the sons of Musammat Phuljharia. In 1885 the entire male members of the family together sold one of the Khandhars acquired in the name of Musammat Phuljharia to one Sujhaon Turha. The members of the family from time to time went out to some places in Bengal and started business in those places. Whenever they came, they lived in the house acquired in the name of Musammat Phuljharia. In fact one of the defendants Musammat Barti always lived in the house both before and after the acquisition of the house in the name of Musammat Phuljharia. In 1912, at the Survey Settlement the house and the Khandhars were recorded in the joint names of the plaintiffs and the defendants. The plaintiffs brought the present suit on 23rd February 1916 for ejectment of the defendants from the houses, on an allegation that the houses were the self acquired property of Musammat Phuljharia and that the defendants had been living in it with the permission of Musammat Phuljharia and the plaintiffs. The defendants pleaded that as about the year 1881 a creditor was threatening to execute his decree, the houses were acquired benami in the name of Musammat Phuljharia, who was a female member of the family, on payment of Nazrana to the auction-purchaser, the Maharaja of Dumraon; that in fact the acquisition was made for the family and the houses belonged to the entire joint family; that all the members of the family lived in the houses without any objection; that they jointly effected a transfer of one of the houses acquired in the name of Musammat Phuljharia in 1885 and that the suit was barred by limitation. The first Court decreed the suit, holding that the parties were not joint at the time of the acquisition and that they lived in the houses with the permission of Musammat Phuljharia and the plaintiffs. The defendants appealed to the District Judge, who dismissed the appeal on the grounds that though the houses originally were the joint ancestral houses of the parties, after they had been sold off in execution of the decree of the Maharaja of Dumraon they were acquired in the name of Musammat Phuljharia on payment of Rs. 700, that there was no evidence that the purchase was made with the nucleus of the joint fund or that Musammat Phuljharia was a farzidar, that the defendants lived in the houses with permission and, therefore, could not resist the suit. Against the above decision the defendants appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal, for the Appellants, contended that the acquisition having been made in the name of one of the female members of the joint family, there was a presumption that the acquisition was on behalf of the entire joint family, unless it was otherwise established by the plaintiffs. It was on the plaintiffs to prove that the money with which the acquisition was made came out of the private purse of Musammat Phuljharia and that she was not the farzidar for the family. He relied on Chunder Nath Moitro v. Kristo Komul Singh (1), Nobin Chunder Chowdhury v. Dokhobala Dasi (2).

In the present case as the family dwelling house was sold in execution of a decree and was re-purchased in the name of one of the female members of the house and as subsequent to the re-purchase the entire family lived in it for over 36 years, there was a strong presumption that the property was joint. When in fact one of the four houses acquired in the name of Musammat Phuljharia was sold jointly by all the members of the family in 1885, 4 or 5 years after the acquisition, it could not be contended that the houses were not joint family property. These facts raised a presumption that at any rate the houses were given to the joint family after the acquisition and held the status of joint acquisitions.

Almost all benami transactions were entered into with some ulterior motives. If in the present case the houses were purchased benami in the name of Musammat Phuljharia with a view to avoid the creditors, it did not lose the character of a benami transaction. It was, therefore, not open to the plaintiffs to defeat the rightful claim of the defendants. The plaintiffs as members of the family were as much guilty of avoiding the creditors as the defendants. They could not in equity lay the whole blame on the defendants and succeed in ejecting them.

The case of Musammat Barti, defendant No. 4, stood on stronger grounds. She or her husband was no party to the decree which the other members of the family wanted to avoid. She had lived in the house permanently. It was not within the right of the plaintiffs to eject her under colour of the deed of gift in the name of Musammat Phuljharia, which had been effected benami to avoid the creditors.

The Court below has overlooked that the Survey Khatian was in favour of the defendants. There is no finding that the presumption arising out of the Survey Khatian has been rebutted.

Mr. L. N. Singh, for the Respondents, was not called upon.

(1) 15 W. R. 357.
(2) 10 C. 686; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 461.

JUDGMENT.—In my opinion this appeal is concluded by the findings of facts.

The suit is for possession of certain houses which, it is alleged by the defendants, belonged to the entire joint family of which they are members. The root of title to these houses is a deed of gift executed by the Maharaja of Dumraon in favour of Musammat Phuljharia. The plaintiffs claim through this lady. The case of the defendants is that all these houses were joint family properties. They were purchased by the Maharaja of Dumraon in execution of a mortgage decree obtained by him against the joint family, and subsequently he executed a deed of gift in favour of Musammat Phuljharia but intending to confer the benefit on the entire joint family. In other words, the assertion of the defendants is an assertion of benami. The reason for benami is given in the 8th paragraph of the written statement. I shall have something to say as to that presently. But it seems to me that upon the finding of the lower Appellate Court it must be held that the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed in the action. First of all, the deed recites that owing to the application of the grantee, that is to say, Musammat Phuljharia, the gift is made to her and her heirs. As the lower Appellate Court points out, the document does not recite that it was made for the benefit of the whole family of which the grantee was a member. The lower Appellate Court finds that there is no evidence on the record that Rs. 700, which was paid as Nazrana to the Maharaja, was paid out of the joint family funds. The lower Appellate Court has found that the houses in suit have been repaired at the cost of the plaintiffs and that there are account papers to prove the fact of such payment towards costs. The learned Vakil on behalf of the appellant argues on the authority of a case reported as Nabin Chunder Chowdhry v. Dokhobala Dasi (2) that where property is acquired in the name of a wife whose husband is a member of a joint family, it must be presumed that the acquisition in her name is for the benefit of the entire joint family. That may be so, but here the Court has found as a fact that the property was acquired by Musammat Phuljharia for her own benefit and for the benefit of her children. Therefore, this finding of fact is binding on me.

Next, it seems to me that in any case the appellants, or some of them are estopped from putting forward their title to these houses in view of their own written statement as contained in paragraph 8 thereof. There they give a reason for the benami. They say that there was a decree against the joint family and in order to safeguard the property against the creditors who had a decree against them, it was decided that the property should be put in the name of Musummat Phuljharia. The judgment obtained by the creditors is on the record and it shows that the judgment-debtors were one Debi Ram who is not a party in this litigation and Deni Ram who is the father of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. The lower Appellate Court says, and the judgment which has been put in supports that statement, that Debi Ram and Deni Ram successfully saved this property from sale at the instance of the decree holder. The question arises that having entered into a fraudulent transaction of this nature and having succeeded in the fraud, are they entitled to plead their own fraud and claim to prove the benami nature of the transaction? The question has been debated in more cases than one. It is unnecessary to deal with them, but the authorities certainly establish that no man can allege his own fraud to invalidate a transaction entered into by him. The case made by the defendants is: "We entered into this benami transaction in order to save the property from creditors. We have succeeded in saving the property from the creditors and now there is no longer any necessity for the benami character to continue, and, therefore, we ask the Court to declare the benami nature of the transaction." In my opinion they cannot be heard to take up a position like that.

In my opinion this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 43, 44—Landlord and tenant—Enhancement of rent—Assessment, mode of.

Under the law, rents can only be enhanced in accordance with prevailing rates: an assessment of fair rates is unknown to the law. [p. 405, col. 1.]

The method of deducing the prevailing rate of rent of land is to take the average rate, or the medium rate, the average rate being calculated with reference to the area held at each rate, and not a mere arithmetical average of the various rates. [p. 405, col. 2.]

Per Ferard, S. M.—It is open to the Court to count from its calculation of medium rates "fancy" rates on the one hand and nominal or obviously favourable rents on the other.

Application for revision of the order of the Commissioner, Agra Division, dated the 27th May 1918, in the case of enhancement of rent.

JUDGMENT.

HOPKINS, J. M.—There were suits for enhancement of rent in which the Assistant Collector was required by law to ascertain the prevailing rates of the various classes of soil in accordance with the provisions of sections 43 and 44 of the Tenancy Act. The Assistant Collector examined the occupancy holdings of the villages in suit as well as of three other villages, but found a marked difference in the rates in various villages and professed himself unable to discover any prevailing rate. He, therefore, took the rates in a single village Kasimpur Khusipur, in which certain clearly marked prevailing rates were ascertainable, and making a deduction of 1/6th from these rates applied them to the other villages. The Commissioner on appeal has upheld these rates on the ground that they are fair rates and the landholder now applies to the Board in revision.

The law lays down clearly that rents must be enhanced in accordance with prevailing rates and makes no provision for the assessment of fair rates. The decision of the lower Courts was clearly contrary to law, and in my opinion they have acted illegally in the exercise of their jurisdiction and these orders should be set aside.

As regards the Assistant Collector's difficulty that he could find no prevailing rates I would make the following remarks :—

If he had found in respect of any class of soil that the rates paid varied between Rs. 4 and 6, I do not think he would have had any difficulty in accepting Rs. 5 as the prevailing rate. The rates he actually found were as follows :—

	Rs. a. p.			Rs. a. p.
Matyar wet from	4	4	0 to	6	10	0
Matyar dry ,,	2	13	0 to	4	4	0
Pilia wet ,,	3	3	0 to	4	14	0
Pilia dry ,,	2	0	0 to	3	14	0
Bhur I wet ,,	2	0	0 to	3	4	0
Bhur I dry ,,	1	5	0 to	3	4	0
Bhur II dry ,,	1	5	0 to	1	4	0

The variations are considerable, but they do not in any case amount to 100 per cent. Presuming that the quality of the soil was the same in each, the prevailing rate ought to have been deduced by taking the average rate, or the 'medium' rate. The average rate should be calculated with reference to the area held at each rate and should not, of course, be a mere arithmetical average of the various rates. The 'medium' rate is the highest rate at which or at rates higher than which more than half of the exemplar land is held (cf. section 31, Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885). There is ample material on the record for the deduction of a prevailing rate without the local inspection.

I would set aside the orders of the Court below and would remand the suits for a finding as to the prevailing rates to be deduced in the manner indicated above and as to the enhancement, if any, to be made in accordance with these rates. It must be understood that the landholder applicant takes his chance of getting less than the amounts now decreed. Return to be made within six weeks, ten days for objections.

FERARD, S. M.—I agree. It is, of course, open to the Court to count from his calculation of medium rates 'fancy' rents on the one hand and nominal or obviously favoured rents on the other, if there be such among the exemplars to an extent that would vitiate the result.

Order set aside.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 102, cl. (j), 105, 105 A (a), (b), (c)—Application under s 105, for settlement of fair rent—Settlement Court, questions which can be decided by.

In an application for settlement of fair rent made under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Revenue Court has, by virtue of the provisions of section 105 A, clauses (a), (b) and (c), read with section 102, clause (j) of the Act, jurisdiction to go into the questions whether the land is not liable to pay rent and whether a person who is the occupant of the land, stands in the relation of a tenant towards the applicant. [p. 407, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Special Judge, Faridpur, dated the 10th of September 1915, affirming those of the Assistant Settlement Officer, Camp Baliakandi, dated respectively the 26th June, 20th, 22nd and 24th October and 22nd December 1914, and 30th January, 11th March, 7th, 10th and 14th April 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Amarendra Nath Bose), for the Appellants.—This appeal arises out of a suit for settlement of fair and equitable rent. The Court of Appeal below, affirming the decree of the First Court, has dismissed the appeal. This matter arises out of an application under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Revenue Officers in dealing with such applications are bound by the wording of the section and the defence raised by the defendants that the lands are not liable to assessment cannot be tried by the Revenue Officers, because both sections 105 and 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act contemplate a case between landlord and tenant. Refers to the definition of landlord, tenant and rent. Therefore, the judgment of the Revenue Court was wholly without jurisdiction and should be set aside.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chakravarty, (with him Babus Rajendra Chandra Guha, Fanindra Lal Mitra, Tarakeswar Roy, Nalukeswar Mukherjee, Arabendra Bhusan Sinha and Samarendra Kumar Dutt, for the Respondents.—The main question is whether this is a case under section 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. There are two classes of cases before your Lordships. In one class there are documents (taidads) showing that the land is rent-free. In the other class the landlord's right to have an assessment of rent is barred by limitation, because the finding is that for 150 years the tenants have been holding the land without paying any rent therefor. As regards the question of jurisdiction, my submission is that the case is governed by section 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the wording of which is wide enough to cover cases of this nature between landlord and tenant. The Revenue Officer has got jurisdiction under section 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act to hold as to whether the land is liable to assessment or not. That was the very object of the introduction of section 105A. Refers to Rampini's Bengal Tenancy Act, 6th Edition, page 380; also Upendra Nath Ghose v. Jamini Mohun Pal (1).

Babu Upendra Nath Roy replied briefly.

Babu Biraj Mohon Mojumdar, for the Deputy Registrar.

JUDGMENT.—The only point raised by the appellants in this case is as to whether section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is limited to questions between landlords and tenants.

It is argued that the Revenue Court and the first Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to go into the question of disputed title between the landlords and the occupants of the holding, which the landlords wanted to be assessed and which is within the ambit of their estate. So far as section 102 of the Act is concerned, clause (j) clearly provides an entry to be made in respect of land if claimed to be held rent-free, whether or not the "occupant" is entitled to hold the land without payment of rent. Section 105 (2) gives a right to the Zemindar to apply within the time thereby limited for settlement of rent. In that very section reference is made under section 102 (j) including the case of the occupants of any land. Section 105A (a) and (b) refer to questions whether the land is or is not liable to pay rent. Sub-clause (c) deals with the issue as to whether a person who is the occupant is in the relation of a tenant. I think it is clear that the sections above referred to contemplate a case of the character now before the Court and that the Court had clear jurisdiction to go into the question raised. This is also to a certain extent supported by the decision in Upendra Nath Ghose v. Jamini Mohan Pal (1). I hold that the only point which has been raised in these appeals before me fails, and, therefore, they are dismissed with costs so far as the appearing respondents are concerned.

Appeals dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLV, r. 13 (d)—Appeal to His Majesty in Council—Proceedings stayed by High Court—Direction by Privy Council to proceed—Receiver, appointment of—High Court, power of.

Owing to a default in complying with certain orders of the High Court, proceedings taken upon permission granted to appeal to His Majesty in Council were stayed. Thereupon the appellant obtained an order from the Privy Council directing that the appeal should proceed, and, while the necessary papers were under preparation, the High Court appointed a Receiver of the property in suit. On the application of the appellant it was objected that the High Court had no jurisdiction to make such appointment as special leave had been obtained from the Privy Council for the appeal to proceed:

Held, that the High Court had jurisdiction under Order XLV, rule 13 (d), of the Civil Procedure Code to appoint a Receiver. [p. 408, col. 2.]

Application to review the order of 8th April 1919.

Messrs. Haribhusan Mukherji and Ambika Prasad Upadhaya, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—This is an application for review of an order made by us on the 8th of April last, appointing Raja Wazir Narain Singh Receiver of the estate which is the subject-matter of an appeal now pending before their Lordships of the Privy Council.

The history of the case is as follows:—

The Raja sued Rani Jagadamba Kueri for possession not only of the estate, but of certain Government promissory notes which were in deposit in the Bank of Bengal to her credit. The Rani succeeded as regards the promissory notes, but with regard to the corpus of the property the Raja obtained a decree declaring his title and for possession. In accordance therewith he has taken possession of the estate.

The Rani then applied for leave to appeal against that decree to His Majesty in Council. Permission was granted in accordance with Order XLV of the Civil Procedure Code, but as the Rani failed to comply with certain orders of the Court, it was directed that the proceedings should be stayed. The Rani subsequently moved their Lordships of the Privy Council and obtained an order directing that the appeal should proceed. The appeal has been entered as No. 13 of 1919 and the necessary papers are under preparation.

On the 28th of March last the Rani applied to this Court for the appointment of a Receiver, on the allegation that the Raja had been guilty of waste and that irreparable injury would be caused if some measures for the protection of the property were not taken. Notice of this application was served by Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick upon Mr. Bankim Chandra De, the Vakil of the Raja. On the 8th April the matter came up for hearing, and, although the Raja was not himself present, Mr. Naresh Chandra Sinha was heard in his behalf and an order was made appointing the Raja Receiver of the estate upon his furnishing security to the extent of Rs. 1,00,000, time for that purpose being allowed till the 8th of May.

On the 15th April the present application was made by the Raja for a review of the order appointing him Receiver. His principal ground is that he was entirely ignorant of the application of the 28th March, and that the order of the 8th April was made without any opportunity being given to him to furnish counter-affidavits traversing the allegations made by the Rani.

Now we have had the advantage of hearing a statement by Mr. Bankim Chandra De upon the allegations contained in the affidavits now filed by the Raja and by his agent Trebani Lal and dated the 14th April 1919, and we find the facts to be these.

About the 25th of March the Raja and Trebani Lal were both at Bankipore in connection with some other business, and when Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick intimated to Mr. Bankim Chandra De his intention of making an application for the appointment of a Receiver that fact was communicated by the latter to Trebani Lal. Upon instructions received from Trebani Lal Mr. Bankim Chandra De accepted service of notice of the application, and on the 28th March he received a vakalatnama from the Raja to act in the matter in his behalf. On the 28th of March Trebani Lal was present in Court from the opening of the Court till about half past one awaiting the hearing of the application. The application was, however, not made till abont 2 P. M. It is not clear whether at that time Trebani Lal was actually present in Court, but there can be no doubt that he was fully aware, and had been aware, of the intention of the Rani's advisers to make the application in Court on that day. Mr. Bankim Chandra De further states that the same evening after the Court had ordered notice of the application to issue he saw the Raja at about 7 P. M. and informed him that the application had been made and that it would be necessary to file counter affidavits in reply; so that there can be no possible doubt that on the 28th March the Raja was fully aware that an application had been made for the appointment of a Receiver. The Raja took no further steps, and on the 8th April Mr. Naresh Chandra Sinha, who had acted in the appeal at an early stage, was heard by us under instructions from Mr. Bankim Chandra De. In these circumstances it is idle to say that the Raja had no opportunity of making himself heard in the matter of the application. The omission to appear was wilful, and we cannot admit that any ground has been shown for our reviewing our judgment of the 8th April appointing him Receiver.

A point of law has been raised by Mr. Haribhusan Mukherji, who now appears for the Raja, to the effect that as it was necessary to obtain a special order from their Lordships of the Privy Council for the appeal to proceed, the appointment of a Receiver cannot be made by this Court. Reliance is placed upon the case of Tega Singh v. Bichitru Singh (1) which, following the earlier case of Moheshchandra Dhal v. Satrughan Dhal (2), decided that under section 608 of the Code of 1882 as well as under Order XLV, rule 13, of the Code of 1908, it was not open to the High Court to appoint a Receiver in a case in which the certificate was not granted by the Court The case of Nityamani Dasi v. Madhu Sudan Sen (3), however, is direct authority to the contrary Their Lordships of the Privy Council have there laid down that it is open to the High Court to stay execution notwithstanding that the appeal has been admitted by special leave by His Majesty in Council. The argument in the High Court in Nityamani's case (3) was that the provisions of Order XLV, rule 13, of the Code of 1908 are wider than section 608 of the previous Code, and it would seem that their Lordships of the Privy Council accepted this view.

If, therefore, it is open to the High Court to stay execution under Order XLV, rule 13, in a case in which special leave has been given, I fail to see why there is no jurisdiction to give the relief which is set out in the very next clause of rule 13 (d). On principle the argument that applied to the stay of execution must apply to this case also. The preliminary point, therefore, that we have no jurisdiction to appoint a Receiver in my opinion fails. The result is that the application for review will be rejected, and the order appointing the Raja as Receiver upon his furnishing security to the extent of Rs. 1,00,000 will be affirmed. The opposite party, the Rani, will be allowed her costs. The time for furnishing the security will be extended till the 16th instant. In default the legal advisers of the Rani will be at liberty to make an application for the appointment of some other person.

(1) 4 Ind. Cas. 452; 10 C. L. J. 326.
(2) 26 I. A. 281: 27 C. 1; 4 C. W. N. 34; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 567; 14 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 1 (P. C.).
(3) 11 Ind. Cas. 384; 38 C. 335; 13 C. L. J. 529; 8 A. L. J. 449; 13 Bom. L. R. 419; 10 M. L. T. 25. (1911) 2 M. W. N. 124; 4 Bur. L. T. 123; 38 I. A. 74 (P. C.).

We cannot leave the case here, and it will be necessary to issue notice upon the Raja and upon Trebani Lal to show cause why proceedings should not be taken against them under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in the matter of allegations made by them in their affidavits of the 14th April 1919. The 16th instant will be fixed for the hearing of this matter.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—I agree.

Maharaja KESHO PRASAD SINGH—RESPONDENT.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 4 (3), 67—Rent, whether includes nazrana—Ejectment on failure to agree to amount of nazrana fixed, whether permissible.

Rent in section 4 (3) of the Agra Tenancy Act includes nazrana, or whatever is paid on account of land, and does not mean merely annual rent.

Where a suit is brought for ejectment because the tenant will not pay as much nazrana as is demanded, the tenant can take the plea authorised by section 67 (1) of the Agra Tenancy Act.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Benares Division, dated the 1st November 1918, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOPKINS, J. M.—I am unable to agree with the Commissioner in this case. The question is whether the appellant is being ejected because he refused to agree to an enhancement of rent. The respondent's manager admits that he took Rs. 2,000 from the appellant as nazrana and asked him for Rs. 2,000 more. It is true that the actual payment was after the suit was instituted but the negotiations had been going on for some months before.

It is argued that the payment of Rs. 2,000 or Rs. 4,000 was to be in consideration of the bestowal of occupancy rights. Whether occupancy rights were to be given or not it is clear that there was to be an enhancement of rent, and this brings the case within the provisions of section 67 of the Tenancy Act. Rent, it may be noted, does not mean merely annual rent but includes whatever is paid on account of land, and, therefore, includes "nazrana."

The appellant holds some 25 bighas of land at a rent of Rs. 123. The nazrana which he paid was more than 16 years' rent and that which he was asked to pay was more than 32 years' rent. To say under such circumstances that the appellant was not asked to agree to enhancement of rent, and that he is not now being ejected because he did not agree to pay what was demanded of him, is to be blind to patent facts.

The circumstance that the enhancement of rent was to be accompanied by the grant of occupancy rights does not alter the fact that there was to be an enhancement of rent.

I would accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the Commissioner would restore that of the Assistant Collector and give the appellant his costs in all Courts.

FERARD, S. M.—I agree. "Nazrana" comes within the definition of "rent" in section 4 (3), Tenancy Act, and a tenant whose ejectment is sought because he will not pay as much "nazrana" as is demanded can plead section 67 (1). It is immaterial that if he had met the demand the landlord was ready to let him acquire occupancy rights, he could not, of course, as held in Selected Decisions of 1918, give them to him at once.

Appeal allowed.

KOLLIPARA VEERAYYA TATA —PLAINTIFF—PETITIONER—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 145, O. XXI, r. 43—Attachment of moveables—Delivery to surety for safe custody - Execution proceedings against surety, maintainability of.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J. (Spencer, J., contra).—Section 145 (b), Civil Procedure Code, refers to restitution of property "taken in execution," that is, taken possession of by a party in execution in accordance with the terms of the decree or order in his favour, and not to properties taken possession of by the Court through attachment in execution of a decree. A decree-holder cannot execute his decree against a person who has become surety under Order XXI, rule 43, in respect of properties taken possession of by the Court Amin. It is only a surety who comes under section 145 of the Code that can be proceeded against in execution as if he were a party to the decree. [p. 410, col. 2.]

Per Spencer, J.—The Court has inherent power to assign a bond executed in its favour for the purpose of a suit being brought to enforce its terms. [p. 411, col. 1.]

The word 'restitution' in section 145 (b) of the Civil Procedure Code must be read in the wide and general sense of restoration or making good that which is deficient, and a Court can, under that section, proceed in execution against a surety who has failed to perform his conditional undertaking to produce the judgment-debtor's property when called upon to do so. [p. 411, col. 1.]

Appeal against the Appellate Order of the District Court, Guntur, in Appeal Suit No. 204 of 1917, preferred against the order of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Guntur, in Miscellaneous Petition No. 1731 of 1916, in Original Suit No. 1266 of 1915.

FACTS.—Certain standing and harvested crops were attached by Court in execution of a decree, and the Court Amin left it in the appellants' custody on their executing a bond 'to give possession of it to Court according to its order.' The execution application was afterwards dismissed and the appellants handed over the properties to some persons named by the judgment-debtors. The decree-holders applied for execution against the sureties-appellants. The lower Courts gave permission, holding that the case was covered by section 145, Civil Procedure Code. The sureties appealed to the High Court.

Mr. K. G. Babu Row, for the Appellants.—The sureties cannot be proceeded against in execution. Section 145, Civil Procedure Code, does not apply, as it refers to restitution of properties taken by a party in execution. Here the bond was given under Order XXI, rule 43, Civil Procedure Code, and the properties were taken possession of by the Court through its Amin.

Mr. V. Lakshminarayana, for the Respondent.—Section 145, Civil Procedure Code, is wide enough to cover a case like the present. The Court has power to proceed in execution against a person who fails in his conditional undertaking to produce the property when called on to do so.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The security bond given by the appellants does not fall under any of the clauses (a), (b) or (c) of section 145, Civil Procedure Code. It is a special kind of surety bond taken by the Court in accordance with Order XXI, rule 43, Civil Procedure Code, as materially altered by this High Court under its rule-making powers and is concerned with the safe custody of "articles which cannot be conveniently removed" from the place of their attachment in execution. It has nothing to do with section 145, Civil Procedure Code. Clause (b) of section 145 refers to restitution of property "taken in execution," that is, taken possession of by a party in execution in accordance with the terms of the decree or order in his favour, and not to properties taken possession of by the Court through attachment in execution of a decree.

The decree-holder cannot execute his decree against a surety who becomes one under Order XXI, rule 43, in respect of properties taken possession of by the Court Amin. It is only a surety who comes under section 145 that could be proceeded against in execution as if he was a party to the decree. The Court should, in a case like the present, assign the bond in favour of the decree-holder in whose interests (though not for whose direct benefit) the bond was taken. The lower Courts' orders permitting the decree-holder to execute his decree against the appellants to the extent of the amount mentioned in the surety bond cannot, therefore, be upheld and are set aside. In substitution thereof, I would direct that the District Munsif's Court do assign the bond in favour of the decree holder. As the bond is nearly three years old, it is desirable that the assignment should be made soon. The parties will bear their respective costs throughout.

SPENCER, J.—As the words "where and in so far as a decree is varied or reversed" occurring in section 144, Civil Procedure Code, are not repeated in section 145, I am inclined to read the word "restitution" in section 145 b) as not confined to the narrow sense in which it is used in section 144, namely, adjustment of the rights of parties inter se arising out of the variation of a decree in appeal or otherwise but in the wide and general sense of "restoration" or making good that which is deficient. If that is so, the Court can proceed in execution against the surety who has failed to perform his conditional undertaking to produce the judgment-debtor's property before the Court when called upon to do so. In the Code of Civil Procedure there is no provision similar to that in section 45 of the Guardians and Wards Act for the assignment of a security-bond for the purpose of a suit being brought to enforce its terms.

That course is, however, one which it must be within the inherent power of the Court in whose favour the bond is written to adopt, and I think it would be convenient to adopt it in the circumstances of the present case. The words "may be executed" in section 145 seem to indicate that a proceeding in execution is only an alternative remedy and that the other remedy of assignment of the security bond is not excluded.

I, therefore, agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

M. C. P.

Decree set aside.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Revision—Interlocutory order—Remedy, alternative, open—High Court, power of interference of.

Where an alternative remedy is provided, the High Court will not entertain an application for the exercise of its powers of revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 412, col. 1.]

A trial Court refused the request of the defendant's Pleader to frame a particular issue and the defendant moved the High Court in revision. At the hearing a preliminary objection was taken that no revision lay from an interlocutory order:

Held, that the application was not maintainable, inasmuch as another remedy was open to the defendant, viz., that if he was adversely affected by the omission of the proposed issue, he could appeal to the High Court and urge the objection that his defence was not considered in its entirety. The Hon'ble Mr. N. P. Asthana and Mr. G. Agarwala, for the Applicant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr S. K. Dar, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure by the defendants to a suit pending in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Agra The plaintiff sued to recover money alleged to be due on a contract. The defendants urged two pleas, namely, that no such contract as was stated in the plaint had taken place between the parties and, secondly, that if any contract did take place between the parties, it was of a wagering nature and could not be enforced. The learned Subordinate Judge examined the defendants before proceeding any further in the case. He recorded their statements in a rubkar, dated the 21st of February 1918. After writing the depositions of the two defendants the Court framed three issues. The Pleader for the defence asked the learned Subordinate Judge to add a fourth issue to the effect that the contract, if any, between the parties was a wagering contract. The learned Subordinate Judge disallowed the prayer of defendants' Pleader.

The defendants have presented the present application in revision from the order of the learned Subordinate Judge rejecting the request of their Pleader to add a fourth issue in the case about the character of the contract. A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the plaintiff to the effect that no revision lies from an interlocutory order. A number of cases have been cited on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent in support of the preliminary objection, while the learned Counsel for the appellants relies upon certain cases of this Court as also upon some cases of other High Courts. We think it unnecessary to express an opinion upon the pure and net question of law whether a revision from an interlocutory order lies to this Court or not, as in the present case the applicants have another remedy open to them also when the case goes to trial and is disposed of. If they are by the omission of the proposed issue affected adversely and lose the case in the first Court, they can always in appeal to this Court urge the objection that the defence was not considered in its entirety. Under these circumstances the present application is not maintainable We would, however, like to remark that it would have been advisable, and it is still open to the Subordinate Judge to do so, if an issue were framed or is framed in accordance with the suggestion of the defendants-appellants, it would, in our opinion, save further trouble in the case.

We dismiss the application but make no order as to the costs.

Application dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 4, 105—Scope of Act—'Landlord', 'tenant', meanings of—S. 105, applicability of, to non-agricultural lands in Mufassil municipality.

In its general scope, the Bengal Tenancy Act is a law for agricultural landlords and tenants. [p. 413, col. 1.]

'Tenant' and 'landlord' in section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act mean, respectively, a tenant and a landlord as defined in section 4 of the Act. [p. 413, col 1]

Section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply to non-agricultural lands situated in a Mufassil municipality and occupied by tenants engaged in trade or other non-agricultural employment. [p. 413, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—This appeal and connected Rule 473 raise the question whether section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies to non-agricultural lands situated in a Mufassil municipality. The lands have been found to be homestead lands occupied by tenants engaged in trade or other non-agricultural employment.

It has been argued that the local extent of operation of the Act extends to all municipalities except Calcutta or other excepted area, which this is not. That may be, but the question before us is whether section 105 applies to the class of tenants which these have been found to be.

The Legislature contemplated, I think, that only three classes of tenants should be regarded as holding lands within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act, viz., a tenure-holder who has been held to mean a person collecting rents from raiyats, raiyats holding lands for the purpose of cultivation and under-raiyats holding under them. The question is whether the tenants here come within the classes mentioned in section 4.

An argument has been sought to be drawn from the fact that putnis have been treated as falling within the Act, and yet some putnis may exist in respect of non-agricultural property such as hats It has, however, been stated without controversy that it has not been held that putnis of this class fall within the Act, whatever may be the case as regards putnis the nature of which brings their holders within the definition of tenure-holder in the Bengal Tenancy Act. There seems to me no doubt that in its general scope the Bengal Tenancy Act is a law for agricultural landlords and tenants.

It is found, as a matter of fact, that the tenants are not of the classes mentioned in section 4. "Tenant" in section 105 means a tenant as defined in section 4. In section 105 "landlord" means the landlord of a tenant defined in section 4 and "land" means land held by a tenant as so defined.

There are two Rules 4783 and 4784. The first has been asked for in case there was no appeal from the Settlement Officer to this Court, and the second in case there was no appeal from the Settlement Officer to the Special Judge. The concurrent conclusion of the learned Judge is correct and this appeal is dismissed with costs and the rules are discharged without costs.

Mortgage—Covenants in favour of mortgagee in case of default—Waiver—Mortgagee, rights of.

Where a mortgage-deed contains a specific covenant that the money due thereunder shall be payable within a certain period and that if it is not paid within that period the mortgagor shall pay the amount at the time of the redemption of an earlier possessory mortgage, which will not be capable of redemption until the money due under the subsequent deed is first paid, it is open to the mortgagee to waive one of the covenants and enforce the other. [p. 414, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 30th April 1918, modifying that of the Munsif, Purwa, dated the 22nd December 1917.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellants.

Mr. Tara Shankar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption. The mortgaged property comprised a fractional share in a certain village. The mortgagors held two groves therein which stood on plots Nos. 208 and 249 Khasra, but they were expressly excluded from the mortgage. The allegation of the plaintiffs was that the mortgage-money was satisfied from the usufruct of the property mortgaged and of the two groves over which the mortgagees were given possession subsequent to the mortgage. The defence was that the mortgagees held three deeds of further charge, the amount due on which was recoverable from the mortgagors at the time of redemption of the first mortgage. There was a further plea that the mortgagees had been in adverse possession of the groves in question from about 27 years.

The Court of first instance decreed the claim for redemption subject to the payment of Rs. 1,009 6 0 with proportionate costs and future interest at 12 per cent. per annum on the principal moneys secured by the deeds of further charge. It excluded the two groves from the decree, holding that the said plots had not been entrusted to the mortgagees in the manner alleged. Both the parties appealed. The lower Appellate Court disallowed the amount claimed on the strength of the deeds of further charge. It held that the claim for the recovery of that amount was barred by time. It further held that the groves in question formed an accretion to the mortgaged property and that the plaintiffs, who are the legal representatives of the deceased mortgagor, were entitled to recover possession thereof along with the mortgaged property at the time of redemption.

The decision of the lower Appellate Court cannot, however, be sustained. The deed of mortgage contained a specified covenant that the money due thereon shall be payable within a certain period and that if it was not paid within that period the mortgagors shall pay the same at the time of the redemption of the earlier possessory mortgage, which will not be capable of redemption till the money due on those deeds was first paid. Out of the two alternative covenants the mortgagees waived the first and chose to enforce the second and as laid down in Narna v. Ammani Amma (1) there was nothing in law to prevent them from doing so.

The effect of the second covenant was that the money due on the deeds of further charge was consolidated with that due on the deed of possessory mortgage and the latter could not be redeemed without the payment of the money due on the former. No question of limitation arises, because the defendants who represent the interest of the mortgagees have a right to retain possession till the entire money due on the deed of possessory mortgage and the deed of further charge is liquidated. The decision in Kesar Kunwar v. Kashi Ram (2), to which the learned Counsel for the respondents has referred, cannot be followed in view of the decision of this Court in Meharban Singh v. Raghunath Singh (3). The amount due on the deeds of further charge is, therefore, still recoverable.

The next question is whether the defendants are entitled to claim interest on the deeds of further charge at a rate higher than what was allowed by the Court of first instance. Two of the deeds provide for payment of interest at 2 per cent. per mensem compoundable periodically. The third deed provided for payment of interest at 2-8 0 per cent. per mensem compoundable in a similar manner. The amount of loan taken by each of these deeds is not very large. The mortgagors were indebted to the mortgagees from before and, considering the rate of interest exacted, it is not unreasonable to presume that the mortgagees took advantage of their position in getting such terms as they liked to impose. The interest allowed by the Court of first instance is not unreasonable.

It is also contended that the deeds of further charge were executed without any legal necessity, but on that point the decision of the Court below is unassailable. The earlier deeds of further charge were executed by Manna, the original mortgagor. The last deed of further charge was executed by Dwarka, son of Manna. Therein Dwarka referred to the earlier deeds of further charge and thereby ratified those deeds. It is not open to him or to his legal representatives to question their propriety now.

The only other point involved in the appeal is that relating to the groves standing on plots Nos. 208 and 249 old Khasra. They were not included in the mortgage and the profits which the defendants received from either of those groves cannot be credited in the mortgage account. The capacity in which the defendants realized their profits need not also be considered.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with proportionate costs here and in the lower Appellate Court. The plaintiffs will bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

pal and agent—Agent borrowing money unauthorisedly and paying to principal's creditors—Suit by agent for recovery of amount paid—Limitation—Repudiation, absence of, whether amounts to ratification.

A suit by an agent to recover from his principal money borrowed by the former without the latter's authority or ratification but which he paid to the latter's creditors is governed by Article 61 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, the cause of action arising when payment is made to the principal's creditors.

Aghore Nath Mukhopadhya v. Grish Chunder Mukhopadhya, 20 C. 18; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S) 13; Kandaswami Pillai v. Avayambal alias Thangachi Ammal, 7 Ind. Cas. 399; 34 M. 167; 20 M. L J. 989; 8 M. L. T. 194, (1910) M. W. N. 316, followed.

A mere failure to repudiate in terms an unauthorised transaction does not amount to ratification.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Masulipatam, in Appeal Suit No. 76 of 1917 (Appeal Suit No. 142 of 1916, Sub-Court, Ellore, and Appeal Suit No. 204 of 1915, Sub-Court, Bezwada), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Ellore, in Original Suit No. 944 of 1914.

FACTS.—Plaintiff, who was the agent of the defendants' father, borrowed money without the latter's authority from third parties and paid it to the defendants' father's creditors. He then wrote to his principal intimating the fact of his having borrowed unauthorisedly and asking pardon for the same. To this letter the defendants' father sent no reply. The plaintiff brought the present suit for recovery of the said sum more than 3 years after the said payment. The Subordinate Judge found that though the plaintiff was not expressly authorised by his principal to borrow, the latter subsequently ratified the transaction. He held that the suit was not barred. Defendants appealed to the High Court.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Appellants.—The borrowing by the plaintiff was neither authorised nor ratified by his principal, the defendants' father. To the letter, Exhibit I, apologising for his conduct, plaintiff received no reply. Silence will not amount to ratification.

The cause of action for the suit arose on the date of plaintiff's payment to the defendants' father's creditors. The suit is barred under Article 61 of the Limitation Act. See Aghore Nath Mukhopadhy v. Grish Chunder Mukhopadhya (1), Kandaswami Pillai v. Avayambal alias Thangachi Ammal (2).

Mr. T. Prakasam, for the Respondent.—The principal did not in terms repudiate the plaintiff's action. The suit is not barred. See Girraj Singh v. Mul Chand (3).

JUDGMENT.—The question of authorisation is res judicata against plaintiff by reason of the decision in Appeal Suit No. 22 of 1910. The Subordinate Judge holds that there was subsequent ratification, but there is nothing in the facts found by him to justify such a conclusion. All that is shown is that plaintiff in Exhibit I reported to defendants' father the fact that he had borrowed the money and asked pardon for having done so without authority, and wanted orders to pay it back. No reply appears to have been sent to this, and there is no evidence of defendants' father having done or said anything in ratification of plaintiff's action. It cannot be said that he ratified it simply by failing to repudiate it in terms.

In the absence of authority or ratification it must be held that plaintiff's cause of action arose when he paid to the creditors of defendants' father the money which he (plaintiff) had borrowed. The Article applicable is Article 61, Indian Limitation Act, and the suit is clearly time barred. This view is in accord with the decisions in Aghore Nath Mukhopadhya v. Grish Chunder Mukhopadhya (1) and in Kandaswami Pillai v. Avayambal alias Thangachi Ammal (2). On the respondent's side Girraj Singh v. Mul Chand (3) was relied on: but that case is easily distinguishable. It is not a case of principal and agent at all, but of one person borrowing money for the benefit of another to whom it was directly paid, and who contracted to repay it himself or indemnify the nominal borrower.

We must set aside the decrees of the lower Courts and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

CIVIL REVISIONS NOS. 108 AND 109 OF 1919.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, rr. 4, 9, O. XXI, rr. 90, 100, 101—Execution of decree—Application to set aside sale—Dismissal for default—Application for restoration, maintainability of.

Order IX, rule 9, of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply to an order dismissing for default an application to set aside under Order XXI, rule 90, of the Code a sale held in execution of a decree.

Rule 4 of Order IX expressly applies to suits, and a case under Order XXI, rules 100 and 101, is not a suit within the meaning of that rule.

Civil revisions from orders of the Munsif, Purneah.

Mr. Akbari Husnain, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Nirsu Narain Singh, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—These two revision petitions come before me under the following circumstances. The petitioner purchased and got possession of a jote belonging to the judgment-debtor on the 24th of March 1913. On the 23rd of April the opposite party preferred an objection under Order XXI, rules 100 and 101. At the time of the hearing of the application the opposite party failed to put in an appearance, with the result that its petition under Order XXI, rules 100 and 101, was dismissed for default on the 15th September 1918. On the 21st of October 1918 they put in a petition under Order IX, rule 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure for re-hearing of the petition which was dismissed for default. This petition for re hearing was rejected on the 29th November 1918 as no step was taken by the applicant. On the 30th November 1918 there was another application under Order IX, rule 4, by the opposite party for restoring to file the execution case which was dismissed for non-prosecution. On 20th January 1919 the petition of the 30th November 1918 was allowed and the re-hearing of the case was restored to its original number, that is to say, the re-hearing case which was rejected on the 29th November 1918 was restored to its original number. Against this order of the 20th January 1919 there is one petition being Revision Case No. 109 of 1919. Subsequently by a further order, dated 3rd February 1919, the re hearing petition was allowed and the objection case was restored to its original number. As against this order of 3rd February 1919 there is another application which is Revision Case No. 108 of 1919.

The point which has been taken before me by the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioner is very short, and it is this: that the Court had no power under Order IX rule 4, to restore a case under Order XXI, rules 100 and 101. The Special Bench of this Court has decided in the case of Bhubaneswar Prasad Singh v. Tilakdhari Lal (1) that Order IX, rule 9, of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, does not apply to an order dismissing for default an application to set aside under Order XXI, rule 90, a sale held in execution of a decree. In my opinion that decision is applicable to the facts of this case. It seems to me that Order IX, rule 4, expressly applies to a suit and it cannot be urged at all that a case under Order XXI, rules 100 and 101, is a suit within the meaning of Order IX, rule 4.

I hold that I am bound by the decision of the Special Bench of this Court and I would, therefore, allow these applications and set aside the orders passed by the learned Munsif on the 20th January 1919 and 3rd February 1919. The petitioner is entitled to his costs which I assess at two gold mohurs in each case.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 193—Fabricating false evidence--Witnessing service of summons on wrong person—Offence.

In a rent suit summonses were issued to, amongst others, one S. Accused No. 1 identified a person as S. and the summons was served on him; accused Nos. 2 and · were witnesses to the service. It appeared, however, that S had died some years before the suit was instituted. The three accused were accordingly convicted of an offence under section 193 of the Penal Code:

Held, that the conviction of accused Nos. 2 and 3 could not be maintained, as it was not proved that they were aware that service was to be effected upon S.

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Monghyr, dated the 29th April 1919, affirming in appeal the order, dated the 27th March 1919, of the Deputy Magistrate, Monghyr.

Mr. Sami, for the Petitioners.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—I am clearly of opinion that the conviction of petitioners Nos. 2 and 3 cannot be upheld. The facts are shortly these: There was a rent suit by one Hakim Mohammad Reza and others against Dabu, Sukar and others. It appears that Sukar had died long before this rent suit was instituted. Summons, however, on the defendants was served on the 21st January 1918. The petitioner No. 1 was the identifier on whose identification summons was served on Sukar. Petitioners Nos. 2 and 3 were witnesses to the service of summons. They have all been convicted under section 193, Indian Penal Code. This Court refused to interfere so far as petitioner No. 1 is concerned. The only question which I have to consider is whether the conviction of petitioners Nos. 2 and 3 can be upheld.

I have already mentioned that petitioners Nos. 2 and 3 were merely witnesses to the service of summons. That does not imply that they were aware on whom service was to be effected. Section 192, Indian Penal Code, provides as follows:—

"Whoever causes any circumstance to exist, or makes any false entry in any book or record, or makes any document containing a false statement, intending that such circumstance, false entry or false statement may appear in evidence in a judicial proceeding, or in a proceeding taken by law before a public servant as such, or before an arbitrator, and that such circumstance, false entry or false statement, so appearing in evidence, may cause any person who in such proceeding is to form an opinion upon the evidence, to entertain an erroneous opinion touching any point material to the result of such proceeding, is said 'to fabricate false evidence.'"

Did the petitioners Nos. 2 and 3 cause any circumstance to exist or make any false entry in any book or record, or make any document containing a false statement, intending that such circumstance, false entry or false statement might appear in evidence in a proceeding taken by law before a public servant as such? I am clearly of opinion that the answer cannot be in the affirmative. If indeed it had been proved that they were aware on whom service was to be effected, the matter would have stood on a different footing altogether. But that is not the finding of the Courts below and so far as I have read the evidence and I have certainly examined some of the evidence in the case—oral and documentary—I do not find that it has been proved that they were at all aware of the fact that service was to be effected on Sukar. It may well be that the identifier told them that service was to be effected on some other person. Before these petitioners can be convicted of an offence under section 193, it must, in my opinion, appear that they were aware that service was to be effected on Sukar. In my opinion their conviction under section 193, Indian Penal Code, cannot be sustained.

I, therefore, set aside the conviction and the sentence passed on the petitioners Nos. 2 and 3.

Conviction set aside.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 293 OF 1919.
June 24, 1919.
Present:— Mr. Justice Piggott.
BABU RAM—ACCUSED—APPLICANT
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 234, 235, 476, 537 (b)—Order directing prosecution in respect of one offence—Joinder of charges—Jurisdiction of Magistrate—Objection not taken during trial—Sanction, want of, in respect of second charge—Irregularity.

Accused instituted two suits against two different persons in two different Courts, one in the Court of the City Munsif and the other in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. Both suits were tried on the Small Cause side and dismissed. The Sub-Judge directed under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, the prosecution of the accused under section 209 of the Penal Code and of three other persons under section 193 of the same Code The Magistrate taking cognizance of the case framed charges against the accused in respect of both the suits, and the accused entered upon his defence. Evidence was recorded for both prosecution and defence without any objection to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to take cognizance of the offences, or as to the validity of the procedure adopted in trying both charges at one and the same trial. After he was convicted, the accused appealed to the Sessions Judge protesting against the joinder of the two charges, and also against the action of the Magistrate in taking cognizance of the offence alleged to have been committed in respect of the suit filed in the Court of the City Munsif, urging that he had been taken by surprise at the course adopted by the Magistrate, as he believed he was on his trial for the offence in respect of the suit in the Court of the Sub-Judge, and was greatly prejudiced in his defence by this belief. The Sessions Judge declined to interfere and the accused moved the High Court in revision:

Held, that the case was covered by section 537 (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code, as the accused, who had every opportunity of doing so and who had full warning from the date on which the charge was framed of the fact that he was being put upon his trial in respect of both offences, had acquiesced in the view taken by the Magistrate and had never at any stage of the trial in that Court raised the question of the Court's jurisdiction in respect of the offence alleged to have been committed in the City Munsif's Court; that at most the Magistrate had committed an error, but the error had not in any way prejudiced the accused by the procedure adopted. [p. 420, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Bareilly, dated the 15th April 1919.

Mr. J. N. Misra, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This application in revision arises out of the following facts. On the 6th of April 1918 the applicant Babu Ram instituted two civil suits in two different Courts against two different persons. In one case he claimed a sum of Rs. 33 10 0 from one Badri Prasad. This suit was instituted in the Court of the City Munsif of Bareilly, was tried on the Small Cause Court side, and was dismissed on the 23rd of April 1918. In the other suit Babu Ram claimed a sum of Rs. 140 from one Musammat Ganga Dei in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bareilly. This suit also was tried on the Small Cause Court side and was also dismissed. The learned Subordinate Judge then took proceedings under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code against Babu Ram and against certain persons who had appeared as witnesses before his Court in support of Babu Ram's claim against Musammat Ganga Dei. In the course of those proceedings he sent for and examined the file of the suit against Badri Prasad in the City Munsif's Court. On the 1st of June 1918, he recorded an order directing the prosecution of Babu Ram under section 209 of the Indian Penal Code and of three other persons under section 193 of the same Code. The Magistrate who took cognizance of the matter enquired into the conduct of Babu Ram in respect of both the suits filed by him. He framed charges alleging against Babu Ram that he had fraudulently or dishonestly, or with intent to injure Badri Prasad and Musammat Ganga Dei, made against each of them, on one and the same day, a claim in two different Courts of Justice which he knew to be false. After the charges had been framed Babu Ram entered on his defence. The prosecution witnesses were re called and cross examined and witnesses for the defence were heard on three subsequent dates, the last of which was one month and eleven days after the framing of the charges. It is quite clear that in the Magistrate's Court no objection was taken as to the jurisdiction of the Court to take cognizance of both offences, or as to the validity of the procedure adopted in trying both these charges at one and the same trial. It was an essential part of the case for the prosecution that these two false claims had been preferred by Babu

Ram out of enmity against Badri Prasad, his reason for proceeding against Musammat Ganga Dei being that that lady is related to Badri Prasad and lives in one and the same house with him. So far, therefore, as concerns the trial of these two charges together, the procedure adopted is not merely warranted by section 234 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but the case actually falls within the purview of section 235 (1) of the same Code, the case for the prosecution being that the bringing of two false claims against Badri Prasad and Musammat Ganga Dei respectively formed part of the same transaction. The trying Magistrate, and also the Sessions Judge on appeal, have found that the case for the prosecution was fully made out on the facts, that the two claims preferred by Babu Ram were false to his knowledge, and were preferred dishonestly and with intent to injure Badri Prasad and Musammat Ganga Dei. In his memorandum of appeal to the Sessions Court Babu Ram protested against the joinder of the two charges, and also against the action of the Magistrate in taking cognizance of the offence alleged to have been committed by the filing of the false claim against Badri Prasad in the Court of the City Munsif. He has stated in the said petition of appeal that he was taken by surprise by the course adopted by the Magistrate, that he believed himself to be on his trial only in respect of the claim brought against Musammat Ganga Dei and that he was greatly prejudiced in his defence by this belief An examination of the record shows that these assertions are absolutely false. Babu Ram had fair warning that he was charged in respect of both offences. He did in fact defend himself in respect of both charges. He had abundant opportunity of doing so, and he never in the Magistrate's Court challenged the legality or propriety of the procedure adopted. The learned Sessions Judge, concurring with the view taken of the fact by the Magistrate, has declined to interfere on any legal ground, holding that the joinder of charges was justified, that, if any error was committed in respect of the Magistrate's taking cognizance of the offence alleged to have been committed in respect of the filing of the suit in the City Munsif's Court, the accused had not been prejudiced thereby and that the provisions of section 537 (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code, more particularly when considered in connection with the explanation appended to the aforesaid section, forbid interference on appeal or revision on the mere ground of want of sanction in respect of this particular offence, or of irregularity in the proceedings taken under section 476 by the learned Subordinate Judge.

In the petition of revision to this Court these points are again raised. I have to consider, first of all, whether the learned Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to take proceedings in respect of the false claim alleged to have been preferred in the City Munsif's Court. My answer on this point is that on the materials at present available I am unable to answer this question positively either in the affirmative or in the negative. If it was made a part of Musammat Ganga Dei's defence in the suit before the learned Subordinate Judge that the preferring of this false claim against her was part of a conspiracy, another step in which had been the filing of a false claim against Badri Prasad in the City Munsif's Court, and if in consequence the learned Subordinate Judge sent for and examined the record of the trial in the City Munsif's Court, and if, in fact, the question of the false claim preferred against Badri Prasad was brought to his notice in the course of a judicial proceeding, that is to say, in the course of his trial of the claim brought against Musammat Ganga Dei, then he had jurisdiction to direct the prosecution of Babu Ram for having preferred the false claim against Badri Prasad in the City Munsif's Court, as well as for having preferred a false claim against Musammat Ganga Dei in his own Court. If I thought it essential in the interests of justice to do so, I should adjourn the present proceedings in order to call for the record of the Suit No. 320 of 1918, on the Small Cause Court side, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bareilly, in order to enquire further into these matters. For reasons which will become sufficiently obvious in the course of this order, I do not think this necessary. If this were the only point to be determined on this application, I should be perfectly justified in holding that the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code must be presumed to be a good and valid order, unless and until the applicant can satisfy this Court to the contrary. A more serious difficulty has, however, been raised in respect of the same order. It is undoubtedly ambiguous in its terms and lays itself open to the contention that the learned Subordinate Judge, although he had examined the file of the suit in the City Munsif's Court in order to form a sound opinion regarding the transaction as a whole, did not, as a matter of fact, intend to direct the prosecution of Babu Ram in respect of the claim preferred in the City Munsif's Court, but only in respect of the claim preferred against Musammat Ganga Dei in his own Court. I am not prepared to go further than to say that the order of the learned Subordinate Judge of June the 1st, 1918, is ambiguous, and does not make it as clear as it should do whether he intended to direct the prosecution of Babu Ram in respect of two offences under section 209 of the Indian Penal Code, or of one only. Now I am content to deal with the matter upon this basis. I take it that the Magistrate who tried Babu Ram on these two charges had before him an ambiguously worded order, as to which it can fairly be contended that it does not make it clear whether the prosecution of Babu Ram in respect of the claim preferred in the City Munsif's Court is or is not ordered. I take it that the Magistrate in all good faith believed that the order of June the 1st, 1918, directed Babu Ram's prosecution in respect of both offences. He acted upon that belief, and the accused, who had every opportunity of doing so, and who had full warning from the date on which the charge was framed of the fact that he was being put upon his trial in respect of both offences, acquiesced in the view taken by the Magistrate and never at any stage of the trial in that Court raised the question of the Court's want of jurisdiction in respect of the offence alleged to have been committed in the City Munsif's Court. On this state of facts I am prepared to hold that the case is covered by the provisions of section 537 (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code. When all is said and done, the words which occur in that sub-section, "the want of any sanction required by section 195 or any irregularity in proceedings taken under section 476", must have some meaning; it is contrary to the canons of sound interpretation to press the words, "passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction", in the first part of the said section so as to make it impossible for the words quoted from sub-section (b) to have any meaning at all, that is to say, to be applicable in any possible case. I have before me a ruling of this Court on which I desire to found myself. It is the case of Emperor v. Zahir Singh (1) decided by Mr. Justice Tudball. With regard to section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the learned Judge remarks: "The section was intended to prevent a mere technicality from interfering with the course of justice, the error, omission, etc., being one which had escaped all parties at the beginning of the proceeding." The present seems to me precisely such a case. The error, if it was an error, committed by the Magistrate in the present case, was in interpreting the Subordinate Judge's order of June the 1st, 1918, as covering both the offences under section 209 of the Indian Penal Code to which reference is made in the course of the said order. The error, if it was one, certainly escaped observation, not merely at the beginning of the proceeding in the Magistrate's Court, but throughout the entire trial in that Court. I am satisfied that in no event could it be said that Babu Ram was prejudiced by the procedure adopted. It was an essential part of the case for the prosecution that two false claims had been brought by Babu Ram, on one and the same date, in two different Courts, in pursuance of the same vengeful purpose; and that the bringing of those two false claims constituted two acts so connected together as to form part of one and the same transaction. Even if Babu Ram had been on his trial only in respect of the false claim preferred against Musammat Ganga Dei, the evidence given by Badri Prasad would have been relevant under more than one section of the Indian Evidence Act.

The sentences passed in this case are rigorous imprisonment for one year and a fine of Rs. 100 on each charge. The sentences of imprisonment have been ordered to run concurrently, so that when all is said and done, the only practical effect of the trial of the two offences together is that Babu Ram is condemned to a fine of Rs. 200 instead of a fine of Rs. 100 only. While, therefore, I entertain no doubt in my own mind as to the correctness of the principles of law on the strength of which I have decided to dismiss this application, I am prepared in view of the somewhat complex nature of the questions of law raised to take into consideration the question of sentence. There is no clear evidence on the record as to the means of Babu Ram; but I am disposed to infer that his position in life is such as to make the payment of a fine of Rs. 200 a somewhat serious matter for him. Moreover, if it is permissible to look at the matter from a somewhat technical point of view, it may be said that the false claim against Musammat Ganga Dai was for a considerably larger amount and constituted a more serious offence than the bringing of the false claim against Badri Prasad, so that some distinction might be made between the two in the matter of the sentence. My order, therefore, is this that as a question of law I affirm the conviction of Babu Ram in respect of both the offences of which he has been tried and convicted; but for the reasons given, I reduce the sentence passed upon him in the matter of the second offence charged, that is to say, the false claim brought against Badri Prasad in the Court of the City Munsif, and I do so by setting aside the sentence of fine passed in respect of the conviction on that charge. The net result is that Babu Ram remains liable to two concurrent sentences of rigorous imprisonment amounting to one (1) year in all, and to a single fine of rupees one hundred (Rs. 100), with an alternative period of rigorous imprisonment. I understand that Babu Ram has been released on bail, if so, he must surrender to his bail; to undergo the unexpired portion of his sentence. If the full fine of Rs. 200 has been paid then one-half of it, that is to say Rs. 100 will be refunded.

Sentence reduced.

CRIMINAL REVISION NO. 162 OF 1919.

June 19, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Atkinson.

DAROGI CHAMAR AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 367, 427—Criminal appeal—Judgment of Appellate Court, contents of.

The law requires an Appellate Court to write a reasoned and considered judgment, setting out the facts and points arising for determination and stating the reasons and grounds for its decision. A judgment which omits to do this, the Judge in appeal contenting himself with saying that he adopts the reasons given by the trial Court to support the grounds of his decision for maintaining the conviction of an accused person, is erroneous in form, as such a judgment cannot be read as supplementary or additional to, or to be explained and deciphered by the aid of, the judgment of the trial Court.[p. 423, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sub Divisional Officer, Bhagalpur, dated the 31st April 1 19, affirming in appeal the conviction of the petitioner by a Magistrate of the 2nd Class, dated the 24th March 1919.

FACTS—The judgment of the Appellate Court was as follows:—

"I have carefully gone through the judgment. The appellants appear to have been rightly convicted under section 411, Indian Penal Code. Apparently three bags containing paddy were stolen from the complainant's verandah. Two of them were recovered from the house of accused Darbeshi. The contents of one were emptied and divided into six shares. The third bag could not be discovered. The reasons given in the lower Court's judgment for his finding commend themselves to me also and I accept it and uphold the conviction of the appellants but regard being had to the nature of the offence, the sentence appears to me to be too severe and I accordingly reduce it to one of three months' rigorous imprisonment in each case."

Mr. A. P. Upadhaya.

JUDGMENT.—The five petitioners herein were charged with an offence under section 411 of the Indian Penal Code, viz., dishonestly receiving stolen property.

It appears that three sacks of paddy belonging to the complainant were taken from his verandah by night and that on the following day two of the sacks were discovered in the house of accused No. 2, the paddy having been taken out from the sacks and divided into portions.

The learned Magistrate of the 2nd Class, who tried this case, sets forth in his judgment very cogent reasons for showing that all the accused are guilty of an offence within the meaning of section 411 of the Indian Penal Code. The learned trial Magistrate considered the case and the evidence as against each accused, and he found that the taking of the sacks of paddy from the complainant's verandah by the petitioners was with the dishonest intention of appropriating complainant's property to the petitioners' use.

On appeal the case came before Mr. Sircar, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Bhagalpore, and I confess that his judgment is, in my opinion, perfunctory in the extreme. Section 424 of the Criminal Procedure Code read with section 367 provides what a judgment of an Appellate Court should contain to be a judgment such as the law requires. Section 367 provides that it shall contain the point or points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for arriving at the decision.

Now the judgment of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate does not state the point or points arising for determination and the reasons for the decision at which the Appellate Court has arrived.

The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate on appeal has not considered whether upon the evidence the taking of the bags by the accused was a taking by them dishonestly knowing that the same was stolen property, nor has the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate on appeal considered the weight of the evidence adduced at the trial as against each of the accused individually, and as to how far such evidence would warrant a conviction of each of the five persons charged in the appeal which he was called upon to determine.

The ruling reported as Ram Lal Singh v. Hari Charan Ahir (1), in my opinion, applies in its reasoning with direct precision to the facts of the particular case now before me; and with the authority of that decision I venture to express my entire concurrence. Sir Lawrence Jenkins says:—

"It is continually overlooked by Courts of Appeal that section 424 of the Criminal Procedure Code prescribes that the rules contained in Chapter XXVI as to the judgment of a Criminal Court of original jurisdiction shall apply, so far as may be practicable, to the judgment of any Appellate Court, other than a High Court, and one of the sections in Chapter XXVI is section 367, which prescribes that a judgment shall, among other things, contain the point or points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision. Now, the conviction in this case by the Court of first instance was both under sections 379 and 143. For the purpose of an offence under section 379, it is necessary that it should be proved that there was an intention to take dishonestly any moveable property out of the possession of the person aggrieved without that person's consent; and one of the points for determination, therefore, is whether there was that intention. Admittedly there is no finding on that point in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. This is not a mere technical objection, because one of the points urged on the part of the defence is that, though there may have been the moving of property, there was not the intention to take that property dishonestly out of the possession of any other person, inasmuch as, it is contended, there was a bona fide claim of right; so that it is apparent that it was absolutely essential that that point should be contained in the judgment and that it should be decided."

The reasoning of that decision, in my opinion, applies with striking force to the facts of this case.

The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate in appeal contents himself with saying that he adopts the reasons given by the trial Court to support the grounds of his decision for maintaining the conviction of all the accused on appeal.

In my opinion such a judgment is quite erroneous in form. The judgment of the Appellate Court must stand by itself and cannot be read as supplementary or additional or to be explained and deciphered by aid of the judgment of the trial Court. Authority for this proposition is to be found in Jamait Mullick v. Emperor (2). And in this Court also I think the reasoning of a decision reported as Gurubari Behera v. Emperor (3) would apply, viz., that the law requires an Appellate Court to write a reasoned and considered judgment setting out the facts and points arising for determination and stating the reasons and grounds for its decision.

In my opinion the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate has failed to discharge the duty which the law cast upon him. The case must be remanded to him so that he may write a proper judgment upon the facts and evidence, and I should like him to state also his reasons for reducing the sentence of six months passed by the trial Court to a period of three months' rigorous imprisonment against each of the accused. If the learned Sub Divisional Magistrate was honestly satisfied that the reasoning of the trial Court was satisfactory and convincing, it is hard to understand how he came to reduce the sentence in the manner in which he did.

However, I shall remand the case to the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate to enable him to write a proper judgment in accordance with law.

As the accused are on bail, let them remain on bail pending a proper judgment being prepared by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

Case remanded.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 75 OF 1917.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT—PETITIONER

versus

PYARELAL—ACCUSED.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 376—Rape—Punishment, measure of, how to be determined.

The measure of punishment for an offence of rape, under section 376 of the Penal Code, should be proportioned to the greater or less atrocity of the crime, to the conduct of the criminal and to the defenceless and unprotected state of the injured female. The fact that the family of the injured girl have condoned the offence on being paid a sum of money should not be taken into consideration in determining the heinousness of the offence, or of the punishment to be inflicted. [p. 424, col. 1.]

Queen v. Jhantah Noshyo, 6 W. R. Cr. 59, followed.

Criminal revision for enhancement of sentence against the order of the Sessions Judge, Nerbudda Division, dated the 2nd April 1917, confirming the order of the District Magistrate, Betul, dated the 5th March 1917.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

ORDER.—Pyarelal, son of Mukandlal, a Bania boy eighteen years of age, has been convicted by the District Magistrate, Betul, of raping one Rasi, a Rajput girl aged thirteen or fourteen years of age, and sentenced under section 376 of the Indian Penal Code to six months' rigorous imprisonment. The conviction and the sentence have been confirmed in appeal. The Local Government applies in revision for enhancement of the sentence on the ground that the sentence awarded is grossly inadequate. The accused, though noticed, is not represented in this Court. The District Magistrate, replying to the Rule calling upon him to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced, states that in view of the accused's youth and position he is of opinion that the sentence awarded is sufficient and that to protract this sentence to a term of years is merely to habituate the prisoner at an impressionable age to the companionship of criminals without enhancing the deterrent effects of the punishment. The offence of which Pyarelal has been found guilty, and there is no question as to his guilt, is one of a particularly atrocious kind. The offence was pre-meditated and the medical evidence shows that considerable injury was done to the girl. That her family may have condoned the offence on being paid Rs. 20 is not a fact that should be taken into account in determining the heinousness of the offence or the punisnment to be inflicted. It has been held that in these cases the measure of punishment should be proportioned to the greater or less atrocity of the crime, to the conduct of the criminal and to the defenceless and unprotected state of the injured female; see Queen v. Jhantah Noshyo (1). The accused is a young man, but he is old enough to know the seriousness and consequences of the offence he has committed. The sentence is clearly inadequate. I enhance it to three years' rigorous imprisonment.

Sentence enhanced.

CRIMINAL MISCELLANEOUS REVISION No. 26 OF 1919.

July 14, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Mullick and Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.

JAMUNA KANTH JHA—PETITIONER

versus

RUDRA KUMAR JHA AND OTHERS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 526—Transfer of case—Complainant, whether competent to apply for transfer.

Ordinarily, the only persons who are recognised by the Criminal Procedure Code as parties to a criminal case are the persons who have the right to control the proceedings; these are, the Crown, the accused and parties engaged in conducting certain proceedings within the meaning of the Code. The Code does not recognise a private prosecutor, who is a complainant, as a party to the case, and he, consequently, is not competent to apply for a transfer as a party interested. [p. 425, col. 2; p. 426, col. 1.]

Criminal application made to the High Court in its criminal revisional jurisdiction on behalf of the petitioners for the transfer of a case pending in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Madhipura, District Bhagalpur.

FACTS are fully set forth in the judgment of Jwala Prasad, J.

Mr. Monohar Lall (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown, raised a preliminary objection to the entertainment of this application inasmuch as the petitioner had no locus standi to move this Court. The petitioner lodged an information at the Thana and the case is now proceeding as a Police case and is being conducted by the Public Prosecutor. The petitioner is only a prosecution witness. He is neither the complainant nor the accused nor the Public Prosecutor, and only these three persons are contemplated by clause (8) of section 526 and these only can move the High Court. The Code draws a distinction between a complainant and an informant. Complaint is defined in section 4 (h)—therefore by necessary implication complainant must mean a person who lodges the complaint as defined in the Code. See section 154 where an informant is clearly mentioned and not a complainant.

The petitioner, if dissatisfied with the Police inquiry could have impugned the Police report by an application before the Magistrate. He then becomes a complainant and is then only entitled to move the High Court. The petitioner is neither a 'party interested' as contemplated by clause (3) of section 526. The only parties in a criminal trial are the Crown and the accused in Police or Crown cases and the complainant and the accused in private cases. The test is who is responsible for the conduct of the case, although nominally the Crown is the Prosecutor in all criminal trials. If this petitioner be held to be a party interested, then every prosecution witness who has received the slightest injury will be a party interested and there will be no end of petitions for transfer before the High Court and the work of the Courts below will be paralysed. Of course my submission on this point is independent of the powers of your Lordships to inquire in this matter yourself, which your Lordships can always do. The only case of this High Court that comes nearest to this is the case of Hari Prasad Panday v. Jagannath Singh (1).

Lastly on merits the petitioner has no grievance. A Court is justified to take action against a witness under section 228, Indian Penal Code. The Courts have wide powers to exercise a discretion under that section and if every time a Court takes action under that section with a view to prevent miscarriage of justice it is to be presumed that the Court is biassed, the effect would practically be to deprive Magistrates of this very salutary power. In fact if anybody should complain against this, it is the Crown, but the Crown are satisfied that the case should go on in the Court of the Magistrate.

Mr. S. Sinha, for the Petitioner.—If this case ends in an acquittal, I shall be liable for maliciously prosecuting the case and also can be mulcted in damages in the Civil Court. It is, therefore, to say the least unfair that I should not be allowed to move the High Court. I quote Gaya Prasad v. Bhagat Singh (2).

A narrow construction ought not to be put on the word complainant. It is not defined in the Code and I submit it must include the informant to the Police. It seems anomalous that the same man when he sets the criminal law in motion by going to the Police loses his rights which are taken to be vested in him when he moves the Magistrate.

My witnesses have been terrified and they are afraid of giving evidence before this Magistrate.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—In consequence of information given to the Police by the petitioner who was one of the persons injured, a number of persons are now under trial before the District Magistrate of Bhagalpur for the offence of rioting. The petitionor has moved for a transfer of the case under section 526, Criminal Procedure Code, on the ground that the Court has shown bias against the prosecution

Although every private person, under the law in England, has a right to set the criminal law in motion, his control over the prosecution is not unlimited. The Crown is in theory the prosecutor for all offences and the individual wronged can only assist the Crown for the purpose of collecting evidence and making the investigation necessary to bring the offender to justice. In continental countries the stricter view prevails that prosecutions, having punishment for their object, can only be instituted by public authority, though a person injured by a crime may join in the prosecution as a partie civile, under certain rules. But even English Law, though it permits A to prosecute B for libel upon C or for an assault upon D, although A may have no interest in the matter and although C and D may be averse to a prosecution, declines to regard a criminal prosecution as a private action and a private complainant who sets the law in motion as a party to the proceedings.

Nor do the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, dealing with the trial of summons, warrant and Sessions cases, lead to the conclusion that the law is different in India.

In Queen-Empress v. Murarji Gokuldas (3) it was held that the complainant in a trial for ordinary assault was not a party to a judicial proceeding within the meaning of section 8 of the Indian Oaths Act, and in arriving at this result their Lordships would seem to some extent to have been influenced by the consideration that the Criminal Procedure Code gives the power of compounding offences not to the complainant but to the person injured.

In my opinion, strictly speaking, the Code does not recognise a private prosecutor who is a complainant as a party to the case. This seems to be clear from the following provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure:—

(1) Section 340, which enacts that every accused person may, as of right, be defended by a Pleader.

(2) Section 417, which enacts that only the Local Government may appeal against an order of acquittal.

(3) Section 423, which enacts that no order to the prejudice of the accused can be made in revision without giving him an opportunity of being heard.

(4) Section 440, which enacts that no party has a right to be heard in revision either personally or through a Pleader subject always to the provisions of section 439.

(5) Section 556, which enacts that no Judge or Magistrate shall try a case in which he is a party or personally interested.

It seems to be clear that ordinarily the only persons who are recognised by the

(3) 13 B. 389; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 258.

Code as parties to a criminal case are the persons who have the right to be heard, that is to say, persons who have the right to control the proceedings. These are the Crown, the accused and parties engaged in conducting certain proceedings of a quasi civil nature which, accepting the reasonings in Arumuga Tegundan's case (4), I assume to be criminal cases within the meaning of the Code.

Section 526, however, appears to introduce an exception to the general rule, and clause 8 of that section seems to contemplate that a complainant is a party interested for the purposes of clause 3.

But the petitioner before us is not a complainant within the definition in section 4 of the Code and, therefore, he cannot obtain the relief which he seeks. It is contended that complainant in clause 8 should be construed to include the person who gives information to the Police. I cannot accept this view.

If, therefore, the petitioner is not a complainant can he, as a person who has set the Police in motion or who has suffered injuries in the riot, intervene under section 526 as a party interested? The answer, in my opinion, is in the negative because under the general scheme of the Code he is not a party at all. Clause 3 is intended for the persons named in clause 8 and such other persons as have a right to be heard.

In my opinion there is no necessary connection between the obligation to give information for the preservation of law and order and the right to control the proceedings instituted thereon and, therefore, the provisions of section 44 and connected sections do not affect the case.

There does not seem to be any reported case in this Court bearing directly upon the question before us, but the judgment of Chamier, C. J., and Sharfuddin, J., in the unreported Miscellaneous Case No. 96 of 1916 [Hari Prasad Panday v. Jagannath Singh (1)] seems to some extent to support the view which I have taken. In the High Court of Bombay their Lordships have held in Gannon, In re (5) that a person merely by his relationship with the accused did not become competent to apply for a transfer as a person interested.

For the reasons given above I would dismiss the petitioner's application and direct the trial to proceed.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—The petitioner lodged an information with the Police Inspector of Sonbarsa Thana on 18th November 1918 complaining against the opposite party of having committed riot in connection with a dispute over a private ferry of Barasome Ghat, armed with deadly weapons, in the course of which the petitioner and other persons were wounded.

The Police after investigation submitted a charge-sheet, whereupon the opposite party were put upon their trial before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Madhipura. After the examination-in-chief of most of the prosecution witnesses the Magistrate framed charge against the opposite party under section 147, Indian Penal Code, and one of them, Rudra Kumar Jha, was further charged under section 148 of the Code. Some of the prosecution witnesses were cross-examined on the 29th April and the case was adjourned for further cross-examination to 12th May. During the cross-examination of prosecution witness No. 2, Babu Lal Khirar, the Magistrate drew up proceedings against him under section 228 of the Indian Penal Code for having refused to give answer to a question put to him by the defence Mukhtar, Bishwanath Jha, and convicted him under that section and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 50. After that the said witness was further cross-examined.

The petitioner then on the 20th May filed a petition before the Magistrate for postponing further hearing of the case in order to enable him to obtain a transfer of the case to some other Court for trial, on the ground that the remaining prosecution witnesses were frightened owing to the attitude of the Magistrate against the said prosecution witness No. 2. The adjournment was, however, not granted and the further cross-examination of the witnesses continued. On 21st May the petitioner made another application before the Magistrate for postponing the hearing. This also was rejected.

On 27th May the petitioner moved the District Magistrate for the transfer of the case from the file of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. This was also rejected.

On the 2nd June the petitioner moved us for transferring the case from the file of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to some other Magistrate under section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. We refused to stay the further hearing of the case in the Court below but ordered the postponement of the passing of the final order by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate until the disposal of the application in this Court. In the meantime we directed notice of the application to be given to the Government Advocate in order to obtain instruction as to whether or not the Crown intended to oppose this application. The Assistant Government Advocate appears and strongly opposes the application on behalf of the Crown both upon the point of law and upon the merits. This is in itself sufficient to refuse the application of the petitioner, as was pointed out in the unreported Miscellaneous Case No. 96 of 1916 [Hari Prasad Panday v. Jagannath Singh (1)] of this Court. Whatever the rights of a private prosecutor be under section 526 to apply for a transfer, it is certain that his rights are subordinate to that of the Crown "standing forward as prosecutor on behalf of the subject on public grounds", namely, to maintain order, peace and well-being of the society. A subject may have a right to institute civil proceedings to recover money or other property on account of any wrong caused to him by a crime committed by any person, but as regards criminal prosecution by him it has been observed in Burdett v. Abbot (6), per Bayley, vide Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume IX, page 233, that "Any private person, in the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary, can commence a criminal prosecution, but the prosecution is always at the suit of the Crown. Hence it is that criminal proceedings were called pleas of the Crown. The Crown only can stay criminal process or remit a punishment awarded by any Court."

Under the Code of Criminal Procedure, Chapter XVIII, the conduct of the case in Crown prosecutions is vested in the Public Prosecutor and a Pleader appointed by a private person is subordinated to him and may instruct and assist him in the prosecution of the case and is required to act under his directions. The Public Prosecutor has a right to withdraw from the prosecution and to enter nolle prosequi (vide sections 493 and 494) This right of withdrawal from prosecution may be exercised by a private person conducting a case with the permission of the Magistrate enquiring into or trying the case under section 495.

The application to transfer a case is a proceeding in the course of the conduct of the case and when there is a conflict between the private prosecutor and the Public Prosecutor in the matter of transfer of the case, the right of the former as representing the Crown would naturally prevail. In the present case the prosecution was in the hands of the Public Prosecutor on a charge sheet having been submitted by the Police. Whatever right the petitioner may have by virtue of having commenced the prosecution, his right is subordinated to that of the Crown and when the Crown is opposing the application and does not apprehend any unfairness in the trial of the case by the Magistrate, I am of opinion that the application of the petitioner cannot be entertained.

Coming now to Chapter XLIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure dealing with the transfer of criminal cases, section 588 empowers a Chief Presidency Magistrate, a District Magistrate or a Sub Divisional Magistrate to withdraw any case from any Magistrate subordinate to him and to enquire into or try himself or refer it for enquiry or trial to any competent Magistrate subordinate to him. This section does not provide as to how and by whom the Magistrate referred to therein may be moved. The Magistrate may act under this section suo motu or on the information supplied by any person.

We are, however, concerned with section 526 of the Code, under which a High Court is empowered to transfer a case from a Criminal Court subordinate to its authority to any such Court of equal or superior jurisdiction or to itself. Section 526 of the previous Code of Criminal Procedure of 1882 gave much larger powers than those conferred by section 147 of the High Courts Criminal

(6) (1811) 14 East 1 at pp. 154, 162; 104 E. R. 501; 12 R. R. 450.

Procedure Act (X of 1875). The present Code of 1898 has made a new provision in clause (3), which did not exist in the Code of 1882. By this clause "the High Court may either act on the report of the lower Court or on the application of a party interested or on its own initiative." Thus under the present Code "a party interested" has a right to make an application under section 526 for the transfer of a criminal case pending in a subordinate Court.

The question, therefore, for determination is whether the petitioner, being one of the persons injured in the riot and having commenced the criminal prosecution by lodging information with the Police Sub-Inspector, is a party interested within the meaning of the said clause. Section 526 (a) was added by Act III of 1884, section 12 of the Code of 1884. This section is exactly in the same terms as clause 8 of section 526 of the present Code, and empowers the "prosecutor, the complainant or the accused person" to notify to the Court before which the case or appeal is pending his intention to make an application to the High Court under section 526 for the transfer of the case or the appeal, and upon such application the Court is required to exercise the powers of postponement or adjournment in order to afford the applicant reasonable time for making an application for transfer and for obtaining an order thereon. It is, therefore, obvious that both under the old Code as well as under the present Code the right to make an application for transfer under section 526 has been conferred upon the complainant in the criminal cases. This is conceded by the learned Assistant Government Advocate appearing on behalf of the Crown.

He, however, contends that the word "complainant" used there must be limited to a person who makes a "complaint" under section 4, clause (h), of the Code of Criminal Procedure, "orally or in writing, to a Magistrate with a view to his taking action under the Code" (section 190 (a), and cannot be extended to a person who lodges a first information before a Police Officer and the prosecution is started on the Police report made upon such information. The word "complainant" has not been defined in the Code. If it means only a person who makes a "complaint" within the technical meaning of the term to a Magistrate, the petitioner being then an informant before the Police would not come under it. If, on the other hand, it includes a person who lodges an information of an offence having been committed before the police, the petitioner would come under it and then his right to make an application under section 526 is obvious. If he is not a complainant as used in clause 8 of the section, he will still be entitled to apply for a transfer of the case if he is a 'party interested' within the meaning of clause 3 of the section unless the said words in the clause are synonymous with the words "the Public Prosecutor, the complainant or the accused" used in clause 8. If the Legislature intended that the words "party interested" in clause 3 should mean only "the Public Prosecutor, the complainant or the accused," there was nothing to prevent those very words being used for the words "party interested" in clause 3. The object of the two clauses is quite different. Clause 8 is enacted for the purpose of enabling a Court to postpone or adjourn the hearing of a case where an intention is expressed of making an application for the transfer of the case, whereas the object of clause 3 is to confer a right of making an application for transfer. An informant of the offence to the Police may not be conducting the case and may not, therefore, be entitled to ask for an adjournment but is nonetheless interested in the result of the case and consequently in a fair and impartial trial of the same. He has to bear the consequences of the result of the case, such as his liability to be prosecuted if the case were held on account of an unfair trial to be false and malicious. If, on the other hand, the case succeeds, he and he only is entitled to compensation in the Civil Court for the wrongs done to his person or property.

There does not appear to be any reason why the right of obtaining a transfer should be conferred upon a person who directly goes to the Magistrate with a complaint, and not upon a person who goes to the Police. It is optional with an injured person to go direct to a Magistrate with the complaint, or to the Police with an information of the offence having been committed. In either case he is the person who has commenced the criminal prosecution, and in either case under the legal fiction, prosecution is said to be at the "suit of the Crown." If this fiction bars his right of making an application for transfer when he goes to the Police in the first instance, it equally does so when he lodges a complaint before the Magistrate. A fortiori if the fiction is no bar in the latter case, it is not so in the former. Besides, an informant before the Police can, at any time during the Police investigation or after the close of the Police investigation, come to the Magistrate with a grievance against the proceedings adopted by the Police and can require the Magistrate to summon the accused or to call for a charge sheet, and his petition, if any, is to be treated as a complaint and is required to be disposed of under the provisions of sections 200 to 204 relating to complaints, whether the Police submits a charge-sheet or not. The Magistrate is also entitled to direct the Police to submit a charge sheet even when the latter holds that the case is false: vide Chapter XIV, sections 154 to 159. Unless the first informant were a party and also a party interested, he would not have been entitled to move the Magistrate for directing the Police to submit a charge-sheet. Under sections 44 and 45 of the Code there is an obligation upon every private person to give, either to a Magistrate or to a Police Officer, an information of the commission of certain offences mentioned therein, among which offences of unlawful assembly and of riot are included. The person lodging the information is responsible for it and it is his interest to see that a fair and impartial enquiry or trial takes place in respect of the offence of which he has given information, and obviously he is entitled to apply for a transfer under section 526 when there be a reasonable ground for his apprehension that the enquiry or trial would not be fair or impartial unless there were a statutory bar to his making an application. The distinction between an informant and a complainant appears to be very thin for the purpose of making an application under section 526 and far from imposing a legal bar upon him to make such an application, clause 3, newly added, appears to me to amplify the right which would have seemed not to have been conferred by clause 8 in which the words "the Public Prosecutor, the complainant or the accused" occur. In respect of many cognizable offences [in which a Police Officer may arrest without warrant and which are punishable for a term exceeding six months within clauses (f) and (w) of section 4], such as the case of misappropriation or criminal breach of trust of private money or of cheating of a private person or mischief to private irrigation works, and also in cases where the Police Officer takes a strong view against the case and the Magistrate sends for the charge-sheet, the conduct of the case is often in the hands of a private prosecutor. In such cases there is no reason why a private person should not be entitled to apply under section 526.

But when the conduct of a case is in the hands of a Public Prosecutor and a Pleader appointed by a private person is subordinate to the Public Prosecutor, I should think that the latter alone has a right to make an application and the former is to move the latter or the Crown for an action to be taken under section 526 through the Crown Prosecutor. This is the case here, and, therefore, in this case I hold that the right of the petitioner is subordinated to that of the Public Prosecutor and inasmuch as the latter opposes it, the petition of the former to this Court should be rejected.

Now coming to the merits of the case, there does not appear to be any substance in the application. The only complaint against the Magistrate is that he punished one of the prosecution witnesses under section 228 of the Indian Penal Code for refusing to give answer to a question in cross-examination. This was within the right of the Magistrate and does not necessarily impute any unfairness in the trial of the case.

The next ground is that the remaining witnesses for the prosecution were frightened by the aforesaid act. This is rather a frivolous and unsubstantial ground. On the other hand, even after the said event the witnesses for the prosecution were examined and yet nothing has been suggested to show that the Magistrate has exhibited any unfairness in the conduct of the case.

The last ground that Babu Viswanath Jha, the Mukhtar for the defence, is a relation of the principal accused Rudra Kumar Jha and is in contact with the trying Magistrate in connection with the Local Bar, the High English School and the Co operative Central Bank, is also unsubstantial and affords no sufficient ground for taking away the case from the file of the trying Magistrate.

I would, therefore, reject this application. The record may now be sent down for disposal by the trying Magistrate.

Application rejected.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 403, 406—Criminal breach of trust—Agent receiving money on behalf of principal and subsequently refusing to return it—Offence.

Where an agent receives money on behalf of his principal, the money so received is the property of, and is owned by, the principal, and if such agent refuses, at the request of the person paying the money to refund it, he is not criminally liable, and, consequently, cannot be prosecuted for the offence of criminal breach of trust, as the gist of that offence is the dishonest misappropriation or the conversion by one to his own use of the property of another which has been entrusted to him. Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Muzaffarpur, dated the 28th May 1919, affirming on appeal the conviction and sentence passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer, Sitamarhi, dated the 5th May 1919.

Messrs. P. C. Manuk and Hasan Jan, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner, Ram Khelawan Thakur, seeks by this application to have his conviction set aside as originally pronounced by the Sub-Divisional Officer, Mr. Owen, pursuant to his order dated the 5th May 1919, which was affirmed on appeal by the learned Sessions Judge of Muzaffarpur on the 28th May 1919. The accused was charged under section 406 of the Indian Penal Code with the offence of criminal breach of trust. The trial Court found the accused guilty; and on appeal the Sessions Judge affirmed the conviction of the accused, and he awarded him four months' rigorous imprisonment coupled with payment of a fine of Rs. 120.

Mr. Manuk, who appears on behalf of the petitioner, contends that upon the evidence adduced by the prosecution the charge of criminal breach of trust cannot be in law sustained.

It would appear that one Bhageloo brought a criminal charge against four persons by the name of Misser for an alleged offence under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code. While the proceedings were pending against these four persons at the instance of Bhageloo a Panchait was called, and the Panchait agreed to get the assent of Bhageloo to a compromise upon the condition that accused should pay to Bhageloo the sum of Rs. 50 as compensation in respect of the injuries which he had sustained, arising out of the assault which had been committed upon him by such accused persons. Bhageloo at the time that the compromise was arrived at by the Panch was in Sitamarhi Hospital, but it was taken for granted by all the members of the Panchait that Bhageloo would accept whatever terms the Panchait agreed upon. Accordingly on the following day the parties came to Sitamarhi and brought with them the money with a view of getting Bhageloo's assent to the terms of the compromise arrived at by the Panch. The accused in the proceedings under section 325 accompanied by a person called Raghu Nath Misser also went to Sitamarhi, interviewed Bhageloo and Bhageloo verbally assented to the terms of the compromise which had been proposed and agreed to by the other parties at the instance of the Panch; and it was suggested at the time that it would be desirable that there should be a petition in writing stating the terms of the compromise and that such petition should be signed by Bhageloo. It is stated by various witnesses on behalf of the prosecution that Bhageloo requested Raghu Nath Misser, who was to pay the money by way of compensation for the injuries which Bhageloo sustained, that the same should be paid to the petitioner as agent on behalf of Bhageloo who was then in bad in hospital.

After Bhageloo had been interviewed, and while the petition of compromise was being prepared in a written form, Raghu Nath paid to the petitioner Rs. 50, being the amount of compensation assessed by the Panch to be paid to Bhageloo. When the compromise was embodied in the form of a petition and taken to Bhageloo for signature, Bhageloo refused to sign it; although his agent Ram Khelawan Thakur, the petitioner, had at the time already received Rs. 50 which at the request of Bhageloo had been paid and entrusted to him.

It is upon these facts that the petitioner has been prosecuted for criminal breach of trust. The criminal breach of trust relied upon is that the petitioner failed and omitted to return to Raghu Nath Misser the money which he had paid and entrusted to the petitioner as agent on behalf of Bhageloo, his principal. There is no suggestion of any breach of trust between the petitioner and Bhageloo, his principal.

The Crown case is based upon an alleged entrustment or entrusting of the sum of Rs. 50 by Raghu Nath Misser to the petitioner. I fail to see myself on the evidence, which I have read very carefully, anything to suggest any entrustment by Raghu Nath Misser to the petitioner as trustee or in trust for Raghu Nath Misser. There was no doubt the giving of a sum of money by Raghu Nath Misser to the petitioner as agent for a disclosed principal, which constituted no more than a payment of a debt alleged to be due to the principal. It was clearly intended by the terms of the compromise that Raghu Nath Misser should pay the sum of Rs. 50 to the petitioner; and that the petitioner was to receive the same on behalf of his known principal; and that upon receipt by the petitioner of the money so received the same became the property in law of Bhageloo who was the owner thereof. But there was no express entrustment to the petitioner of any moneys in trust for Raghu Nath Misser or any of the accused persons charged under section 325 proceedings at the instance of Bhageloo.

When the compromise failed or fell through by reason of the fact that Bhageloo declined to sign the written petition of compromise, it may be that according to Civil Law a constructive trust would be created or arise by implication of law, whereby the petitioner might be deemed to hold the money he received in trust for the person who paid it to him upon a failure of consideration to support the original contract. By Civil Law I apprehend under such circumstances that the form of action which could be instituted would be for money had and received to the use of and on behalf of the person from whom the money was received. Therefore, though one might contend that the law created a constructive trust as against the petitioner at the suit of Raghu Nath Misser in respect of which he might be made answerable civilly in an ordinary civil suit, yet the petitioner is not amenable for any offence against the criminal law.

The question which I have to consider is whether upon the evidence there has been an offence committed within the meaning of section 406 read with section 403 of the Indian Penal Code. Section 406 is general in form and simply avers that "whoever commits a criminal breach of trust shall be punished with imprisonment." The important section, however, is section 403, which defines criminal misappropriation of property. Section 403 says "Whoever dishonestly misappropriates or converts to his own use any moveable property shall be punished with imprisonment."

Therefore the gist of the criminal offence of breach of trust is dishonest misappropriation or the conversion by one to his own use of the property of another which has been entrusted to him.

Now I have perused the evidence in this case, and I fail to detect, so far as the prosecution case is concerned, any evidence from which the inference could be fairly or legitimately drawn that the petitioner here dishonestly misappropriated the sum of Rs. 50 which he received or that he converted the same to his own use.

The evidence of P. W. No. 2 and of P. W. No. 5 leaves me under no doubt as to what happened. It may be desirable to refer to one or two paragraphs of their evidence.

P. W. No. 2 says:—"After I had fair copied the petition Kandu Babu said that Bhageloo's thumb impression should be taken on it. Bhageloo was in hospital. Accused was looking after the case for him. So we went to hospital," and a little further on he says "Raghu Nath asked the accused to give back the money. The accused said he would not give it back. He went off next towards the Bazar, and we went to Kandu Babu."

Now P. W. No. 2 also says in cross-examination that "Bhageloo had said that the money should be paid to Ram Khelawan and upon that basis, he, Raghu Nath, had given the money to the petitioner."

P. W. No. 5 deposes to the fact that he was present at the Panchait, the terms were settled at the Panchait, and the following day Raghu Nath and others came to Sitamarhi. Then he states: "They met the accused in the Kachhari. The compromise petition was written after Rs. 50 had been paid to this accused by Raghu Nath in his presence. He, Raghu Nath, and the accused and two Moharrirs went to the hospital"; after the parties went into the hospital apparently this witness came out and remained outside. When the others came out of the hospital it was ascertained "that Bhageloo refused to put his thumb impression. Raghu Nath asked accused to pay back the Rs. 50. But the accused did not do so, and went off."

Further on this witness says: "The money was paid to Ram Khelawan because he was acting on behalf of Bhageloo." "We gave the money to Ram Khelawan as we had asked Bhageloo, and he had said that the money should be paid to Ram Khelawan, and we did not suspect any dishonesty."

Therefore, the moment that the petitioner received Rs. 50 he received it on behalf of Bhageloo, and he must, as principal, be answerable for the acts of his agent acting within the scope of his authority. Mr. Manuk very fairly suggests that it would not be possible in this case to sustain a prosecution as against Bhageloo for criminal breach of trust. Clearly it would not.

There may be in law an implied trust as between the petitioner and Raghu Nath that will be sufficient to enable Raghu Nath to maintain a civil suit against the petitioner to recover the money he claims. Such an obligation or trust would not, in my opinion, create an offence punishable by the criminal law as a criminal breach of trust, or amount to criminal misappropriation or conversion of the property of another.

In the absence of clear and precise proof of the offence charged the accused ought not to be convicted.

It appears to me, the reasoning of the decision reported as Nga Po Ywet v. Emperor (1) applies in principle to the facts of this case.

In my opinion the learned Judge in appeal has failed to bear in mind the proper legal consideration which should have been present in weighing and considering the evidence.

I do not think on the evidence adduced by the prosecution that it can be fairly said that the petitioner was guilty of criminal misappropriation or of criminal conversion of the money he received to his own use.

Mr. Manuk admits that although the petitioner may be liable civilly he is not liable criminally.

In my view he is not liable criminally, but he properly would be liable civilly.

Thus to avoid any future and unnecessarily litigation between the parties, Mr. Manuk confesses that this client is willing to pay to Raghu Nath Misser within ten days from this date the sum of Rs. 50, which he admits having received from him under the circumstances aforesaid.

Accordingly I set aside the conviction of the accused pronounced by the learned Sub-Divisional Officer, dated the 5th of May 1919, and also the conviction in appeal affirmed by Mr. Boyce, dated the 28th May 1919.

The fine, if paid by the accused, shall be refunded.

Conviction set aside.

SITA NATH GHOSE—DEFENDANT No. 10 —APPELLANT

THAKURDAS CHAKRAVARTY—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 67, 68, 72 —Mortgage—Covenant to put mortgagee in possession, breach of—Mortgagee, whether entitled to interest—Payment made by mortgagee to save property from being sold, whether charge—Mortgage money, whether includes interest.

Certain tenure-holders mortgaged their interest in the tenure, and it was stipulated in the mortgage-bond, inter alia, that the mortgagee should be put in possession of the mortgaged property in lieu of interest and that the mortgagors should pay off the principal at the end of a specified year and, in default of payment, the mortgagee should be at liberty to foreclose according to law. The mortgagee, however, was wrongfully kept out of possession by the mortgagors and was unable to get possession except for one year. During the currency of the mortgage and while he was out of possession, the mortgagee discharged a decree for arrears of rent obtained against the mortgagors, to prevent the property being sold in execution. He instituted the present suit to recover the principal debt with interest at 12 per cent and futher claimed, under section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act, to add to the amount secured the amount of the decree paid by him with interest thereon at 9 per cent. per annum. It was contended in appeal to the High Court (1) that the plaintiff was not entitled to interest, but (2) if he was entitled to interest at all, he could only claim interest by way of damages under the Interest Act:

Held, (1) that inasmuch as the plaintiff had been wrongfully kept out of possession, he was entitled to interest on the principal; [p. 434, col. 1.]

(2) that the plaintiff was entitled to interest as a charge on the property and that the amount claimed was not excessive. [p. 434, col. 1.]

The term "mortgage-money" includes interest. [p. 434, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—The mortgage in this case was a mortgage which combined the incidents of a mortgage by way of conditional sale with the incidents or one of the incidents of a usufructuary mortgage. It was expressly provided that the mortgagee, the plaintiff in this suit, should have possession of the mortgaged properties in lieu of interest. The mortgage-debt was payable at the end of 1307 and it was further expressly provided that in default of payment the mortgagee should be at liberty to foreclose according to law.

The plaintiff, it is found, was wrongfully kept out of possession by the mortgagors or their then representatives and only secured possession during one year, 1311.

While he was out of possession, he paid a sum of Rs. 562-13-6 to prevent the mortgaged property from being sold in execution of a decree for arrears of rent obtained by the superior landlord.

He instituted the suit on the 14th April 1913 (1st Baisak 1320), which, unless anything had occurred to give a fresh starting point, was the last day of the period of twelve years allowed by Article 132 of the Limitation Act. By his plaint he sought to recover the principal debt Rs. 800 with interest at 12 per cent. per annum, crediting against interest the rent which he had realised during 1311. He further claimed under section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act to add to the amount secured the sum of Rs. 562 with interest at 9 per cent. per annum. The total amount claimed was Rs. 2,000, in respect of which the Courts below have concurred in giving the plaintiff a decree for foreclosure in the usual form.

The mortgagors have not appealed. The appellant before us is the defendant No. 10 in the suit, who purchased the mortgaged properties by two conveyances subsequent to the mortgage.

The decrees of the Courts below are not seriously contested so far as the principal debt and the sum of Rs. 562 with interest on that sum are concerned. It is contended, however, on the authority of the decision of the Bombay High Court in Mahadaji v. Joti (1), that the plaintiff is not entitled to interest on the principal. The facts are not fully stated in the report, but if the learned Judges intended to lay down any general principle the case may be distinguished on the ground on which the learned District Judge has distinguished it. It is said in the judgment that the plaintiff "never took the trouble to obtain possession." In the present case, as I have said, the finding is that the plaintiff was wrongfully kept out of possession. In spite of his efforts he was only able to secure possession for one year. There was no waiver or acquiescence as there was in Partab Bahadur Singh v. Gajadhar Bakhsh Singh (2).

(1) 17 B. 425; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 277.

Then it was said that if the plaintiff is entitled to interest at all, he can only claim interest by way of damages under the Interest Act, and the Full Bench decision of this Court in Moti Singh v. Ramohari Singh (3) is cited as authority for the proposition that such interest is payable only for the six years before suit. But in that case it was held, on the construction of the contract, that it disclosed no intention to provide for interest after the due date. That was the ground of the decision and Maclean, C. J., was careful to point out that "if post diem interest be provided for, it is just as much a charge on the property as the principal" and that "in such a case Article 132 of the Limitation Act would apply."

Here the contract clearly contemplated the payment of interest after the due date by the perception of profits. The plaintiff was to retain possession till the capital was repaid. The plaintiff is clearly entitled to some interest as a charge on the property and the interest allowed does not seem excessive. This seems to me to be in accordance with principle. In Raja Oodit Purkash Sing v. Martindell (4) there was a similar mortgage with a covenant for possession. Possession having been withheld, interest at 12 per cent. per annum was allowed without any question being raised. There is nothing in the Transfer of Property Act to suggest or compel a contrary view. The case of Porgan Pandey v. Mahatam Mahto (5) may be cited, though in that case it was expressly agreed that in case of dispossession interest should run at the rate of 15 per cent. per annum.

It is true that the plaintiff might have instituted a suit for the possession of the mortgaged property, or he might have sued for the mortgage money at once under section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act. He was not obliged to take the former course, nor was he obliged under section 68 to sue at once. It was open to him to bring the present suit within the period allowed by the law of limitation. The suit is in effect a suit under section 68 read with section 67. In the circumstances section 68 makes the "mortgage money" payable. By definition "mortgage money" includes interest and after the mortgage money becomes payable a suit may be brought under section 67.

In my opinion the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

TEUNON, J. —I agree.

JUDGMENT.—On the authority of the decisions in Jibunti Nath Khan v. Shib Nath Chuckerbutty (1), Barkey Ali v. Gokul Misir (2) and Siliman Sahib v. Buntala Haman (3) we have no hesitation in holding that the lower Courts were right in thinking that the present suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's title coupled with a prayer for possession is not barred under Order II, rule 2, by reason of the plaintiff's previous suit, which was for a declaration of title and for an injunction against disturbance, having been dismissed through his failure to prove possession.

The case in Naganada Iyer v. Krishnamurti Aiyar (4) is distinguishable on the ground that there the previous suit was dismissed for default which involved a finding of all the issues against the plaintiff. The question of res judicata upon which that case was decided does not arise for decision against the plaintiff in this case, as in both suits here the plaintiff succeeded on the issue as to the character of the sale-deeds.

The Second Appeal No. 2123 of 1915 fails and is dismissed with costs. A further question has been raised in Second Appeal No. 2122 of 1915, namely, whether Original Suit No. 249 of 1911 was properly instituted on a cause of action which was in the previous litigation combined with that which formed the basis of Original Suit No. 183 of 1911. This point was not raised at the trial in the Courts below and we cannot allow it to be argued at this stage. This second appeal is also dismissed with costs.

JATRA MOHAN SEN—PETITIONER

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Court-fee, deficit, whether can be directed to be paid after disposal of suit—Order directing recovery of deficit by attachment of moveables, legality of—Jurisdiction.

A Court, after disposing of a suit, held that the suit had been undervalued, and that on a proper valuation there was a deficiency in the amount of the Court-fees paid by the plaintiff. It accordingly directed the plaintiff to make good the deficiency and on his failure to do so, made an order, of its own motion, for realisation of the deficit by attachment of his moveable property:

Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to make the order in question.

Civil rule against the order of the District Judge, Chittagong, dated the 16th July 1917.

FACTS.—The plaintiff instituted a suit to establish his title to certain property. The trial Court disposed of the suit and after disposal recorded an order setting out that the suit had been undervalued and that on a proper valuation the Court fee on the plaint was insufficient; he accordingly directed the plaintiff to pay the requisite additional Court-fees, and on the plaintiff failing to comply with this order, the Court directed the amount to be realised by attachment of the plaintiff's moveable property. The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, but his appeal was dismissed on the ground that it was not maintainable. He then moved the High Court under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and obtained a Rule calling upon the Secretary of State for India to show cause why the orders for payment of Court-fees, and of attachment should not be set aside on the ground that they were illegal, the trial Court not having any jurisdiction to make them.

Babus Dhirendra Lal Kastgir and Prabodh Kumar Das, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—No one appearing to show cause, we make the Rule absolute. No costs. If the sum of Rs. 20 4-0 has been paid, it will be returned.

Held, that in making the payment the defendant No. 2, who as karta acted both for himself and for his minor brother, was an agent of the latter duly authorized to make the payment, and that the payment, therefore, had the effect of saving limitation in respect of the claim as against the defendant No. 2. Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Backergunge, dated the 30th October 1916, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of that District, dated the 2nd June 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Brojendra Nath Chatterjee, (with him Babu Suresh Chandra Taluqdar), for the Appellants.—This appeal is on behalf of the appellants and it arises out of a suit on a mortgage bond. The question for determination is whether certain payments of interest made by the defendant No. 1, who was at the time the karta of the joint family, had the effect of saving limitation in respect of the claim against the defendant No. 1. The facts found are that the debt was incurred for joint family purposes, that the mortgage-bond was executed by the defendant No. 1 and the father of the minor defendant No. 2, that the payment of interest was made out of joint family fund, and that the defendant No. 1 was at the time of making the part payment of interest the managing member of the family. From the facts proved it appears that the defendant No. 1, in making the payment, was acting bona fide not only for himself but also for the defendant No. 2. The defendant No. 1 must, therefore, be taken to be an agent of the defendant No. 2 who had authority to make the payment in question. Refers to Saroda Charan Chuckerbutty v. Durga Ram De Sinha (1), Har Prosad Dass v. Bakshi Bindeswari Prosad Singh (2), Chinnaya Nayudu v. Gurunatham Chetti (3), Bhasker Tatya Shet v. Vijalal Nathu (4), Ram Charan Das v. Gaya Prasad (5). There is no finding that in making the payment the defendant No. 1 as karta did commit any act of fraud or did not act bona fide. There is no doubt that in making the payment the karta was acting both in his individual capacity and also as representing the minor defendant No. 2. The lower Appellate Court has, therefore, erred in law in holding that limitation as against the defendant No. 2 was not saved by the payment made by the defendant No. 1 as karta of the joint family.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakraberty, (with him Babu Sitaram Banerjee), for the Respondents.—Payment by the defendant No. 1 cannot save limitation in respect of the claim against the minor defendant No. 2, and so the Court of Appeal below has rightly held that the personal remedy against the defendant No. 2 was barred by limitation. Baikunta Gui v. Lal Chand Samanta (6) and Narayana Ayyar v. Venkata- ramana Ayyar (7) relied upon. The defendant No. 1 had no right or authority to do any act which would stop the running of limitation in respect of the claim against the defendant No. 2 or give a fresh start to the plaintiff under section 20 of the Limitation Act. The defendant No. 1 was not an "agent duly authorized" within the meaning of section 20, and, therefore, payment made by him could not save limitation.

Babu Brojendra Nath Chatterjee briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—The suit out of which the present appeal arises was instituted on the 4th of April 1912 against defendants Nos 1 and 2, sons of one Uma Kanta, for enforcement of a mortgage-bond, dated the 5th Bhadra 1307 B. S. (21st August 1900), executed by Uma Kanta and defendant No. 1. A mortgage-decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff and the mortgaged properties were sold in execution of such decree. The sale-proceeds having proved insufficient, an application was made for a personal decree in respect of the balance. The suit was instituted on the 4th of April 1912 and on that date the personal remedy was barred by limitation unless payment of a part of the interest made on the 29th of Chaitra 1312 (12th April 1906) gave a fresh start to the plaintiff under section 20 of the Limitation Act. That payment was made by the defendant No. 1 who was at the time the karta of the joint family, the father having died in the meantime. The defendant No. 2 is a minor. It is found that the amount borrowed was for family purposes, viz., for defraying the marriage expenses of defendant No. 1. The endorsement made on the back of the bond clearly shows that in making the payment the defendant No. 1 purported to act for himself and for his minor brother, which would indicate that he was acting for the minor as karta of the joint family. The learned Munsif found that the payment was made from the funds belonging to both the defendants by defendant No. 1 who was the managing member of the family and passed a personal decree against both the defendants. On appeal by the defendant No. 2 the learned Additional District Judge of Backerganj absolved him from personal liability. Against this decree of the lower Court the plaintiff has appealed to this Court, and the only substantial question of law that arises for our consideration is whether the payment made by the defendant No. 1 under the circumstances stated above had the effect of saving limitation in respect of the claim as against defendant No. 2. The decision turns upon the question whether the defendant No. 1 was an agent of defendant No. 2 duly authorised to make such payment. I think the answer must be in the affirmative. For authority, if any is needed, I may refer to Chinnaya Nayudu v. Gurunatham Chetti (3), Saroda Charan Chuckerbutty v. Durga Ram De Sinha (1), Bhasker Tatya Shet v. Vijalal Nathu (4), Har Prosad Dass v. Bakshi Bindeswari Prosad Singh (2) and Ram Charan Das v. Gaya Prasad (5). The decision of the Madras High Court in Narayana Ayyar v. Venkataramana Ayyar (7) has, however, been relied upon as making those decisions inapplicable to cases in which a creditor deals not with the karta as such but with the individual members of the joint family. This decision seems to have been followed by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Baikunta Gui v. Lal Chand Samanta (6). The decision of the Madras High Court on this particular point is not, I may state, a decision of a Full Bench. I find it difficult to understand how, where no question of estoppel arises, a creditor's course of dealing with the members of a joint family including the karta can possibly affect the relation inter se between the karta and the other members of the family, nor does the case, when carefully examined, lend any support to such a proposition. Apart from the fact that that was a case of acknowledgment under section 19 of the Limitation Act, which stands on a somewhat different footing from the case of a payment under section 20 of the Act, the decision rests on the peculiar facts of that case from which the inference was drawn that in making the acknowledgment the karta was acting in his individual capacity and not as representing the other co-parceners. As a mater of fact the question regarding the authority of the karta to bind the other members of his family by his own acknowledgment did not arise, the learned Judges having come to the conclusion that the karta in making the acknowledgment had acted in collusion with the creditor and, therefore, in contravention of the duty which he owed to the other co parceners. All that the learned Judges laid down in that case was that when a creditor deals, not with the managing member only of a family, but with all the members of the undivided family as co-obligors and on that footing enters into a transaction—thereby avoiding any question as to whether the transaction was really for the benefit of the family—he cannot rely upon an acknowledgment of the liability, made by one of them, as an acknowledgment duly made on behalf of the co-obligors, by reason only that the person acknowledging is in fact the managing member of the family consisting of the co obligors. The words 'agent duly authorised' would include authority given by law as well as authority given by the act of parties. This point was fully discussed by Banerjee, J., in the case of Ram Charan Das v. Gaya Prasad (5) already referred to. In the present case there is the further fact that in so far at least as the liability of the father extended, the debt was binding on both the sons. As karta the defendant No. 1 had not only authority to pay the debt of his minor coparcener but had the authority even to sell, if necessary, the joint family property to satisfy such debt. In taking this view of the case I do not feel pressed by the decision of this Court in the case of Baikanta Gui v. Lal Chand Somanta (6), as the facts of that case are materially different from the facts of this case. In that case it was found that the existence of joint family was not proved, that it was not proved that the payment was made as karta of the joint family, it was not shown that the money had come from the joint family fund, and it was not found that the borrowing had been made in respect of the joint family estate. Upon these findings the question of law did not really arise. The case of Saroda Charan Chuckerbutty v. Durga Ram De Sinha (1) and the later decision in Har Prosad Dass v. Bakshi Bindeswari Prosad Singh (2) seem to me exactly in point.

I would, therefore, reverse the decision of the Court below and restore that of the Munsif.

The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court and in the lower Courts.

U. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881), s. 9—Occupancy right—Hindu widow, rights of, extent of—Revision—Lower Court following wrong authority, effect of—Illegality.

Inasmuch as under section 9 of the U. P. Rent Act of 1881 an occupancy right devolved as if it were land, the interest of a Hindu widow who succeeded to an occupancy holding while that Act was in force was a mere life interest. [p. 439, col. .]

Where a Court relies for its decision upon the judgment of a superior Court, which is no authority for the proposition set up by its decision, it acts illegally in the exercise of its jurisdiction, affording a ground for interference in revision. [p. 439, col. 1.]

Third appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Benares Division, dated 31st October 1918, in the case of correction of jamabandi.

JUDGMENT.

HOPKINS, J. M.—A preliminary objection is taken in this case that the appellants are not the legal representatives of Parsidh, who died after the Commissioner's decision. This objection is based on a statement made by Parsidh in one of the lower Courts to the effect that he was alone in his family and no one was joint with him. It is contended that Parsidh having died without heirs, his right abated.

In these proceedings we are not concerned with the succession to Parsidh. The only question which arises at present is whether the applicants are entitled to maintain this application as representatives of Parsidh. In view of the affidavit filed I must hold that they are so entitled. The question as to who is entitled to succeed to Parsidh's rights in the land in dispute must be decided in separate proceedings. The question for decision now is whether the Commissioner was right in holding that Parsidh did not succeed to the occupancy right of the holding just recorded in the name of Sundra Kuar; there were concurrent findings of the Courts below that Parsidh shared in the cultivation with Rameshar, the husband of Musammat Sundra Kuar, at the time of his death. The Commissioner, in my opinion, was clearly wrong in holding that a Hindu widow, who succeeded to an occupancy holding when Act XII of 1881 was in force, inherited a right which would descend to her heirs and not to those of her husband. Under section 9, Act XII of 1881, the right devolved as if it were land and land would be held by the widow with only a life-interest Board's Selected Decision No. 3 of 1907 [Babu Banshidhar v. Rajwantia (1)] on which the Commissioner relies is not an authority for this proposition of law which he sets up. Possibly the Commissioner had in mind Selected Decision No. 2 of 1905 [Ikram ud din v. Arshad Ali (2)] but that was the case of a Muhammadan widow. The Selected Decision covering the present circumstances is No. 1 of 1907 [Laik Singh v. Sukhwa (3)].

The Commissioner's error of law is a serious one and if not corrected might have the effect of seriously upsetting the course of decisions in the subordinate Courts of the division. On the ground that the Commissioner has acted illegally in the exercise of his jurisdiction I would set aside his order and restore that of the Collector.

FERARD, S. M.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 115, 148, O. IX, rr. 8, 9—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 5, 18, Sch. I, Art. 163—Dismissal of suit for default—Application for restoration—Limitation—Extension of time—Discretion of Court, proper exercise of—Laches, effect of—Arbitrary order—Revision—High Court, power of interference of.

The discretion granted by section 148 of the Civil Procedure Code of enlarging the time for doing an act ought not to be arbitrarily exercised in matters to which the rules of limitation apply, and in which by those rules the Court can only extend the time after a proper judicial consideration of the cause shown under section 5, or the fraud established under section 18 of the Limitation Act. [p. 440, col. 2.]

Where a Court fails to apply its mind to the question of limitation and arbitrarily grants an application for the restoration of a suit long after the period of limitation has expired, it acts without jurisdiction and its order is liable to be set aside by the High Court acting under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 441, col. 1.]

Litigants who are guilty of gross laches and who refuse to comply with the orders of a Court ought to be shown no indulgence under section 148 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 441, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

MANUK, J.—The facts upon which this application is made to us in our revisional jurisdiction are as follows:—

The respondent before us instituted a suit on the 17th May 1917 against numerous defendants; the suit was dismissed under Order IX, rule 8, of the Civil Procedure Code on the 24th April 1918. On the 8th May 1918 the plaintiff (now respondent) applied under Order IX, rule 9, to set aside the dismissal and restore the suit. On this application the learned Munsif before whom it was filed recorded the following order:—

"Class of suit, copy of judgment, vakalatnama, written process and talbana are not filed. Returned to be re filed after removal of defects by 20th May 1918."

On the 17th May, for some reason not apparent, we find another order by the Munsif to the effect that the previous order had not been complied with, and the application was again returned to be re filed by the 8th June after removal of the defects. The next order is on the 11th June 1918, and this is to the effect that, as the previous orders are still uncomplied with, the application is once more returned to be re-filed by the 5th of June 1918. On the 15th of June it transpired that the application related to a suit valued above Rs. 1,000, and it was accordingly "returned for presentation before the proper Court."

The matter next came up on the 22nd June, when the order (this time passed apparently by a Subordinate Judge) runs:—

"Nature of the suit and date of disposal of the same are not given. Returned for compliance, and re-file within a week."

It was then re filed after amendment on the 29th June, when the record was sent for, and it was ordered that the application should be put up with the record on the 16th July. On the 18th July, however, a note was submitted to the learned Subordinate Judge by his office asking for directions as to whether the application should be registered in his Court or be sent to the first Munsif, who was "vested with power to try suits of special jurisdiction." On the 9th July the learned Subordinate Judge directed that the application should be returned to be filed before the first Munsif, who is vested with special jurisdiction. The matter next came up on the 18th July, presumably before the first Munsif. On that date the office submitted a note to the learned Munsif, pointing out that the application was originally filed as under Order IX, rule 13, and hence a copy of the judgment was demanded together with process fees and a vakalatnama, and it was not clear why the application was made under Order IX, rule 13, and not under Order IX, rule 9. The serious laches of the petitioner in repeatedly failing to comply with the orders of the Court and the present defects were also set out. Amongst other defects still present were (i) the process fee filed was still inadequate, and (ii) the orders of the 9th May had not yet been complied with. It was also pointed out by the office that no cause had been shown for the delay in filing the petition within the time limit of 30 days from the dismissal as required by Statute. In the face of this report all that the learned Munsif did was to record a peremptory order in a single word, "admit." This was a week later, on the 25th July, and without any notice to the defendants. On that date an order was also entered in the order-sheet in the following terms:—

"Application under Order IX of the Code of Civil Procedure admitted. Register. Petitioner to file deficit talbana Re. 1 by 3rd August 1918."

Finally, on the 24th of August 1918 the Pleaders on behalf of the parties were heard, and the learned Munsif, without applying his mind in the least to the serious question before him as to whether the application was filed within time or not, proceeded to pass a formal order restoring the case on the applicant paying Rs. 5 to the respondent It is noticeable that not a single argument adduced on behalf of the present petitioner before us finds a place in the learned Munsif's order; the Munsif seems to have endeavoured to justify his previous ill-advised order "admit" by accepting various extenuating circumstances urged on behalf of the present respondents for their original default. Now under these circumstances we are asked by Mr. Jagarnath Prasad, on behalf of some of the defendants to the suit, to hold that the learned Munsif has acted without jurisdiction, inasmuch as on the 25th of July, when he admitted the application, and on the 24th August, when he set aside the dismissal, the application was long since barred by time. On the other hand, Mr. Roy, the learned Vakil for the plaintiff, has strenuously argued that the application having been filed within time on the 9th May, it was open to the Court under section 148 of the Civil Procedure Code to extend the period from time to time within its discretion and that having done so, there was no reason why on the 25th July the Court should not have admitted the application.

I am of opinion that the discretion granted by section 148 cannot be arbitrarily exercised in matters to which the rules of limitation apply, and in which by those rules the Court can only extend the time after a proper judicial consideration of the cause shown under section 5 or the fraud established under section 18 of the Limitation Act. Now in the case before us we hold that the application filed on the 9th May was no application at all within the provisions of Order IX, rule 9. The nature of the suit, the date of disposal of the same, the correct provisions of the Code under which the application was made, and various other matters necessary for the Court to consider the application at all and entertain it were lacking; these defects were pointed out by the Munsif and his office to the petitioners, but no attempt was made to remedy these defects within time; and, therefore, all arbitrary extensions of time to re-file the application after the thirty days had elapsed were beyond the jurisdiction of the Munsif to grant.

Mr. Roy has also referred us to the decision in Jhotu Lal Ghose v. Ganouri Sahu (1), and he contends that the Munsif, having rightly or wrongly admitted the application and restored the suit, has acted within his jurisdiction, and that, therefore, we should not interfere under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. Now the case of Jhotu Lal Ghose v. Ganouri Sahu (1) is distinguishable from the case before us in one very important respect. In that case the Munsif had considered the question of limitation, had applied his mind to the objection that the application was barred by limitation and had decided in fact that it was not so barred. It was argued on behalf of the petitioner there that the Munsif had fallen into an error in holding that the application was not barred by limitation. Under those circumstances the learned Judges held that even if it were conceded that the Munsif had fallen into an error either of law or of fact that was not an error in the exercise of jurisdiction which could be interfered with by this Court under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. Now in the case before us there is not a single indication throughout the numerous orders that any of the Courts dealing with the petition applied its mind in any manner whatsoever to the question of limitation; nor indeed can we see how the learned Munsif, who eventually admitted the application on 25th July 1918, could have done so, having regard to the fact that it was brought prominently to his notice that no reason for the neglect to file the petition within time had been stated in any of the numerous petitions to the Court, or upon any of the numerous occasions on which the Court was approached. There having been, therefore, no application of the learned Munsif's mind to the question of limitation at all, and he having arbitrarily admitted the petition and restored the suit long after the period of limitation had expired, the impeached orders were, in our opinion, made without any jurisdiction whatsoever. It would, we think, be disastrous to give effect to Mr. Roy's contention that a Court may keep alive a cause of action for an indefinite period of time by granting, without cause shown and without consideration, indulgence after indulgence under section 148 of the Civil Procedure Code to litigants who are guilty of the grossest laches, and who refuse to comply with the orders of the Court. The Privy Council have more than once animadverted on the law's delays in this country; and to allow the subordinate Courts to proceed as the learned Munsif has in this particular case, without correction or interference by this Court under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, would simply be to encourage the evil which their Lordships of the Privy Council have so often condemned.

For all these reasons we set aside the orders of the Munsif, dated the 25th July 1918, and the 24th August 1918, with costs.

ATKINSON, J.—I just desire to say that in my opinion there was no application before the Court to restore the suit that was originally dismissed under Order IX, rule 9, on the 25th July 1918 and that on that date limitation had expired, and the application presented was barred, and, in my opinion, the Court of the first Munsif of Monghyr had no jurisdiction to entertain the application which was then Statute-barred. Any other application of the law would render the law of limitation nugatory and senseless, and I am not aware of any authority that can be cited in support of the argument that has been addressed to us.

Order set aside.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 16—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Adjudication, order of—Suit by creditor to set aside transfer by insolvent without leave of Court, maintainability of.

After an order of adjudication has been passed under section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, a creditor of the insolvent is debarred by sub-section (2) (b) of that section from suing under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act to set aside a transfer by the insolvent without first obtaining the leave of the Insolvency Court. [p. 443, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Court, South Kanara, in Original Suit No. 4 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. P. Lakshmana Row, for the Appellant.—The sanction of Court is not necessary, for this is not a "suit," "legal proceeding" or "remedy" in respect of the debt within the meaninig of section 16, sub-section (2) (b) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The Act makes no provision with regard to alienations made more than 2 years prior to the adjudication. We have, therefore, to fall back on the general law under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, whereby a creditor can sue on his own account. See Kottarathil Puthiyapurayil Pokker v. Balathil Parkum Chandrankandi Kunhamad (1) and Second Appeal No. 1800 of 1917.

The present is not a case of an alienation void as against the Official Receiver. The property has already fully vested in the alienee and it is only if the alienation is declared illegal that it can be made available for the creditors.

The restriction under the English Law that only the trustee in bankruptcy can sue applies only to alienations beyond two or ten years prior to adjudications. Under English Law, there are two periods. Here, there is only one. The creditor's right of suit under the general law is not expressly taken away by the Insolvency Act. And if the suit had been commenced before the adjudication, no leave would have been necessary.

The only case in point is Ramalinga Chetty v. Anantha Chariar (2). There is no other.

Mr K. Sundara Row, for the Respondents.—Under the English Law, the trustee in bankruptcy alone can sue. See Butters, Ex parte, Harrison, In re (3). See also Halsburys Law's of England, Volume XV, pages 88, 89, relying on the case of Russell, Ex parte; Butterworth, In re (4).

Under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, leave is necessary. Such leave was obtained in the case reported as Official Assignee of Madras v. Ramasamy Iyengar (5).

[WALLIS, C. J.—There is no provision in the Act. What is your answer to the right under the general law?]

The general law has been superseded by the special law.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this appeal is whether, after the making of an order of adjudication under section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907, a creditor of the insolvent is prevented by the provisions of sub-section (2) (b) of that section from suing under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act to set aside a transfer made by the insolvent without first obtaining the leave of the Court. There appears to be a curious absence of authority as to the effect of the corresponding provision in the English Bankruptcy Acts with respect to actions by creditors under the Statute of Elizabeth, which corresponds with section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. The nature of the suit under the English and Indian Acts has recently been discussed in this Court in Palaniandi Chetti v. Appavu Chettiar (6), Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia

Chettiar (7) and Kottarathil Puthiyapurayil Pokker v. Balathil Parkum Chandrankandi Kunhamad (1). It appears that in England, while such a suit should ordinarily be on behalf of all the creditors and the decree should declare the transfer void against all of them, a judgment-creditor may sue in respect of his own debt alone and obtain satisfaction for it. The sub section of this Act provides that "except as provided by the Act no creditor to whom the insolvent is indebted in respect of any debt provable under this Act shall, during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings, have any remedy against the property or person of the insolvent in respect of the debt or commence any suit or other legal proceeding, except with the leave of the Court and on such terms as the Court may impose." A suit by a judgment creditor, such as I have mentioned, without the leave of the Court would, I think, be in contravention of this section, and would enable the judgment creditor to obtain satisfaction of his decree out of the property declared in the suit to be the property of the insolvent. Even as regards a suit by a creditor who was not a judgment-creditor to declare a transfer void against creditors generally, I think the words of the sub-section "or commence any suit or other legal proceeding" are sufficiently wide to cover a suit to make property available as the property of the judgment debtor and to forbid the institution of such a suit as this without the leave of the Court. The policy of the law as disclosed in the section is to place the administration of the estate including the realization of assets under the control of the Court, and it would be opposed to this policy to allow a creditor to proceed with a suit of this kind except with the leave of the Court and on such terms as it might impose. We agree with the Subordinate Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, 24-Pargannahs, dated the 23rd of July 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Court at Sealdah, dated the 31st of July 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Sir Rash Behari Ghosh (with him Babu D. N. Bagchi), for the Appellant.—Plaintiff is the appellant. He sued for rent. The only question is whether or not the defendant is the tenant of the plaintiff. It depends wholly on the construction of certain documents. The plaintiff is the owner of a 6-annas share of a certain Zemindari. The other co-sharers are the pro forma defendants. The defendant admitted that he held partly under the plaintiff and partly under the pro forma defendants. The learned Judge held that the admission must have been made inadvertently. He has further held that the defendant is rather my co-sharer than my tenant. The facts are these:—Lachmipat purchased the 6 annas, which are now held by the plaintiff, in 1875. He was at that time in possession of the disputed land as a tenant. He could not get possession of the 6-annas purchased by him. A suit for possession was decreed in 1880. Before Lachmipat took possession under the decree, he made a gift of it to Mirza Ahmed Ali Beg in 1880, reserving his right to retain possession of the land as tenant. The District Judge says that that was not the lease-hold but the Zemindari interest in the lands. The heirs of the donee then sold the 6 annas to M. and mentioned in this deed of the above reservation by Laxbmipat in his deed of gift. The heirs of the vendor sold the Zemindari interest without any reservation to plaintiff in 1898. Lachmipat was dead at the time. He was succeeded by Chattrapat Singh. The next document is the sale certificate, dated 1903, under which the present defendant claims title. He was the execution creditor and purchased it himself. The sale certificate described the lands as Mourasi Mokarari tenure and that no rent was payable in respect of the 6-annas share. Section 3 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act would make him a tenant, although he was absolved from paying rent. The last document is the petition of the defendant. My client's name has been recorded in the Collectorate as the owner of the 6-annas Zemindari. The mere fact that no rent was realised from the defendant would not be sufficient to establish that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant. I would now deal with the construction of the deed of gift. Where an instrument is ambiguous, the construction should be very strong against the donor. The deed is entitled "a deed of gift of the Zemindari rights." The donor merely wanted to keep to himself the lease-hold interest in the small parcels of land. The Zemindari right over them passed to the donee. The implied covenant not to pay rent on the part of Lachmipat ceased to exist the moment the lands passed into the hands of strangers.

Babu Dwarkanath Chakravatty (with him Babu Hemendra Nath Sen), for the Respondent.—The short question is whether the tenant was liable to pay rent to plaintiff. The question as to whether there is any relationship of landlord and tenant is concluded by the finding of the Judge. As regards his finding that the defendant's admission was made inadvertently it was based on evidence. The deed of gift itself shows that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant. When Lachmipat acquired the Zemindari, he himself was a tenant. So far as the donee was concerned, he was only to pay Government revenue for the 6 annas.

Sir Rash Behary Ghosh, in reply.—The District Judge was wrong in ignoring the defendant's admission. I am entitled to rely on the admission as showing that Lachmipat never meant to reserve the Zemindari right to himself. So long as the defendant does not explain the circumstances of his admission, it is binding on him. The deed of gift is not ambiguous at all.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of rent in respect of the land described in the plaint. The defence was that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and the defendant with respect to the land.

It appears that a certain Zemindari belonged to one Bazlur Rahim and his sister. His sister sold a six-annas share of the Zemindari to one Lachmipat Singh on the 1st December 1875. The remaining 10-annas of the Zemindari was sold in execution of a decree against Bazlur Rahim or his sister and the auction-purchaser of the said 10-annas share took possession of the entire sixteen annas. Lachmipat thereupon brought a suit for recovery of possession of the undivided 6-annas share of the Zemindari which had been conveyed to him by Bazlur Rahim's sister. He obtained a decree on the 23rd August 1880 and on the 23rd November of the same year, Lachmipat made a gift of the 6-annas share of the Zemindari in favour of one Mirza Ahmed Ali Beg.

It appears from the deed of gift that Lachmipat was at the date of the deed in khas possession of a certain quantity of land (168 bighas) consisting of a garden and some paddy land situated within the Zemindari. It is the plaintiff's case that Lachmipat had in these lands Mourasi Mokarari right from before the acquisition of the Zemindari interest, and the main question for consideration in this case is whether the Zemindari interest in those 168 bighas of land, which includes the lands in suit, passed to the donee under the deed of gift. The interest of the donee in the 6-annas Zemindari has passed to the plaintiff and he, therefore, now claims the Zemindari interest in those lands. The defendant purchased the disputed land which remained in the possession of Lachmipat at an auction sale in execution of a decree against his son Chatrapat.

The Courts below have agreed in holding that Lachmipat reserved to himself the Zemindari interest in the 168 bighas of lands and that, therefore, the plaintiff could not recover rent from the defendant.

It is stated in the deed of gift that the whole of the 6-annas share of the Zemindari (Touzi No. 182), for which the plaintiff had obtained a decree on the 23rd August 1880 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Parganahs, was conveyed to the donee and that the donee was to pay the Government revenue payable for the six-annas share. By the deed, however, Lachmipat reserved to himself 168 bighas of land consisting of a garden and paddy lands attached thereto mentioned above.

The learned District Judge has held that the donor reserved the Zemindari right in the 168 bighas for himself. The fact that in the body of the document the Zemindari interest is described as six annas share with the exception of the lands mentioned in the schedule, would go to support the view taken by the District Judge. On the other hand, if, as alleged by the plaintiff, Lachmipat had Maurasi Mokurrari rights in those lands, then that fact, taken together with the fact that the entire 6 annas share in respect of which Lachmipat had obtained a decree was conveyed, raises an ambiguity, viz., whether the interest which was reserved by Lachmipat in the lands in suit was the Zamindari interest or the interest of a tenure-holder which he had from before the acquisition of his Zemindari. In these circumstances extrinsic evidence (including evidence as to the course of dealing with the property) may be taken into consideration, in construing the deed.

It is pointed out on behalf of the respondent that on each successive transfer of the six annas Zemindari, the land reserved by Lachmipat has been excepted. On the other hand, it is pointed out on behalf of the appellant that the donee got his name registered in respect of the entire six-annas share of the Zemindari without any protest or objection on the part of Lachmipat and that after each successive devolution of interest there has been such registration of name. Then again, reliance is placed upon a statement contained in a petition of objection made by the defendant in a claim case, in which the land is described as bearing a rental of Rs. 179 payable to the Sherista of Dinabandhu and Nagendra Kumar. Dinabandhu is the plaintiff in the present case. The learned District Judge in his judgment said: "No doubt in Exhibit I there is an admission by the defendant that rent is paid for this land. The respondent has explained, and I think his explanation is a reasonable one, that he had at that time, namely, on the 20th of March 1905, only just come into possession of the land and he was not properly acquainted with the incidence of the tenancy."

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the defendant had purchased the property about 2 years before he made the statement in the claim case, and that there is no evidence in support of the finding that the defendant was not properly acquainted with the incidents of the property when this statement was made.

In these circumstances, we think that the case ought to go back to the lower Appellate Court for a further enquiry and re-hearing of the appeal. It may be mentioned that it is denied before us on behalf of the respondents that Lachmipat had any Maurasi Mokurari tenure in these lands before he acquired six annas share of the Zemindari. That question will be gone into by the Court below. It will be open to both parties to adduce fresh evidence on this question as also upon the question whether the defendant was or was not properly acquainted with the incidents of the property at the time when he made the statements in Exhibit I. The lower Appellate Court may direct the Court of first instance to take such evidence as the parties may adduce and send up the evidence to the lower Appellate Court.

Landlord and tenant—Occupancy rights, acquisition of—Ejectment to prevent accrual of occupancy rights, whether can be allowed—Colourable transaction, effect of—Appeal, second—Finding of fact based upon inference which contravenes Statute, whether binding.

The law allows a Zemindar to eject a tenant in order to prevent the accrual of occupancy rights, but the ejectment must be effective and must last at least for one year.

A colourable transaction intended to defeat the provisions of the law cannot be given effect to by the Courts.

Where in arriving at findings of fact the Court puts an inference upon the facts which, if accepted, would defeat the provisions of the law, such findings can be questioned in second appeal.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Agra Division, dated the 30th October 1918, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOPKINS, J. M.—The facts of this case are not in dispute. The appellant tenant was ejected with effect from the end of 1314 F. In 1315 F. one Bhajna was recorded as tenant, but did not cultivate. The appellant remained in cultivating possession and was shown as sub-tenant in the papers. From 1316 F. onwards the name of Bhajna disappears and the appellant is shown as tenant-in-chief.

The Commissioner considers that there is absolutely no reason to suppose that the Zemindar admitted the appellant as a tenant in 1315 F. The Zemindar, he says, would not have gone to the trouble of ejecting the appellant and then lost all the advantage by re-admitting him.

But the fact remains that the appellant was re-admitted. He remained in possession in 1315 F. The nominal tenant Bhajna did not cultivate the land at all. There is the evidence that he sublet the land to the appellant. It is perfectly clear that the tenancy of Bhajna was only culturable.

It is urged that the Commissioner's findings of fact cannot be questioned in second appeal. The facts, as I have said, are not disputed. But the inference which the Commissioner puts upon them is one which, if accepted, would defeat the provisions of section 13 of the Tenancy Act. The Zemindar is allowed by law to eject a tenant in order to prevent the accrual of occupancy rights. But it must be an effective ejectment and it must last at least a year. The law does not allow the Zemindar to keep his tenant and at the same time to treat the period counting towards the accrual of occupancy rights. He may do one or the other but not both. The device of retaining the tenant in possession, while putting up a fictitous tenant-in-chief who is really never a tenant at all, is a colourable transaction intended to defeat the provisions of the law and the decision of the Commissioner in giving effect to it is, in my opinion, contrary to law Except as regards No. 64, in which no occupancy rights have accrued, I would accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the Commissioner would restore that of the Assistant Collector and give the appellant his costs in proportion in all Courts.

FERARD, S. M.—I concur. Respondent's cases would have been arguable if there had been a formal lease to Bhajna for 1315, showing that he and not appellant prima facie had the status of a tenant in that year. Here there was none, Bhajna did not cultivate, and the inference from facts is that the record of Bhajna's name was 'farzi' and appellant's status of tenant continued throughout that year.

Appeal allowed.

If any portion of the property to which a document relates is within the district of the Sub-Registrar of the office where it is registered, the registration is a valid registration within section 28 of the Registration Act, even if it turns out that the transferor, though acting in a perfectly bona fide manner, has ceased to have an interest in that property, provided the property described exists. It is only where there is fraud or collusion between the parties for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to a particular Sub-Registrar to register a document by including property which does not exist, that registration is rendered invalid. JUDGMENT.—In our opinion this application should be rejected. The petitioner contended before this Court when the matter came here on appeal that a deed of sale relied upon by the other side was not valid on the ground that it had not been properly registered. A portion of the property to which the document related was undoubtedly situate at Benares, the bulk of the property was situate elsewhere and the deed was registered at Benares. The section specifying the particular registration office in which a document must be registered is section 28 of the Registration Act, and that section provides that the document shall be presented for registration in the office of a Sub-Registrar within whose sub-district the whole or some portion of the property to which such document relates is situate. Therefore (prima facie) if any portion of the property to which the document relates is within the district of the Sub Registrar of the office where it is registered, there is a valid registration within that section. It turned out in fact that the only property mentioned in the document and situate within the district of the registration office where the document was registered was property over which the transferor had no title, and it was contended before this Court that in such circumstances the registration must be deemed to be invalid. This contention was rejected.

It has been held in the Courts in this country that a mere flaw in the vendor's title in the only part of the property situate within the district of the registration office is not sufficient to invalidate the registration if it is made in good faith. [See Broja Gopal Mukherjee v. Abinash Chandra Biswas (1).] There is a later decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Srimati Hari Dasi Debi (2) which is relied on by the petitioner. There the deed was registered in Calcutta. The only property in Calcutta to which it related did not exist at all, and it was found as a fact that the inclusion of this property was merely done with the intention to give jurisdiction to the Sub-Registrar in Calcutta, the parties knowing full well that they had no interest in the property therein mentioned. Where there is any fraud or collusion between the parties for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to a particular Sub Registrar to register the document by including property which does not exist this is sufficient to invalidate the registration, but it seems to us well established that registration is not invalid if the property described exists, merely because the transferor, though acting in a perfectly bona fide manner, turns out to have ceased to have an interest in that property. This Court found that there was no fraud on the part of the transferor or collusion between the parties in order to deceive the Registrar and obtain registration. The transaction must, therefore, be regarded as done in good faith. The petitioner has been unable to adduce any authority in his favour, and it seems to us quite clear that as long as the case complies with section 28, that is to say, as long as the document does refer to some property situate within the district where registration takes place, that is sufficient to bring it within the section, and the cases clearly lay down that, unless there is some fraud or collusion, the registration is in itself perfectly valid, whether in fact the person registering eventually proves his title to the property or not. In these circumstances and as there is no authority to support the contention of the petitioner, we do not think that there is sufficient substance in this point of law to entitle him

Dhurandhardas Sakharam v. Bhau Govind, 10 B. H. C. R. 4, followed.

Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Coutts-Trotter, passed in the exercise of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of this Court in Civil Suit No. 306 of 1916.

Mr. T. Narasimha Iyengar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. V. V. Srinivasa Aiyangar, Venkatasubba Row and Raahakrishnayya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order of Coutts Trotter, J., directing the third defendant to be committed for contempt for disobeying four orders of the Official Referee to produce certain documents alleged to be in his possession. The account-books in question were admitted by the third defendant in his affidavit of documents to be then in his possession. He was in charge of the Bezwada branch of the suit business, and the accounts which were the accounts of the branch were kept there. They had been sent to Madras, for the purpose of an arbitration in the present suit and then taken back to Bezwada, and the correspondence shows that they were again sent to Madras in connection with the arbitration in February 1913. The arbitration fell through, as appears from a summons taken out on 3rd March 1917 relating to the further prosecution of the suit. There is evidence that the books in question were sent back to Bezwada on the 6th of March, where it appears they were wanted for the purpose of making up accounts with the Bombay branch of the business. Exhibit XXXV, dated 20th May 1917, clearly establishes in our opinion that the missing books were then at Bezwada, as it would have been impossible to make up the accounts for the successive years 1911, 1912, 1913 and 1914 without them, and we cannot accept the third defendant's story that these accounts were written up in Bezwada from materials obtained from the books in Madras. The third defendant was in possession of the books in May and should have produced them with the rest of the books produced by him at the beginning of August. He has neither produced them nor given any satisfactory account of what has become of them, and we are unable to interfere with the finding of Courts Trotter, J., that he has been guilty of wilful disobedience to the order of the Official Referee, and has rendered himself liable to commitment for contempt under rule 119 of the Original Side Rules. The fact that the order for production was made by the Official Referee to whom the case had been referred makes no difference. Dhurandhardas Sakharam v. Bhau Govind (1). The order, as drawn up, contains this :—"Until such time as he shall comply in all respects with the said orders of the Official Referee and purge himself of the said contempt." It is not clear whether at the date of the application for committal the missing books were in his possession or that of the first defendant who has now fallen out with him, and in these circumstances we modify the order by substituting for the words "until such time as he shall" the words "for a term of three months from the date of his arrest unless he shall at any time before the expiration of the said term." a form of order approved in Fernandez, Ex parte (2) and by Mathew, J., in Davies, In re (3). Otherwise the appeal is dismissed with costs of plaintiff

BS., a Sikh, mortgaged his ancestral joint family property to SS., another Sikh, on the 26th July 1904, and subsequently executed four deeds of further charge on the same property in favour of JS who, alleging himself to be the son of SS., brought the present suit for sale of the mortgaged property, on the basis of these deeds, against BS. Subsequently, the sons of BS. were joined as defendants. JS obtained a decree against BS alone on the deeds of further charge, and against all the defendants on the mortgage-deed of the 26th July 1904. The sons of BS challenged this latter decree in appeal to the udicial Commissioner The first point taken in appeal was that JS was not the legitimate son of SS. as his mother, a sunar woman, was the mistress of SS. and JS. had been born to her before she was taken over by SS.:

Held, that the parties being Sikhs, and it being open to a Sikh to marry any woman he pleased provided she adopted the Sikh religion, the facts (i) that JS's mother was always treated among the brotherhood as the wife of SS., (ii) that JS. was always treated as the legitimate son of SS., (iii) that SS. made no disposition of his property by Will or otherwise, and (iv) that JS. was referred to in the deeds of further charge as the son of SS., sufficiently proved that he was the legitimate son of SS. [p. 450, col. 2.]

It was next objected that the deed of mortgage of the 26th July 1904 was not properly attested as required by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, inasmuch as the executant of the deed had not signed the deed in the presence of one of the three attesting witnesses:

Held, that under section 2 of the Transfer of Property (Validating) Act, 1917, it was sufficient if the witness, before signing his name, received from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature to the same, and that unless this was proved, the witness was not an attesting witness, but that as it had been proved that the signatures of the other two witnesses were in their handwriting, and as the presumption under section 69 of the Evidence Act had not been rebutted, the due execution and attestation of the deed had been proved. [p. 451, cols. 1 & 2.]

Lastly, it was contended that no portion of the consideration of the mortgage-deed was borrowed either for legal necessity or to pay off an antecedent debt, and that, therefore, the deed was not in any way binding on the sons of BS.:

Held, that under the Hindu Law the principle of antecedent debt applied only when the sale or charge had been incurred not only antecedently but wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate, or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate, and that a debt could not be regarded as antecedent so as to bind the sons as such, unless it had been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from the joint family property, and that as it had not been shown that the debts, for the payment of which the money was borrowed by BS. were incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate and irrespective of the credit obtainable from the joint family property, the sons of BS. were not liable to pay any portion of the mortgage debt of the 26th July 1904. [p. 451, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, Tahsil Biswan, dated the 23rd June 1917.

Mr. Nabi Ullah, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Bhagwant Singh, the defendant No. 1, executed a deed of mortgage in favour of Sher Singh for Rs. 8,500 on the 26th of July 1904. In this deed he mortgaged the ancestral joint family property. He subsequently executed four other deeds of further charge on the same property in favour of Thakur Jangu Singh, the present plaintiff. The plaintiff, alleging himself to be the son of Sher Singh, brought the present suit for sale of the mortgaged property on the basis of the mortgage-deed of the 26th of July 1904 and the four deeds of further charge. The suit was instituted against Bhagwant Singh alone, but his four sons subsequently applied to be joined as defendants and their application was allowed. They defend the suit on the ground that Jangu Singh was not the legitimate son of Sher Singh. They also put the plaintiff to proof that the mortgage-deed and the deeds of further charge had been duly executed and attested, and they pleaded further that as the property was ancestral joint family property and the deeds had not been executed for antecedent debt or legal necessity, they were not binding upon them.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff Jangu Singh was the legitimate son of Sher Singh in whose favour the mortgage of the 26th July 1904 was executed and that deed and the four deeds of further charge had been duly executed for consideration by the defendant No. 1 and had been duly attested. He found further that out of the consideration of the mortgage of the 26th July 1904 the sum of Rs. 8,000 had been borrowed for the purpose of paying off an antecedent debt and that it was to this extent binding upon the sons of Bhagwant Singh, defendants Nos 2 to 5, but that it was not shown that the deeds of further charge were executed either for legal necessity or to pay off an antecedent debt and that, therefore, they were not binding upon the defendants Nos. 2 to 5. He gave the plaintiff a decree against all the defendants in respect of Rs. 8,000 out of the first mortgage-deed with interest thereon. He decreed the plaintiff's claim with regard to the deeds of further charge against Bhagwant Singh alone. Against this decree the sons of Bhagwant Singh have appealed.

They challenge the decree given against them with regard to the mortgage-deed of 26th July 1904 on three grounds:—

(1) That Jangu Singh was not the legitimate son of Sher Singh, (2) that the mortgage-deed of the 26th of July 1904 was not properly attested, and (3) that the money was not borrowed either for legal necessity or to pay off an antecedent debt and that the mortgage-deed is, therefore, not binding upon them. We shall first discuss the question whether it has been proved that the plaintiff Jangu Singh is the legitimate son of Sher Singh. Sher Singh was admittedly a Sikh and the plaintiff alleges that he is the legitimate son of Sher Singh by a Sunar woman who was converted to Sikhism before her marriage to Sher Singh. It is an admitted fact that a Sikh may marry a woman of any caste, but that before marriage the woman must be converted to the Sikh religion. The learned Counsel for the appellants would argue that there is no sufficient evidence to show that the Sunar woman was in fact converted to Sikhism or that Jangu Singh was born of the marriage. In the case of Musammat Dalip Kaur v. Musammat Fatti (1) it was held that in the case of a woman all that is required before she can lawfully marry a Sikh is that she should adopt Sikhism and no particular form of conversion need be observed before a woman, who is not a Sikhni, can be regarded as having been duly converted to that faith. In the present case we have the evidence of two respectable Sikh witnesses, who state that the only ceremony necessary for a woman to adopt Sikhism is the tasting of the Amrit, and we have the evidence of two other witnesses Sant Singh and Ishwar Singh to the effect that they were present at the marriage of the woman to Sher Singh, that the marriage was performed with the necessary ceremonies and that the Amrit was given to the woman before the marriage. One of these witnesses Sant Singh is a retired Sub Inspector of Police and there is no good reason why his evidence should be disbelieved. The other witness Ishwar Singh is not a man of any great position in life but he is married to one of the daughters of Sher Singh by this woman. Another of the daughters of Sher Singh by that marriage is married to the cousin of the witness Sant Singh.

The defendants appellants alleged that the woman was the mistress of Sher Singh and that Jangu Singh had been born to her before she was taken into the keeping of Sher Singh. They produced three witnesses in an attempt to support this story, but their learned Counsel has not even referred to the evidence of these witnesses in his argument. It is further proved that among the brotherhood this woman is and always has been treated as the wife of Sher Singh and Jangu Singh has always been treated as the legitimate son of Sher Singh. We find also that Sher Singh did not leave any Will or make any disposition of his property, as he almost certainly would have done had Jangu Singh not been his legitimate son. Furthermore, we find that, in the deeds of further charge executed by the father of the appellants, Jangu Singh is referred to as the son of Sher Singh. In all the circumstances of the case we are clearly of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in holding that Jangu Singh was the legitimate son of Sher Singh.

The next question is whether the mortgage deed of the 26th July 1904 was duly attested. There are three witnesses to the mortgage-deed Sheobaran Singh, Dal Chand and Sitla Singh. Sheobaran Singh and Dal Chand are dead. Sitla Singh has been produced as a witness by the plaintiff but according to him Bhagwant Singh did not sign the deed in his presence. He states: "Bhagwant Singh executed a deed for Rs. 8,500 in favour of Sher Singh. This is the deed and it bears my signature as an attesting witness. I signed the deed at the door of the Registration Office at Sitapur. Bhagwant Singh brought me from the south of the gate of Thompsongunj and asked me to witness the deed. Bhagwant Singh did not sign the deed in my sight. Bhagwant Singh and Sher Singh told me that the other two witnesses had already signed the deed. I did not ask Bhagwant Singh regarding his signature on the deed as I saw it written there."

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff suggests, and not without reason, that this witness has been won over to give evidence which, in view of the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Rowthan (2), would indicate that the document was not duly attested as required by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. But if this is so, the defendants-appellants appear to have overlooked the fact that as a result of that ruling the Transfer of Property (Validating) Act, 1917, was passed. Under section 2 of that Act it is sufficient that the witness before signing his name to the instrument should have received from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature to the same. The statement of Sitla Singh, which we have quoted above, clearly indicates that Bhagwant Singh acknowledged to Sitla Singh before the latter signed his name as a witness that he had executed the deed. Furthermore, if we were to hold that it has not been proved that Bhagwant Singh acknowledged his signature to Sitla Singh, then Sitla Singh would not be an attesting witness within the meaning of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, and the provisions of section 69 of the Evidence Act have been duly complied with, as it has been proved that the document was executed by Bhagwant Singh and that the attestation of Dal Chand, one of the attesting witnesses, is in his handwriting. The presumption that Sheobaran Singh and Dal Chand duly attested the document has in no way been rebutted. We agree, therefore, with the finding of the lower Court that the mortgage-deed of the 26th of July 1904 has been duly executed and attested.

We come now to the third ground on which the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge is challenged, namely, that no portion of the consideration of the mortgage deed of the 26th of July 1904 was borrowed by the father either for legal necessity or to pay off an antecedent debt and that, therefore, that mortgage-deed is not in any way binding upon the appellants. The only evidence with regard to this is that out of the sum of Rs. 8,500, Rs. 8,000 were left with the plaintiff to pay off prior mortgages executed by Bhagwant Singh in favour of one Basant Sah and that in fact this sum was paid to Basant Sah by the plaintiff, who has produced the mortgage-deeds. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the debts due to Basant Sah were antecedent debts which the sons were bound to discharge, as they were incurred antecedently to the mortgage of the 26th of July 1904 and existed quite independently of that mortgage. It should be noted that there is no evidence whatsoever that the debts due to Basant Sah were incurred for any family necessity and the learned Subordinate Judge has held that the sons are liable to the extent of Rs. 8,000, merely on the ground that that sum was borrowed for the purpose of paying off an antecedent debt. We find ourselves unable to accept the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge. He has attempted to distinguish the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (3), but in our opinion that ruling is directly applicable to the present case. In our judgment in First Civil Appeal No. 44 of 1918 [Nawab Mirza Muhammad Baqar Ali Khan v. Hazari Lal (4)] we have summarized the principles relating to the liability of sons in a joint Hindu family for debts incurred by their father which have been set forth by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case above-noted, and it is unnecessary to repeat what we have said in that judgment. One of those principles clearly laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council is that the principle of antecedent debt applies only when the sale or charge has been incurred not only antecedently but wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate, and that a debt cannot be regarded as antecedent so as to bind the sons as such unless it has been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from the joint family property. In the present case the money was borrowed by Bhagwant Singh from Basant Sah on the security of the joint family property, and it cannot be said that those debts were incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate and irrespective of the credit obtainable from the joint family property. It is clear, therefore, in view of the ruling of their Lordships that the appellants cannot be held liable to pay any portion of the mortgage-debt of the 26th of July 1904.

The result is that the appeal is allowed and the decree passed against the defendants-appellants is set aside. The decree of the lower Court will stand against Bhagwant Singh alone. The appellants will be allowed their costs in both Courts

PATNA HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 442 OF 1918.
CIVIL REVISION No. 61 OF 1918.
May 23, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Mullick and Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.

SATYA KINKAR SAHANA—APPELLANT
versus
Raja Sri Sri SHIBA PRASAD SINGH—RESPONDENT.

Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887), ss. 18, 21—Suit valued at less than Rs. 5,000—Appellate Court, whether entitled to award decree beyond pecuniary jurisdiction.

The plaintiff brought a suit claiming specific damages which he estimated at Rs 4,199, and for such other damages to which, on inquiry, he might be found entitled. It appeared after inquiry that he was entitled to a much larger sum than he had claimed and the District Judge, on appeal, awarded him Rs. 11,115-8-0 as damages In appeal to the High Court the defendant objected that as the amount awarded exceeded the pecuniary limit of the appellate jurisdiction of the District Judge, which was limited to suits of the value of less than Rs. 5,000, he had no jurisdiction to award a sum in excess of that amount:

Held, that as the valuation of the suit did not exceed Rs 5,000 the District Judge had jurisdiction to entertain the appeal and once having assumed jurisdiction, he legally had jurisdiction to make a decree for damages for a sum exceeding Rs 5,000, his original jurisdiction being unlimited. [p. 455, cols. 1 & 2]

Second appeal and revision from a decision of the District Judge, Manbhum Sambalpur, dated the 30th January 1918, reversing that of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Manbhum, dated the 31st August 1917.

Messrs. Purnendu Narain Sinha and N. Ch. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Sakti Kanta Bhattacherji, Naresh Ch. Sinha and S. K. Mitter, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have come to this Court in second appeal.

As the value of the claim laid in the plaint was only Rs. 4,199, the defendants have also filed an application in Revision No. 61 of 1918, under section 107 of the Government of India Act.

An attempt has been made in second appeal to question the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the land in suit is not included in the leasehold property of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3. This finding of the Subordinate Judge was not challenged in the lower Appellate Court and it is not open to the defendants to challenge it in second appeal. Even if it were open to them to attack that finding, there does not appear to be any doubt as to the correctness of the finding upon the evidence in the case. Village Dobaria has been shown in the revenue survey map as bearing No. 784 and lying to the east of Jherria Khas and north-east of Fatehpur. The Chuck Laya Kanali has been given a different number 783. In the pattas of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 of 1303 the lands settled are stated to be in village Dobaria as bearing Survey No. 784. In the said patta it is also mentioned that the surface right of Laya Kanali did not belong to the Raja. The learned Subordinate Judge was, therefore, right in holding that Laya Kanali was not at all settled with Gopeshwar Adhikari, the predecessor in interest of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The contention of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 must, therefore, fail,

The only question for determination is whether the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are entitled to enforce the contract entered into by the plaintiff with the defendant No. 1. It appears that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were conscious all through that Laya Kanali did not belong to them at all, and was not included in their leases, and, whenever anybody asserted any right to it, they tried to purchase that right. They admit that Kola Dassi had no right to the underground and still they purchased that right from her by means of a kabala on 13th Asin 1314. When defendant No. 1 purchased the brahmottar right in the land claimed by Chamroo Pande and another and entered into an agreement to take settlement of the underground right from the plaintiff, the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 purchased those rights from defendant No. 1 by means of the kabala of 20th Asin 1318. They hotly contended in the Court of the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff had no right to enter into any contract for settlement of Laya Kanali with the defendant No. 1. As a last resort they said that—

"Should the Court consider that the land is not included in the 86 bighas plot...the Court might be pleased to hold that the defendant No. 1 having performed his part of the contract dated the 30th Asin 13 8, and having deposited with the plaintiff's predecessor Rs. 1,000, the plaintiff is bound to execute a patta in terms of the said contract."

This alternative plea was not originally taken in a definite form in the written statement filed on the 20th August 1915 and was subsequently taken by supplementary written statement on 15th September 1916, more than two years after the plaint was filed and one year after the written statement was filed. For the last four years after the alleged contract the defendants did not at all think of enforcing their right, if any, for the specific performance of the contract. The Court below is, therefore, right in holding that the defendants never meant to take possession of the land by virtue of the lease in question, and that they were guilty of great delay and laches. It must also be mentioned that they did not pay a shell as rent for the land during the years of their possession on the strength of the alleged purchase of the right of the defendant No. 1 for specific performance of the contract. It is again more than doubtful whether the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 can purchase the right for the specific performance of a contract which at the most would amount to only an actionable claim. The defendant No. 1 himself did not enforce it, and I doubt whether he had a right to transfer it. Even if the defendant No. 1 had a right to transfer it and the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 did purchase that right, the latter waived their right as is obvious from the pleas taken in the written statement of August 1915 and from their trying to hold adversely to the interest of the lessor which a lessee cannot be permitted to do. They, having abandoned their right, if any, to enforce the contract, cannot resist the suit of the plaintiff to obtain khas possession. The conduct of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 amounts to a denial of the title of the plaintiff and the relationship of landlord and tenant. This, to my mind, amounts to an abandonment and forfeiture of the lessee's right, if any, under the alleged agreement to lease the land in suit. The Court would certainly be chary to exercise the discretion of granting the specific performance of a contract in a case of this kind.

Again the right of the defendant No. 1 as held by the Court below, appears to be barred by lapse of time. The right of the defendants accrued on 14th October 1911, when the bonus was paid up. The plaintiff did no execute any lease in favour of defendant No. 1, and defendant No. 1 himself did not demand it. It will, therefore, be considered a refusal on the part of the plaintiff to give him the lease in question. The claim was definitely set up for the first time in 1916, though the Court below says that it was set up in 1915 when the first written statement was filed. Whatever date, whether 1915 or 1916, be taken as the date of the assertion of the claim, it was barred by the rule of three years' limitation. The Court below is right in refusing to uphold the decree of the Subordinate Judge directing the plaintiff to execute a lease in favour of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

It is then contended that as the amount of damages found by the learned District Judge was Rs. 11,115-8-0, which is beyond his appellate jurisdiction, it was not competent for him to hear the appeal. Under section 21 of Act XII of 1887, the Bengal Civil Courts Act, an appeal from a decree or order of a Subordinate Judge lies to the District Judge when the value of the original suit does not exceed Rs. 5 000, and to the High Court in any other case. Under Order VII, rule 2, the plaintiff in the present case put an approximate or tentative value of less than Rs. 5,000 in respect of the damages suffered by him and prayed for a decree for such amount as may be found due to him on enquiry by the Court on payment of additional Court-fee, should the amount exceed the approximate value. The defendant in the written statement alleged that the value of the property in suit was more than Rs. 1,000, and the plaintiff was bound to pay Court-fee upon proper valuation. Upon this an issue was raised (Issue No. 4 of the Court below): "Is the suit properly valued?" The issue was not pressed by the defendant and was hence decided against the defendant. It is not clear from the written statement whether the objection as to valuation related to the value of the lands in suit, or to the amount of damages claimed, or to both. The issue also did not specify this. The suit was instituted on 20th May 1915. A Commissioner was appointed in this case who found that the quantity of coal extracted was 22,231 tons, which the District Judge valued at Rs. 11,115-8-8. The report of the Commissioner is dated 27th June 1917. The cause of action is stated in the plaint to have arisen in Asin 1320 (1913). The amount of damages approximately mentioned in the plaint must, therefore, relate to the period of about two years from 1913 to March 1915. Two years more had elapsed when the Commissioner made the estimate of coal extracted by the defendants. Upon the Commissioner's report it cannot, therefore, be ascertained as to what amount of damages accrued before the institution of the suit and what amount thereafter up to the time of the Commissioner's report. The Subordinate Judge had no occasion to determine the amount of damages suffered by the plaintiff, inasmuch as he dismissed the suit of the plaintiff entirely. Thus when the appeal was lodged by the plaintiff in the Court of the District Judge the amount of damages was not ascertained. To my mind the approximate value put in the plaint was, therefore, the value upon which the forum of appeal should be determined. There is a conflict of authorities as to the forum of appeal when mesne profits or damages are claimed in a suit for possession, the original valuation being less than Rs. 5,000 and the amount found due being in excess of that figure. In the Full Bench case of the Calcutta High Court, Ijjatulla v. Chandra Mohan (1), the amount of actual damages was already held in the Court of first instance to be much above Rs. 5,000. It was, therefore, held that the appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge could only lie to the High Court and not to the District Judge. In Mohini Mohan Das v. Satis Chandra Roy (2), where a decree for possession and mesne profits was awarded and the amount of mesne profits was ascertained to be more than Rs. 5,000 before the appeal was preferred, it was held that if the appeal had been preferred before the ascertainment of the mesne profits it would have lain to the District Court, but after the ascertainment the appeal could only lie to the High Court. The principle of this ruling, to a great extent, should apply to the present case. The question is whether the amount of damages was at all ascertained before the appeal was lodged by the plaintiff in the District Court. It is contended that the Commissioner's report of the 27th June 1917 should be taken as having ascertained the mesne profits. But the Commissioner had only found the quantity of coal extracted and did not come to the actual amount of damages suffered, nor as to the period during which the damages occurred. Besides, his report cannot be taken to be an ascertainment of the amount of damages. I think that the ascertainment of the damages must be by the Court itself. This was not done in the present case by the Subordinate Judge and hence the value mentioned in the plaint remained intact. I, therefore, hold that if the Court of first instance dismisses a suit or awards a sum less than Rs. 5,000 and the Appellate Court comes to the conclusion that the sum exceeding that amount should be awarded, its jurisdiction to hear and dispose of the appeal is not taken away. The case of Madho Das v. Ramji Patak (3) is an authority for the proposition. Besides, under section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act the disposal of the appeal by the lower Appellate Court cannot be questioned as being without jurisdiction on the ground of the valuation being beyond the pecuniary limit of the jurisdiction of that Court, unless the disposal of the appeal on the merits was prejudicially affected. Nothing has been shown in this case to suggest that the disposal of the appeal by the lower Appellate Court was prejudicially affected by reason of the value of the suit being above Rs 5,000. I, therefore, hold that the District Judge was competent to hear the appeal in this case.

(1) 34 C. 954; 6 C. L. J. 255 (F. B.); 11 C. W. N. 1133.
(2) 17 C. 704; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1011.

The next question is whether he could give a decree to the plaintiff for a sum exceeding the pecuniary limit of his appellate jurisdiction, that is, exceeding Rs. 5,000. The District Judge has concurrent jurisdiction with the Subordinate Judge to try original suits of any valuation under section 18 of the Bengal Civil Courts Act. His power to hear appeals is restricted to suits of the value of less than Rs 5,000. The case of Golap Sundari Debi v. Indar Kumar Hazra (4) is an authority for the proposition that the Munsif could not give a decree for over Rs. 1,000, the limit of his jurisdiction, although on enquiry the amount found due was more than Rs. 8,000. But the Munsif in that case had no jurisdiction to try original suits without any limit. In the Allahabad case of Madho Das v. Ramji Patak (3) it was held that the District Judge could make a decree for over Rs. 5,000 in a case similar to the present one. It has already been shown that in the present case there is nothing to show that the amount of damages awarded by the District Judge was only for the period prior to the institution of the suit. I think that the District Judge was right in awarding the damages found by him due to the plaintiff on the date on which the Commissioner made his report, namely, the 27th June 1917.

The Second Appeal No. 442 of 1918 and the Civil Revision No. 61 of 1918 should, therefore, be dismissed with costs. The stamp, if any, deposited by the defendants for the execution of the lease under the orders of the Subordinate Judge will be refunded to them on application being made to that Subordinate Judge MULLICK, J.—In my opinion the District Judge had jurisdiction to entertain the appeal as the valuation of the suit did not exceed Rs. 5,000, and there was in spite of the report of the Commissioner, no finding by that Court to the contrary. Once having assumed jurisdiction legally, the District Judge had jurisdiction to make a decree for damages for a sum exceeding Rs. 5,000, his original jurisdiction being unlimited.

Both Appeal and Revision dismissed.

COURT OF THE BOARD OF REVENUE, UNITED PROVINCES.
REVISION PETITION No. 21 OF 1918-19.

RAM SARUP—APPLICANT
versus
ZALIM SINGH—RESPONDENT.

U. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881), s. 10—Sir, usufructuary mortgage of—Proprietor, whether acquires ex-proprietary rights—Occupancy rights, acquisition of—Ejectment.

A zemindar who makes a usufructuary mortgage of his sir land does not lose or part with his proprietary rights and does not, therefore, acquire any ex-proprietary rights in the sir; the character of the sir in the hands of the mortgagee remains unchanged, and, as a sub-tenant of such land cannot acquire occupancy rights therein, he is liable as such to be ejected.

Application for revision of the order of the Commissioner, Allahabad Division, dated the 9th August 1918, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—The position admitted by both sides is that the plaintiff applicant, Ramsarup, is a mortgagee of Kuar Bhajja Singh proprietor and that the plot in suit was the latter's sir plot. The mortgage-deed of 1900 which is on the record shows that Kuar Bhajja Singh usufructuarily mortgaged his sir with other property to applicant. This was before the Tenancy Act came into force on 1st January 1902. The Commissioner has been misled by ancient decisions. After much legal discussion it was finally settled in Madho Bharthi v. Barti Singh (1) and later rulings (quoted in Mr. Agarwala's Tenancy Act, note under section 10) that under Act XII of 1881 an usufructuary mortgagee was not losing or parting with proprietary rights and did not give the mortgagor ex-proprietary rights in his sir. The plot in suit thus did not lose its character of sir when it came into the hands of applicant

He let it to the respondent Zalim Singh in 1312 and the latter was recorded as sub-tenant up to 1316, and after that erroneously as tenant-in-chief. The error in not recording him as sub-tenant of sir throughout cannot be held to alter the fact that the plot is sir, and that respondent is merely a sub-tenant of sir, liable as such to be ejected. He cannot acquire occupancy right in a plot of sir.

I consider that the Commissioner has made a gross and palpable error of law involving grave injustice. It is unjust to the applicant to have occupancy right fastened on a plot on which it cannot legally be fastened and beyond that, and which I regard as more important, it is unjust to the mortgagor proprietor whoif the Commissioner's order is maintained, will find, when he redeems his mortgage, that his sir plot has ceased to be sir.

I would, therefore, accept the application for revision and, setting aside the order of both the Courts below, would decree the ejectment of respondent, with costs to applicant throughout.

Application allowed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 253, 254, 232—Partnership—Assets due to partnership—Suit by partner for his share in one item of partnership assets, maintainability of—Accounts, relief by way of, nature of—Suit, frame of—Nattukottai Chetties, custom among—Deposits on thavanai, suit for—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 6, 7, Sch I, Arts 57, 60, 115—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s 32 5—Statement by father as to son's age at preparation of horoscope, admissibility of.

No partner has a right, at least in the absence of a special agreement, to take any portion of the partnership property and to say that it is his exclusively either during the existence of the partnership or after it has become dissolved. The share of a partner to which he is entitled is his proportion of the partnership assets that have been realised and converted into money after all the partnership debts and liabilities have been paid and discharged. [p. 459, col. 1.]

A partner cannot be allowed to take one item of the firm's accounts, divide it into equal shares according to the number of partnership shares, and ask to be given one share, without first having an accoun taken of the partnership liabilities and deducting the sum total of them from the aggregate assets of the firm. [p 459, col. 1]

Lakshmanan Chetty v. Nagappa Chetty, 45 Ind. Cas. 86; 34 M L J. 408, followed.

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, deposits made with Nattukottai Chetties on thavanai are deposits payable on demand and come within the definition of deposits under Article 60 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. If there is evidence, however, that the money is payable without demand, Article 57 or Article 115 would be applicable, according as it is payable at any time after it was lent or after a fixed period. [p. 461, col. 1.]

A partner is competent to give a valid discharge of a debt due to the partnership even after its dissolution. [p 460, col 2.]

The evidence of a person who prepared a child's horoscope, as to the statement made to him by the child's father about the date of the child's birth, is admissible in evidence under section 32 (5) of the Evidence Act, as it is the date of the commencement of a relationship. [p. 460, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Sivaganga, in Original Suit No. 105 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar (with him Messrs. K. Rajah Aiyar and T. R Srinivasaraiagopala Aiyangar), for the Appellants.—The suit is not sustainable in law. A partner cannot sue for one item alone of the partnership assets. His remedy is to ask for an account of the partnership assets and liabilities and then after deducting the liabilities from the assets, his share will be determined. The suit, therefore, without a prayer for accounts, is liable to be dismissed. The plaintiff should either have sued on behalf of all the partners of the Mandalay firm or should have taken appropriate proceedings in execution of the Mandalay Court's decree, see Lakshmanan Chetty v. Nagappa Chetty (1), or the plaintiff should have asked for the winding up of the Mandalay firm, for appointment of a Receiver to collect the assets, to adjust the liabilities inter se of the partners and to distribute the nett proceeds after payment of the partnership debts.

The suit is barred. The plaintiff cannot claim the benefit of section 6 of the Limitation Act as any of the adult members of the partnership could give a discharge without his concurrence.

Article 60 does not apply. The evidence of D. W. No. 1 is that there was to be no demand of the amount till the Thavanai date, and on that date the money was to be repaid at once.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.—One partner can sue for his share of partnership assets. The other partners may be allowed to ask for accounts being taken. Sokkanadha Vannimundar v. Sokkanadha Vannimundar (2), Thiruvengada Mudaliar v. Sadagopa Mudaliar (3) and Sadhu Narayana Aiyangar v. Ramaswami Aiyangar (4).

The suit is not barred. The money in defendants' hands is a fixed deposit and under Article 60 of the Limitation Act a suit lies within three years of the date of demand. Deposits with Nattukottai Chetties on Thavanai are fixed deposits. See Balakrishnudu v. Narayanasawmy Chetty (5).

The plaintiff has sued within three years of his attainment of majority and is saved by the provisions of section 6.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—The plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 to 10 represent a firm which was started in Mandalay under the style of A. L. A. M. for doing money-lending business, which, for brevity, may be referred to as the Mandalay firm. In 1908, the 8th defendant in this suit brought a suit in the District Court of Mandalay for dissolution of the partnership of this firm and obtained a decree in which the proportionate shares of the partners were defined, seven in number, and the plaintiff in the present suit was declared to be the owner of one share. While the suit was pending and before the partnership was dissolved, a sum of Rs. 35,239 and odd was collected by one Arunachalla Chetty, who was the agent of the Mandalay firm, and this sum was deposited at interest with a firm consisting of defendants Nos. 1 to 7 and a stranger who is the 11th defendant in this suit, which may be briefly referred to as the Rangoon firm. It may be seen that defendants Nos. 1 to 7 are common partners in both the Mandalay and Rangoon firms. The present suit was brought to recover 1/5th share of the money deposited with the Rangoon firm and the temporary Subordinate Judge of Sivaganga has given the plaintiff a decree accordingly. Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 appeal and they attack the correctness of the Subordinate Judge's judgment upon two points:—(a) that the suit as framed is not maintainable, and (b) that it is time-barred

The grounds for saying that the suit is not maintainable are stated in full in grounds Nos. 27 to 29 of the appeal memorandum. Although in the written statement of the 1st defendant the objection was simply raised that the suit could not be maintained without giving reasons, it appears from the appeal memorandum that the reasons are that the plaintiff's only remedy was to work out the claim as an item of asset in the winding up proceedings of the Mandalay firm under the decree of the District Court, which is Exhibit IV (a), and was confirmed on appeal to the Judicial Commissioner by his judgment Exhibit IV (c), Ground No. 28 is that "the money having been advanced as a whole and there having been admittedly no division or apportionment among the several partners, it was not competent for the plaintiff to maintain a suit for the recovery of his share alone," and ground No. 29 is that "the plaintiff cannot evade the equities arising out of the state of the account between himself and his partners of the Mandalay firm as a whole." It goes on to state that either a suit should have been brought on behalf of all the partners of the Mandalay firm for recovery of the entire loan or the plaintiff should have taken proper proceedings in execution of the decree of the Mandalay Court.

Now, on this point, there is no doubt that in England an action may, in the present state of the law, be brought in some cases by one firm against another, although they may have a common partner or partners, or on behalf of a firm to recover a debt due by one of the partners of that firm. See Lindley on Partnership (5th Edition), page 323. In India, Order XXX, rule 9, of the Civil Procedure Code recognises the maintainability of suits between firms and one or more partners of such firms and also suits between firms having one or more partners in common. But a suit does not ordinarily lie if brought by one partner to recover money lent by him to a firm of which he is a member [see Rustomji v. Purshotamdas (6)], the reason being that the advance made by one partner would be only one item in the partnership account; nor can one firm sue another when the sole partners of the first firm are partners along with others in the second firm and the claim is to recover as plaintiff's share certain advances made to the second firm before it ceased to do business—see Kashinath Kedari v. Ganesh Hari Narkar (7), the reason being that, without taking a general account, it would be impossible to do justice between the parties. It was held in Karri Venkatareddi v. Kollu Narasayya (8) that in certain circumstances one partner can sue another for a partial account. Those circumstances are that the granting of the relief asked for by the plaintiff would not involve the taking of general accounts and would not work injustice to the other partners. In the same Volume of the I. L. R. Madras series at page 203 another case, Sadhu Narayana Aiyangar v. Ramaswami Aiyangar (4), is reported in which it was held that a partner, who has been compelled after dissolution of the partnership to pay a debt due by the partnership, may bring a suit for contribution; but in such a suit it was laid down that the defendant must be given an opportunity of showing, if he can, that on a settlement of accounts the amount payable by him as contribution has been wiped out or reduced. In Gottipatichina Kondiah v. Gottipatinarasappa Naidu (9), to which decision I was a party, a partner was allowed to sue for his share of the collections made by another partner after dissolution of the partnership, on the condition that the defendants were given an opportunity of showing that, if a general account of the partnership transactions were taken, the plaintiff would not be entitled to the share which he claimed. But in another case decided by a different Bench to which my learned brother was a party, Lakshmanan Chetty v. Nagappa Chetty (1), where the plaintiff sued to establish a certain liability against the defendants on the basis of accounts and he did not ask for accounts to be taken, it was held that the suit was not maintainable. What are the rights of persons in a firm inter see has been clearly set out in Lindley on Partnership at page 659, 8th Edition. One of these is to have the partnership assets applied in liquidation of the partnership debts and to have the surplus assets divided. This result is usually obtained by the process referred to at page 614 of having a Receiver appointed. The share of a partner to which he is entitled is his proportion of the partnership assets that have been realized and converted into money after all the partnership debts and liabilities have been paid and discharged —see page 402.

No partner has a right, at least in the absence of a special agreement, to take any portion of the partnership property and to say that it is his exclusively either during the existence of the partnership or after it has been dissolved. The decision in Lakshmanan Chetty v. Nagappa Chetty (1) proceeds upon this principle—see page 410*. The plaintiff in this suit cannot legally assert any right to a specific portion of the deposit made by his partners with the Rangoon firm. His only right is to take steps for an account being taken of the liabilities and assets of the Mandalay firm and to claim his proportionate share of the balance so arrived at.

A partner cannot be allowed to take one item of the firm's assets, divide it into equal shares according to the number of partnership shares, and ask to be given one share without first having an account taken of the partnership liabilities and deducting the sum total of them from the aggregate assets of the firm. This is what the plaintiff has done here. In the plaint there is no prayer for accounts nor has he since applied to amend his plaint. In paragraphs Nos. 1 and 8 of the 1st defendant's written statement an objection was taken to the maintainability of the suit in its present form, without specifying that the suit would have been maintainable if it had been framed differently so as to include a prayer for taking accounts and ascertaining the nett assets of the firm. Under Order VIII, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, it was the duty of the defendants to state how the plaintiff's suit was not maintainable, but under Order VII, rule 7, a duty is cast upon the plaintiff in the first instance to state specifically what relief he claims, and he must bear the consequences of his failure to ask for the only thing that he is entitled to get when that thing is not of the nature of general relief. It was for want of a prayer for accounts that the suit concerned in Lakshmanan Chetty v. Nagappa Chetty (1) was held to be not maintainable, and as that appears to be sound law, I think, we should follow the decision. It makes no difference whether the plaintiff is, as he was in that case, a member of the defendants' firm or whether, as here, the defendants or some of them are members of the plaintiff's firm, when in either case the obvious remedy open to the plaintiff is to get the business (in this case the affairs of the Mandalay firm) wound up by getting a Receiver appointed to collect the partnership assets, to adjust the liabilities of the partners inter se and to distribute the nett proceeds after paying the partnership debts. In Sokkanadha Vannimundar v. Sokkanada Vannimundhar (2) and Thiruvengada Mudaliar v. Sadagopa Mudaliar (3) plaintiffs were allowed to sue for their share of assets received by a co partner after the dissolution of a partnership, but this was not without the defendants being at liberty to re-open the whole accounts of the business. Sadhu Narayana Aiyangar v. Ramaswami Aiyangar (4) dealt with a suit by one partner, who had been compelled to pay the whole of a partnership debt, for contribution against his co partners. It was not, like this, a suit to recover a share in a partnership debt from the debtors including members of the plaintiff's firm, but it partook of the nature of a suit for contribution, pure and simple. The circumstances of those cases were thus different from those of the present suit. The 3rd and 4th issues must now be decided against the plaintiff.

The question of limitation is more difficult. It stands in this way. The sum of Rs. 35,289 and odd were placed with the Rangoon firm on August 20th, 1908. This suit was instituted on October 5th, 1915. The Subordinate Judge has found that plaintiff attained majority on October 6th, 1912. If the date, October 20th, 1908, when repayment of the money became due according to the Thavanai be taken as the starting point for limitation and if the plaintiff's minority is not treated as entitling him to exception, the suit is time-barred. It would equally be barred if 3 years were to be calculated as running from March 15th, 1909, the date of the Mandalay District Court's decree defining the plaintiff's share in the assets of the firm.

The Subordinate Judge held that the suit was in time as it was brought within 3 years of the plaintiff attaining majority. It is now argued by Mr. K. Srinivasa Ayyangar that the plaintiff cannot claim under section 6, Limitation Act, that time does not begin to run against him till he attained majority as any one of the adult members of the Mandalay firm was competent to give a discharge of the debt without his concurrence and thus the first part of section 7 of the Act is applicable. He also attacks the Subordinate Judge's finding on the question of fact. The plaintiff in his plaint gives the date of his birth as October 8th, 1891. This would make him 21 on October 8th, 1912, as a guardian of his property was appointed by the District Court of Madura in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 411 of 1900, which had the effect under the Indian Majority Act of extending the attainment of his majority till he completed his 21st year.

The Subordinate Judge has accepted October 6th, 1891, which was also the date given by the plaintiff as the date of his birth in another suit Original Suit No. 257 of 19 2 (compare the plaint Exhibit E1) as correct. I see no sufficient reason to differ from this finding. The evidence of P. W. No. 1 who prepared the plaintiff's horoscope, as to the statement made by plaintiff's father about the date of his son's birth, is admissible under section 32 (5), Evidence Act, as it was the date of the commencement of a relationship [vide Oriental Government Security Life Assurance Company, Limited v. Narasimha Chari (10) and Amir Ali's Evidence Act, page 359]. No doubt Exhibits II and V throw some doubt on the correctness of the age given in the later proceedings to which the plaintiff was a party, but there is no reason for supposing, in the absence of evidence to that effect, that Exhibit D related to another person of the same name as plaintiff. His statement as D. W. No. 2 that he was not aware, at the time when Exhibits II and V were drawn up, that a guardian had been appointed by Court during his minority has not been contradicted or shown to be false. If it is taken to be true, it sufficiently explains the circumstances under which he was treated on those occasions as having attained majority earlier than in 1912.

The Subordinate Judge's finding on the point must, therefore, be confirmed. On the question of law we must allow the Full Bench ruling in Mannava Annapurnamma v. Uppala Akkayya (11) and the decision in Palaniappa Chettiar v. Veerappa Chettiar (12) and pronounce in favour of the competence of one of several joint promisees or of one member of a partnership to give a valid discharge of debt due to the joint tenancy or to the firm even after it has been dissolved.

Mr. A Krishnaswami Ayyar, for the respondent, has endeavoured to support the lower Court's finding on the 2nd issue, which relates to limitation, by arguing that the money in the defendants' hands was a fixed deposit in a bank and that Article 60, under which time begins to run from the date when a demand is made for payment, is the article of limitation applicable to the case. In the plaint it is asserted that demands were made in December 1914 and at the beginning of September 1915, and this assertion is not denied in the defendants' written statements.

In Balakrishnuda v. Narayanasawmy Chetty (5) the learned Chief Justice of this Court, when sitting on the original side, traced the history of Article 60 of the Limitation Act and showed its application to so called fixed deposits and other deposits with bankers and other bodies doing similar business, if they are repayable on demand and whether they carry interest or not, even if they are of the nature of loans. In a series of subsequent decisions, this Court has repeatedly presumed, in the absence of evidence as to the terms on which the money was handed over, that deposits made with Nattukkottai Chetties, who are the Indian bankers of this part of the country, are payable on demand and come within the definition of deposits under Article 60. [See Ramanathan Chetty v. Subramaniyam Chetty (13), Narayanan Chettyar v. Vellayappa Chettyar (14), Vellayappa Chettiyar v. Unnamalai Achi (15), Muthiah Chettiar v. Ramanatham Chettiar (16) and Chellappa Chetty v. Subramania Chetty (17).]

If there is evidence that the money was payable without demand, Article 57 or Article 115 would be applicable, according as it was payable at any time after it was lent or after a fixed period. If either of these articles governs this case, the suit is out of time. In this case there is such evidence. Although the terms on which the money was deposited with the Rangoon firm were not embodied in a bond or promissory note, we have the oral evidence of D. W. No. 1 that in this Thavanai arrangement the investor was not entitled to demand the money till the Thavanai date but when that date arrived, the person with whom it was invested was bound to repay it immediately and that it was the custom to pay it without any demand being made. There is no other evidence as to the nature of the transaction. The Subordinate Judge has accepted the evidence of this witness on this point and has found that the money was payable without demand.

This issue must, therefore, be decided against the plaintiff. The appeal is allowed and this suit is dismissed with costs in both Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 2 (2), 47, 109 - Execution of decree—Order of High Court directing subordinate Court to execute decree, whether final order or decree—Appeal to His Majesty in Council —Leave, whether can be granted.

An order of a High Court holding that a subordinate Court has jurisdiction to execute a decree and directing it to proceed with execution is not a final order in respect of which leave may be obtained to appeal to His Majesty in Council [p. 463, col. 1.]

Such an order relates solely to jurisdiction and does not determine a question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, and is not, therefore, a decree within the meaning of section 2 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 462, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an application on behalf of the defendants asking for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from an order of this Court made on the 10th December 1918,* setting aside an order of the Deputy Magistrate-Subordinate Judge of the district of Palamau, refusing to execute decrees pronounced in favour of the plaintiff. The petitioner was one of the defendants in the suit, and he now makes this application so far as the order affects the decree to which he was a party. The plaintiff obtained the decrees in question in his favour for possession of two villages with costs and mesne profits to be determined by the Court below. He sought to execute the decrees in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate-Subordinate Judge of the district of Palamau. When the matter came before that Judge, he came to the conclusion for reasons which it is unnecessary to state that he had no jurisdiction to hear the case. On appeal this Court took a different view and remanded the case back to the Subordinate Judge to proceed with the execution, and it is from that order that the defendant now seeks leave to appeal. The order in question does not appear to us to be a final order, and, therefore, it is not a case in which we have any power to grant leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. It is contended that this is a case which relates to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree, and that, therefore, it is a decree within section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that in any case if it does not come within that section, it is a final order because it finally disposes of the rights or some of the rights of the parties. I am unable to accept that view. It does not seem to me that an order relating solely to jurisdiction determines a question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree within the meaning of section 2 of the Code. Nor does it appear to me that the order in itself, directing that the Court shall hear and determine the questions in dispute in execution, is an order which finally disposes of any of the rights of any of the parties. In these circumstances I think that this application should be rejected.

COUTTS, J.—I agree.

Mortgage—Occupancy rights, mortgage of, effect of—Death of mortgagor, effect of.

A mortgage of occupancy rights prior to 1873, while valid as between the parties thereto, did not establish any relation between the mortgagee and the land-holder of the mortgagor. The mortgagee's right lasted only so long as the mortgagor's occupancy right was not extinguished.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Benares Division, dated the 4th October 1918.

JUDGMENT.—The proposition of law for which the appellant contends is that a mortgage of an occupancy holding prior to 1873 was a valid transaction and that after the death of the mortgagor without heirs the land-holder cannot eject the mortgagee without paying the mortgage-money.

This is contrary to the law as laid down in Chhotey Lal v Ajudhia Parshad (1), Khiali Ram v. Nathu Lal (2) and in an unreported decision of the Board in Mahabal Singh v. Rai Radhe Rawan (3) (Petition No. 23 of 1908-09). The principle laid down in these decisions was that a mortgage of occupancy rights prior to 1873, while valid as between the parties to it, did not establish any relation between the mortgagee and the land holder of the mortgagor, and that the mortgagee's right lasted only so long as the mortgagor's occupancy right was not extinguished.

The appellant relies on a later unpublished decision of the Board in Parsotam Das v. Jasodha Bibi (4) (Petition No. 28 of 1913-14). In that case the Board held, as I understand from the reference to the notes on section 9, Act XII of 1881, in Mr. House's Rent Act, that the question as to whether an occupancy holding was transferable before 1873 depended upon the existence of a custom to that effect, and that in the case before them the transfer having been recognized by the land holder the transaction was a valid one. That case was, therefore, distinguishable from the present one, in which there is no evidence of any custom of transferability or recognition by the land-holder. In my opinion the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Jessore, dated the 15th August 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court, Magura, dated the 10th July 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose (with him Babu Ajit Ghose), for the Appellants.—The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession. There are findings of fact against me but they are based on irrelevant evidence. The learned Judge was wrong in admitting documentary evidence which was quite irrelevant and inadmissible under sections 11 and 13 of the Indian Evidence Act. As regards the fact that no exception was taken at the time of admission, we were not given notice of the point in regard to which the documents were tendered. See Abdullah v. Kunja Behari (1). The Privy Council decision in Shahzadi Begam v. Secretary of State for India (2) is not applicable to this case. Upon these documents the whole decision of the lower Appellate Court rests. Section 32 of the Indian Evidence Act is also of no avail to the respondents. If a document is produced and neither the executant nor any witness proves it, the document must be deemed to have not been proved legally. But where it has been legally proved, the mere fact of not taking any exception cannot be a bar to me. I was not aware of the specific statements which were going to be proved against me. In these circumstances the Privy Council ruling is distinguishable. Whether a statement against a third person is evidence against me or not, that is no mode of proof to which I can possibly take any legal objection. The case in Imrit Chamar v. Sridhar Panday (3) is based on Abdullah v. Kunja Behari (1).

My next point is that the suit is not maintainable by the plaintiff, as the Judge has found that the plaintiff's lessors leased the land to plaintiff's son. Hence he must come as one of the plaintiffs. The learned Judge was wrong in giving a decree against the entire estate.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter (with him Babus Bhudar Halder and Neroda B. Roy), for the Respondents.—As regards non-objection by the other side, see Imrit Chamar v. Sridhar Panday (3). If I show that these statements are admissible under section 13 of the Indian Evidence Act irrespective of section 32, then the judgment of the learned Judge can very well be supported. These documents were not objected to at the time when they were put in. Now it is too late for them to take exception to the statements contained in the documents. The learned Judge does not rely on these documents alone but also on oral evidence. See section 167 of the Evidence Act.' As regards the second point raised by the other side, viz, that the suit is not maintainable by the present plaintiff alone, I submit they never challenged the title of my lessors. They cannot raise the point now.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal against a decree declaring the right and title of the plaintiffs to the land in suit and for recovery of possession of the same. The decision of the lower Appellate Court is based on findings of fact; but it is contended on the part of the appellants that these findings were arrived at on a consideration of documents which were irrelevant. The documents in question were deeds executed by persons who were not parties to the suit with reference to land on the boundary of the disputed land, in which statements were made in support of the plaintiffs' claim. No objection was taken to the admission of these documents; and it appears to me on the authority of the cases of Imrit Chamar v. Sridhar Panday (3) and Abdullah v. Kunja Behari (1) that these statements must be held to be relevant. It is urged that they should not have been admitted in evidence because the authority of these rulings is that they are admissible under clause (3) of section 32 of the Evidence Act and it has not been proved that the conditions mentioned in the first part of section 32 exist in this case. It appears to me, however, that in order to successfully take this objection the appellants should have objected to the admission of these documents at an early stage. The objection is not one as to their admissibility but as to their mode of proof. The contents of the documents are relevant and the question was whether those contents should be proved by the documents themselves or by direct evidence. When no objection was taken at an earlier stage to prove the contents by the documents, it was not necessary for the plaintiffs to adduce oral evidence to prove the statements made in these documents. I would, therefore, hold that the first objection fails and that the findings of the lower Appellate Court are not vitiated by the admission of irrelevant evidence.

The only other point is that the first Court found that the suit was bad for non-joinder fo one of the plaintiffs' sons and that the lower Appellate Court has come to no finding on this point. It will appear that any objection on this ground was waived by the appellants at an earlier stage of these proceedings. This probably accounts for the fact that this objection has not been taken in the grounds of appeal in this Court. It is sufficient to reject this contention on the ground that it has not been so taken.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2, O. VI, r. 17—Amendment of plaint, when to be allowed—O. II, r. 2, whether applicable to amendment of plaint.

The object of litigation being to ascertain and give effect to the rights of parties, an amendment of the plaint should always be allowed when it does not change the nature of the suit and when the rights of the defendant are in no way prejudiced by the amendment: any inconvenience caused to him can be healed by the award of costs [p. 465, col. 1.]

Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code merely bars a second suit for relief which should have been included in an earlier suit, and does not apply to the case of an amendment of a plaint. [p. 465, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 25th June 1917, modifying that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Mianwali, dated the 1st May 1917.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Gokal Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question here is, whether the amendment was rightly permitted by the first Court.

The District Judge finds that the amendment contravened Order II, rule 2, and decreed only for the relief first set forth in the plaint.

ARUNACHALAM PILLAI v. VELLAYA PILLAI.

Order II, rule 2, has nothing to do with the case, but merely bars a second suit for relief which should have been included in an earlier suit. The object of litigation is to ascertain and give effect to the rights of parties and amendment should always be allowed, when it does not change the nature of the suit and when any inconvenience caused to the defendant can be healed by the award of costs.

In this case application to amend was made at the first appearance in Court of the defendant and his rights were in no way prejudiced by the amendment.

The permission to amend was all the more justified as the plaintiff was a minor suing through a next friend and he would not have been bound by the neglect of the next friend.

I accept the appeal and restore the first Court's decree with costs throughout.

XXII, r. 9—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Death of plaintiff—Legal representative, application for substitution by, dismissal of—Suit by legal representative—Objection by defendant—Estoppel—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 14—Time spent in prosecuting wrong remedy, exclusion of.

The mother of a last male owner brought a suit to obtain a declaration that an adoption made to the latter was invalid. During the pendency of the suit the plaintiff died, and the present plaintiffs sought to continue the suit, but the defendants contended that they were not entitled to do so and the Court, allowing the contention, dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs thereupon brought the present suit. The defendant, who was a defendant in the previous suit, contended that the suit was barred under Order XXII, rule 9 of the Civil Procedure Code, by reason of the decree dismissing the previous suit and that it was also barred by time:

Held, (1) that it was not open to the defendant to contend that the previous decision was erroneous, and that the plaintiff's proper remedy was to continue the suit first filed; [p. 465, col. 2; p. 466, col. 1.]

(2) that the plaintiffs were entitled, under section 14 of the Limitation Act, to claim a deduction of the interval between the date of their applying to continue the previous suit and the date of the Court's order dismissing that suit. [p. 466, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 12 of 1916 (Appeal Suit No. 407 of 1915, on the file of the District Court, Madura), preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Dindigul, in Original Suit No. 205 of 1914 (Original Suit No. 949 of 1912 on the file of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Dindigul).

Messrs. K. R. Guruswami Aiyar and A. Subramanya Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar and K. S. Ganapathi Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Two grounds are argued in appeal: (1) that the present suit is barred under Order XXII, rule 9, by reason of the decree of this Court in Second Appeal No. 1384 of 1910 dismissing under Order XXII, rule 3 the previous suit filed by the mother of the last male owner for a declaration against the adoption (Original Suit No. 678 of 1906 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Dindigul), (2) that the present suit is barred by limitation.

The first plea is one which, we think, appellant is estopped from raising in the present proceedings. The plaintiff in the former suit died; and when the present plaintiffs sought to continue the suit, the present appellant (defendant in both suits) contended that they were not entitled to do so. This Court, in the view of the law which prevailed until the Privy Council decision in Venkatanarayana Pillay v. Subbammal (1), allowed this contention and dismissed the suit. Plaintiffs have now, accepting that decision, filed a fresh suit; and we think appellant cannot be allowed now to turn round and contend that the previous decision was erroneous and that their proper remedy was to continue the suit first filed, vide Jagannadha Rao v. Kurmayya (2) and Assan v. Pathumma (3).

As regards limitation, we think plaintiffs are entitled to claim under section 14, Indian Limitation Act, a deduction of the interval between the date of their applying to be allowed to continue the original suit and the date of this Court's order in second appeal dismissing the suit. This deduction, if allowed, will admittedly save limitation. Their application was finally dismissed in effect on the ground that it was one which the Court was not competent to entertain; and we think the words "other cause of a like nature" in section 14 are wide enough to cover such a case. The other objection to the application of the section raised by Mr. Guruswami Aiyar for appellant is that the Court was not really unable to entertain it but only thought it was unable. We think this distinction is without force. This Court, following the view of the law then prevalent, considered that the Munsif's Court could not entertain the application, and decreed accordingly and we think the same effect must be given to its decision in the present connection as if it had been correct. It would be most unreasonable to hold (for instance) that a party who filed an application in the wrong Court was entitled to the benefit of the section; but that one who filed an application in the right Court, which erroneously believed itself to be the wrong Court, was not so entitled. We hold that the suit is not time-barred.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff to redeem a mortgage of 1863. The defendants pleaded that the present suit was not maintainable in consequence of the decree in an earlier suit for redemption. In 1885, the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title had filed Suit No. 985 of 1885 for redemption, and obtained a decree on the 20th February 1888 in these terms: "It is decreed that the plaintiff do redeem on payment to defendants Nos. 1 and 2 the sum of Rs. 518-11-6 and costs in both the Courts by six equal instalments, each of which is to be payable at the close of March in the years 1888—1893. On plaintiff's default to pay the whole sum by the end of March 1893, his right to redeem shall be for ever barred." The trial Court disallowed the defendants' contention and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff for redemption The lower Appellate Court reversed that decree and dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the decree in the previous suit of 1885 was a bar to the present suit.

In the appeal before us it has been contended on behalf of the plaintiff that a second suit is competent, and in support thereof the recent decision of the Full Bench in the case of Kamji v. Pandharinath (1) is relied upon. After a consideration of the arguments urged on behalf of the appellant I am of opinion that the ratio decidendi in Ramji's case (1) has no application to the facts of this case. The decree in the suit of 1885, which was decided under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, was passed in February 1888; and though the last instalment payable under the decree fell due in March 1893, i. e., after the Transfer of Property Act came into force in this Presidency, it is clear that the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act could not apply to that decree. The provisions of section 2 of the Act are clear and the decision in Chennaya v. Malkapa (2) is to the same effect. Therefore, there was no scope for any order absolute in respect of this decree as provided by the Transfer of Property Act, nor for any final decree as contemplated by the Code of 1908. The decree of 1888 was capable of execution, and it provided in terms that if there was a default in the payment of the sum due thereunder, the right to redeem was to be for ever barred. Admittedly the execution of this decree is time-barred long since, and under the provisions of section 47 of the Code, corresponding to section 244 of the old Code, no fresh suit can lie.

This case is governed by the decisions of this Court prior to the Transfer of Property Act of which Ladu Chimaji v. Babaji Khanduji (3) is a type. In these cases the subsequent suit has been held to be not maintainable. The ratio decidendi of these cases would still govern a case in which the earlier decree provided in terms that the right to redeem would be barred in case the amount provided by the decree was not paid within the time fixed under the decree. It is not necessary to refer to the recent cases which deal either with decrees to which the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act or the corresponding provisions of the Code of 1908 might be applicable. The learned Pleader for the appellant has not been able to cite a single case in which in spite of the earlier decree containing such a provision as we have in the decree of 1888 in this case, a fresh suit for redemption is held to be maintainable.

I am not sure that even if the Transfer of Property Act applied and if the earlier decree contained the provision such as we have in this case, a second suit for redemption would be maintainable. But that is a point which need not be considered in this case.

I would, therefore, confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

HEATON, J.—I agree. At the time when the earlier decree in the suit of 1885 was made, the only method known to our law in this Presidency by which it could be given effect to was by execution proceedings and, therefore, as provided by section 244 of the old Code, a second suit would not lie. The only possible way in which this difficulty could be overcome, would be by showing that the declaration in the decree that on failure to pay the debt the right to redeem shall be for ever barred, did not operate of itself, but could only be made operative by an order absolute or a final decree. But at the time this decree was made there was no provision in this Presidency either for an order absolute or for a final decree. Everything was done in execution proceedings. The Code of 1908, which provides for a final decree in mortgage suits, obviously could not apply to a decree made sometime in the eighties of the last century. The Transfer of Property Act could not apply, because it only came into operation in this Presidency in the year 1893. Therefore it is impossible, as I think, to get away from the effect of the pronouncement in the decree itself. It follows from this that the right to redeem has long been Madras Local Boards Act (V of 1884), s. 73—Cess paid by landlord—Tenant, liability of, extent of—Suit by landlord to recover cess paid by him from tenant—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 61, 120.

A landlord is primarily liable to Government under section 73 of the Madras Local Boards Act and a tenant is liable only to the landlord in respect of the portion of cess which the latter has actually paid and contingently on his having made the payment.

Puchakayala Jagannaikulu v. Manager of Nandigam Estate, 27 Ind. Cas. 122; (1914) M. W. N. 939; 28 M. L. J. 154; 39 M. 269, followed.

A suit by a landlord to recover from the tenant the cess actually paid by him must be instituted within the period prescribed by Article 120, and not by Article 61, of Schedule I to the Limitation Act.

Appeal, under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar, in Civil Revision Petition No. 413 of 1916, dated the 17th April 1917, reported as 42 Ind. Cas. 502, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Paramakudi, in Small Cause Suit No. 1085 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The lower Court is wrong in its construction of section 73 of the Local Boards Act. The landlord, and not the tenant, is liable to Government under the section: see Puchakayala Jagannaikulu v. Manager of Nandigam Estate (1). The tenant is only liable to the landlord for the amount actually paid by the latter.

Article 61 of the Limitation Act cannot apply, as the cess was not paid by the plaintiff for or on behalf of the defendant. Article 121 is the proper Article applicable.

JUDGMENT.—The sum at stake in this Letters Patent Appeal is small and presumably for that reason the appeal has not been opposed.

Looking at the terms of the Local Boards Act, we regret that we are unable to agree with the material portion of the learned Judge's judgment, that in which he holds the tenant liable to Government. The contrary view that only the landholder is liable to Government was taken by Tyabji, J., in Puchakayala Jagannaikulu v. Manager of Nandigam Estate (1) and is, we think, entailed by the language of section 73, Local Boards Act, the only liability of the tenant being that imposed by the proviso thereto. He is liable only to the landlord in respect of the portion of the cess which the latter has actually paid and contingently on his having made the payment.

Taking this view, we cannot apply Article 61, Schedule I of the Limitation Act, since it applies to cases of money paid by the plaintiff on behalf of the defendants, and plaintiff's payment was not of that description. No other contention being suggested, the Article applicable is No 120. The decision of the learned Judge must, therefore, be set aside and that of the lower Court must be modified by addition of Rs 5-6-0 to the decree amount, Rs. 3-15-1. Defendants will pay half plaintiff's costs in this Court.

GYASI RAM AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Possession, long, effect of—Tenancy, whether can be presumed—Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 34, suit under—Limitation.

Where a person has been in possession of land for a long period without payment of rent, according to the records, it is permissible to infer that the fact of such occupation did at sometime or other come to the knowledge of the landholder, but no inference would arise that the actual occupation was with consent. The fact that the landholder took no steps to eject the occupier would not justify the inference that he had entered into an express or implied contract of tenancy with him.

No period of limitation is prescribed for a suit under section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner of Agra Division, dated the 26th August 1918, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

HOPKINS, J. M.—The respondents tenants have held the land in suit for some 43 years without payment of rent according to the records. They resisted ejectment on the ground that they did not hold the land without payment of rent, the rent being included in that of other land held with occupancy rights, and that they held with consent of the landholders and were, therefore, tenants. The Assistant Collector found that the rent of the land in suit was not included in that of the respondents' occupancy holding and following Babu Sat Narain Prasad v. Ram Kumar (1) ordered their ejectment.

The Commissioner thought that the case was not one of encroachment covered by Shaikh Nihal Ahmad v. Kalka Singh (2) on which the respondents relied, but that it was probably one of breaking up and bringing under cultivation of fallow land. He also noted that at the Settlement of 1285 F., although the land was recorded in the jamabandi as 'bila lagan', there was also an entry in the khasra that the rent was included in the rent shown against other (i.e., the occupancy) numbers.

From the settlement entries, however, he only inferred that the landholder must have had knowledge at that time of the land being in the respondents' possession. He found that the landholder must have known of the respondents' possession for 42 years and that it must be held that all the fields held for a period of over 30 years were held with knowledge and consent and that occupancy rights had accrued in them; and he decreed the suit accordingly.

It is certainly warrantable to infer from a long period of occupation that the fact of such occupation must at some time or other have come to the knowledge of the landholder, but no inference arises that the actual occupation was with consent, nor does the mere negative fact that the landholder took no steps to eject the occupier justify the inference that he entered into express or implied contract of tenancy with him. There is no limitation for a suit for ejectment based on section 34 of the Tenancy Act.

In the present case, however, there seems some ground for supposing that the respondents entered on the land with the consent of the landholder for the purpose of breaking up fallow land, also that they were actually paying rent at the last settlement, although such rent was not shown against the lands in suit in the revenue papers but was included in the rent of other holdings.

I would remand the case to the Commissioner for a finding on the above question of fact and would allow the parties to produce fresh evidence, return being directed within 2 months and 10 days being allowed for objections. The parties will not necessarily be heard again.

FERARD, S. M.—It is well to have the facts in this case. I, therefore, agree with the order of remand.

Where individual members of a joint family are in possession of specific items of joint property, such possession does not constitute an exclusion of the others from the family properties. JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment prepared by Seshagiri Aiyar, J., and will state my conclusions very briefly. If the property was undivided and Article 127 is applicable, I entirely agree with him that to bar the plaintiff there must be exclusion from the whole of the joint family property and that exclusion from the suit property only will not do. The decision in Vishnu Ramchandra v. Ganesh Appaji Chaudhuri (1) appears to me to be opposed to the decree of the Privy Council in the Belgaum case and to the other cases cited by my learned brother as well as to the language of the Article, and I am unable to follow it. Assuming, however, that a division must be presumed to have taken place, it is said that Article 127 does not apply because the plaintiff is not a person excluded from joint family property within the meaning of the Article but only a tenant in-common excluded from the common property. The words "joint family property" are used in the corresponding section 1, clause 13 of the Act of 1859, and I think the scope of the two enactments is the same though the starting points of the limitation are different. It is, in my opinion, unnecessary to review the decisions on the question whether the words "joint family property" in the Article apply where there has been a division in status but no division of immoveable properties by metes and bounds. In such a case if Article 127 does not apply, Article 144 must apply. Under that Article the suit would not be barred, as the possession of one tenant in-common is the possession of all, and is not adverse to his co-tenants in the absence of clear evidence of ouster. Corea v. Appuhamy (2). The Subordinate Judge has not found that there was anything amounting to ouster in this case, and there is no sufficient evidence of it. I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—This is a suit for partition. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 represent one branch; defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5 the second branch; the 6th defendant the third branch; and the 7th defendant the fourth branch. The fifth branch is not represented in this litigation. Defendants Nos. 8 to 12 are alienees from defendants Nos. 3 to 7. The plaintiffs purchased the suit properties from defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The plaintiffs' case is that the family was divided and that, as the purchasers from defendants Nos. 1 and 2, they are entitled to the sole possession of the properties in the suit. They also set up the alternative plea that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had acquired title by prescription to the properties.

The defence is that the members of the family are undivided and that the plaintiffs are not entitled to more than a fifth share in the properties conveyed to them. The Subordinate Judge held that as the plaintiffs' vendors were in exclusive and hostile possession of the suit properties for more than 12 years, they were competent to convey them to the plaintiffs He also expressed the opinion that the five branches had become divided in status; though the properties were not divided by metes and bounds. The appeal was argued on the supposition that the finding as to division by status was correct without deciding the point.

(1) 21 B, 325; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 220,

(2) (1912) A. C. 230, 81 L. J. P, C. 151; 105 L. T. 836,

The point for decision is whether the possession of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 of a portion of the family properties was adverse to the other members of the family. In my opinion, the decision of the Subordinate Judge is wrong. I shall shortly trace the history of the legislation regarding adverse possession by co tenants in England and in India before dealing with the decided cases. In England before the enactment of 3 and 4 William IV, Ch. 27 the law as to possession by co-tenants was this (vide the First Report of the Common Law Commissioners made in the year 1851 as to forms of action relating to ejectment). "In cases where by reason of the rule plaintiff and defendant being tenants-in-common, joint tenants or co-parceners an actual ouster must be established in order to found an action of trespass, the rule is modified by requiring the substituted defendant to admit fictitious ouster only in case an actual ouster of the lessor of the plaintiff is proved." Then came the Statute 3 and 4 William IV, Ch. 27. Section 12 ran thus:—"That when any one or more of several persons entitled to any land or rent as co-parceners, joint tenants or tenants in common shall have been in possession or receipt of the entirety or more than his or their undivided share or shares of such land or of the profits thereof, or of such rent, for his or their own benefit, or for the benefit of any person or persons other than the person or persons entitled to the other share or shares of the same land or rent, such possession or receipt shall not be deemed to have been the possession or receipt of or by such last mentioned person or persons or any of them." This section was apparently enacted to negative the presumption that possession by one of co-tenant is possession on behalf of all them. As was pointed out in Holmes v. Newlands (3) and Culley v. Doe (4), before the Statute of William IV, there was no adverse possession in such cases. The bare receipt of all rents and profits by a tenant-in-common was not adverse to his co-tenants. Reading v. Rawsterne (5) and Fairclaim v. Shackleton (6). In Peaceable v. Read (7) it was held that where one tenant-in-common levied a fine and received all the rents for more than five years afterwards without any entry or claim made to avoid the fine, no actual ouster of his co-tenant could be presumed. After the passing of the Statute, as has been pointed out in 19 Halsbury, paragraph 247: "the possession of the joint tenants, tenants in-common and co-parceners is separate and is not the possession of the other joint tenants." It was held in Thornton v. France (8) that if a person entitled to an undivided share in the land is in exclusive possession of the whole land or any part of it, the title of his co owner to his undivided share would be extinguished by such possession. In Glyn v. Howell (9), Eve, J., says: "Mr. Upjohn is right when he says the decisions have proceeded upon two lines, the one being those cases where the possession of the part has been treated as possession of the whole, because the Court has found, either by contract or according to conscience, that possession of the whole is what the person possessed of the part was intended to have, and the other being those cases in which the Court, finding no just reason for inferring, in favour of a person relying solely on possession of a part, a constructive possession of the whole, has refused to make such inference." This is the state of the law under 3 and 4 William IV. Now we have to see how the law stands in India Under Act

XIV of 1859, section 1, clause 13 enacted the general rule that suits to enforce the right to share in any property, moveable or immoveable, on the ground that it is the joint family property must be brought within 12 years from the death of the person from whom the property alleged to be joint is said to have descended or from the date of the last payment to the plaintiff or any person through whom he claims, by the person in the possession or management of such property or estate on account of such alleged share. The Limitation Acts of 1871 and of 1877, although they fixed the starting point of limitation from demand and refusal in the one case and from exclusion in the other, introduced no substantial changes in the first column of the Schedule.

Two things are clear from the history of the Indian Limitation Acts. One is that no distinction is made between moveable and immoveable property as in the cases of 3 and 4 William IV. Secondly, there is no special provision regarding the hostile possession of tenants-in-common. The reason is not far to seek. In India coparcenary and joint enjoyment are normal: whereas in England they are exceptions. The Legislature apparently considered that it would be dangerous to introduce the principle enunciated in 3 and 4 William IV into this country, where managers and other members of the family are ordinarily in enjoyment of either the whole or portions of the property exclusively to avoid the disruption of the family ties and the partition of family properties.

I am of opinion that the decisions passed on section 1, clause 13, of the Act XIV of 1859 govern Article 127 in the later Acts. Under the Act of 1859 it was held in Runjeet Singh v. Kooer Gujraj Singh (10) that if one of the members of the family was in possession of only a portion of the property to the exclusion of the others, the presumption will be that the possession was for and on behalf of the other members of the family. This is what their Lordships say:—"Their Lordships entertaining the view which they have expressed, there was no partition, but that the plaintiffs took the sir land as equivalent to a payment in respect of their shares by the defendant, are of opinion that the proceeds of those sir lands have been substantially payments by the defendant within the meaning of that section, payments which have continued to the time of action brought, and that, therefore, the Statute of Limitation does not apply." In Sakho Narayan Khandalkar v. Narayan Bhikaji Khandalkar (11), the learned Judges say at page 241: "But in the class of cases similar to the one before us, where both parties are in possession of portions, we should require a definite finding as to whether there had or had not been partition between the parties. In this particular case we have a clear finding that no partition was made, and that each party is in possession of a portion of the entire estate, either by mutual agreement or accidental circumstances. In this view of the matter we consider the suit not barred." In Udayarpalayam case (12), which related to the Udayarpalayam Zemindari, it was pointed out "that although one member of the family was in sole possession of the estate the receipt of maintenance by the other member and his enjoyment of portions of property allotted to him for maintenance would be regarded as participation in the family income." In Sri Raja Lakhshmi Devi Garu v. Sri Raja Surya Narayana Dhatrazu Bahadur Garu (13) which related to the Belgaum Zemindari one member of the family, believing the estate to be impartible, was in sole possession of the major portion of the Zemindari. The others were given a few villages for their maintenance. After the death of the last Zemindar the question was whether the other members, who were enjoying the villages for maintenance, were not barred by limitation. On behalf of the widow the plea of limitation was raised on the ground that the other members notwithstanding their possession of portions of property were excluded from the Zemindari. Both the High Court and the Judicial Committee overruled this contention. They held that so long as there was no total exclusion of the claimants there can be no adverse possession in favour of persons holding portions of the property. As against these decisions we were referred to Vishnu Ramchandra v. Ganesh Appaji Chaudhuri (1), in which it was held that the possession of a part of the property exclusively by a member of the joint family would be hostile to the other members of the family. I am unable to agree with this decision. It is inconsistent with the decisions I have quoted and with the judgment of Lord Macnaghten in Corea v. Appuhamy (2), where it was pointed—"Before the Act 3 and 4 William IV was passed it was a settled rule of law that the possession of anyone of such persons was the possession of the other or others of the co proprietors. It was not disputed at the Bar that such is now the law in Ceylon." I may add that this is the law in India as well. Having regard to the decisions I have referred to and to the observations of Lord Macnaghten, it seems to me that the decision in Vishnu Ramchandra v. Ganesh Appaji Chaudhuri (1) is not right. There is only one other decision to which I shall refer and that is the decision in Lakshman Dada Naik v. Ramchandra Dada Naik (14). That was a case in which the co parcener wanted to establish his rights to his own share as well as to a moiety of his father's interest to which he became entitled on the death of his father. It was held that section 1, clause 13 of the Act of 1859 applied to such a case. As regards the plea of limitation the Judicial Committee says at page 59:—"Now, so far as the immoveable property of the family is concerned, there seems to be no ground for the application of the Statute. Not only has the respondent all along been in the enjoyment of part of that property, viz., the house at Shahpur but...is also entitled to exclude from the computation the period of limitation during which he had prosecuted the suit." This decision is authority for the proposition that possession of part of the property would save limitation, as regards the rest of the property. In the present case it is not denied that defendants Nos. 3 to 12 have been in possession of portions of the joint family property.

It was contended for the respondent that the expression "joint family property" in Article 127 does not apply to the case of persons who have become divided in status. Granting this contention is well founded, as to which I express no opinion, the cases referred to by me establish that even if Article 144 applied to the case, the possession of the plaintiffs' vendor would not be adverse to the other defendants. In any view, therefore, the decision of the Court below is wrong and his decree must be reversed.

The plaintiffs as purchasers of the share of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are entitled to a two-fifth share in the suit properties by partition and to the mesne profits on that share from the date mentioned in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge: plaintiffs are entitled to the damages awarded by the lower Court, on the security of the B Schedule properties as provided in the judgment of the lower Court. Plaintiffs are entitled to the costs from defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who in their turn will get all their costs from defendants Nos. 3 to 7 and 9 to 12 personally and from the security of the B Schedule properties and must pay defendants Nos. 3 to 7 and 9 to 12 their costs in both the Courts. Plaintiffs are also entitled to interest on Rs. 7,500 from 26th March 1912 up to date of payment.

SHEO BARAT SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

PADARATH MAHTON AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage, usufructuary—Landlord and tenant, relationship of, whether created—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 76—Mortgagee, power of, to grant leases—Tenant, position of—Redemption—Suit for ejectment of tenant—Limitation, commencement of—Bengal Tenancy Act VIII B. C. of 1885), Sch. III, Art. 1 (a).

SHEO BARAT SINGH v. PADARATH MAHTON.

In 1893 the plaintiffs mortgaged the zemindari interest in certain lands to defendants Nos. 1 to 5. The mortgage was in form a usufructuary mortgage. In 1913 the mortgagors redeemed the mortgage, but during the currency of the mortgage the mortgagees had let the land to defendants Nos. 6 and 7. The plaintiffs brought the present suit for a declaration that they were entitled to the land as their khudkasht land, and contended that defendants Nos. 1 to 5 had no right or title to settle the land with defendants Nos 6 and 7, who had not acquired occupancy rights in respect of the property and that in fact they were trespassers thereon. In appeal to the High Court the first contention put forward was that the ijara zarpeshgi mortgage did not create as between the mortgagors and mortgagees the relationship of landlord and tenant so as to make the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 tenants of the plaintiff in the ordinary legal acceptation of the term:

Held, that the mortgage-deed in suit did not create the relationship of landlord and tenant between the mortgagors and mortgagees: the character of the deed was not a lease but a mortgage. [p. 475, cols. 1 & 2.]

It was next contended that the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 were mortgagees only and had not the power or right to create an interest affecting the mortgaged premises of longer duration than their own interest in the same:

Held, that the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 were mortgagees in possession under a usufructuary mortgage of the zemindari right pledged as security for the mortgage-debt, and that they had the power in law to induct a tenant into the tenanted land subject to such mortgage when the whole or part of such tenanted land became unlet or vacant and without a tenant, and that such tenant when inducted by the mortgagees acquired non-occupancy rights in the tenanted land subject to such mortgage as aforesaid; [p. 477, col. 1.]

Held, further, that the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation under Article 1, clause (a) of Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act. The obligation in law upon the plaintiffs, if he desired to dispossess defendants Nos. 6 and 7, was to bring a suit in ejectment to eject them within six months after the expiration of the mortgage, or after the mortgage had been redeemed. [p. 477, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Gaya, dated the 14th June 1917.

Mr. Shib Narayan Bose, for the Appellant.

Mr. Rai Guru Saran Prosad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal comes before me from the decision of the District Judge of Gaya, dated the 14th June 1917.

The plaintiffs seek a declaration that they are entitled to the lands in suit as their khudkasht lands; and they claim that the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 had no right or title to settle the same with defendants Nos. 6 and 7; and they also allege that defendants Nos. 6 and 7 have not acquired occupancy rights in respect of the property in suit, and that in fact they are trespassers thereon.

The plaintiffs on partition became entitled to a 7 dams odd share in Mouza Dihuri Hasanpur situated in the District of Gaya. The interest which the plaintiffs acquired on partition in the aforesaid Mouza was the proprietary or Zemindari right therein, and the share of the plaintiffs is represented by two bighas 18 kathas and 17 dhurs of land.

The plaintiffs in the year 1893 mortgaged the Zemindari interest in the lands in suit to defendants Nos. 1—5 to secure a sum of Rs. 450. The mortgage was in form a usufructuary mortgage; and the mortgage-deed provided that the mortgagees were to be in possession of the mortgaged premises for a period of seven years; that they were to discharge the outgoings and to pay whatever balance was left over out of the yearly rent reserved by the deed itself to the mortgagors. What was in fact mortgaged was the proprietary interest of the plaintiffs in Mouza Dihuri Hasanpur which, as I have said, comprised of two bighas 18 kathas and 17 dhurs of land. The usufructuary mortgage-deed clearly reserved power to the mortgagors to redeem the mortgaged premises by paying up the amount of the mortgage-debt even after the term of the mortgage itself had expired. The mortgage would have expired in the year 1900, but in fact the mortgagor did not exercise the right of redemption until the 18th June 1913. Consequently from the year 1893 down to June 1913 the mortgagees have been in possession of the Zemindari interest in the lands in suit as usufructuary mortgagees.

The mortgage was redeemed not by a redemption suit but by mutual agreement between the parties. During the currency of the mortgage the mortgagees let the two odd bighas of land above referred to, the Zemindari right in which was the security for the amount of the mortgage money advanced, to the defendants Nos. 6 and 7. The precise date when the letting was made to the defendants Nos. 6 and 7 has not been ascertained; but it would appear from the judgments of the two lower Courts that the defendants Nos. 6 and 7 have been in possession of the lands in suit for a very considerable time.

SHEO BARAT SINGH v. PADARATH MAHTON.

These are the short facts of the case and it is necessary to consider the legal points involved in the light of the legal arguments which have been addressed to me.

As I have already pointed out the plaintiff claimed that the lands in suit were his khudkasht lands. Both the lower Courts concur in a finding of fact that the lands in suit were not the khudkasht or bakasht lands of the plaintiff. Consequently when the mortgage was executed in the year 1893, the inference must be that the lands in suit were then raiyati lands, and that the mortgagees merely secured the proprietary or Zemindari interest in the lands as security for their mortgage-debt.

I gather that subsequent to the creation of the mortgage the raiyati interest, which had been in existence in respect of the 2 bighas odd when the mortgage deed was executed, lapsed or expired, for some reason which does not definitely and precisely appear. It may be that the original raiyat of this small miserable holding of two bighas 18 kathas and 17 dhurs abandoned his interest therein, and that thereupon the lands became unoccupied as raiyati lands for the time being; and that the defendants Nos. 1 - 5 as mortgagees of the Zemindari interest inducted the defendants Nos. 6 and 7 upon these lands and since which time the defendants Nos. 6 and 7 have been in possession thereof. Now these defendants Nos. 6 and 7, by virtue of the letting made to them by the defendants Nos. 1 to 5, claim to have acquired, if not occupancy rights, at least non-occupancy right in the lands in suit.

The first contention put forward is that the ijara zarpeshgi mortgage deed did not create as between the mortgagors and the mortgagees the relationship of landlord and tenant; and that in effect it was nothing more than a simple usufructuary mortgage, and did not in law make the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 tenants of the plaintiff in the ordinary legal acceptation of the term.

The learned District Judge in appeal held that the usufructuary mortgage bond had in law the effect of creating the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 tenants of the lands in dispute to the plaintiffs.

In my opinion the learned District Judge was clearly wrong in point of law in arriving at this conclusion, having regard to the decision of this Court in a case reported as Raj Kumar Thakur Ranjit Narayon Singh v. Motilal Marwari (1), and in addition there are numerous other authorities to show that a deed of the character of the deed in this case is not a lease but a mortgage; vide Nidha Sah v. Murli Dhar (2).

In argument before me the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the respondents admits that the decision of the learned Appellate Court that the usufructuary mortgage-bond referred to in this suit did in law create a letting as between landlord and tenant in the ordinary acceptation of the term is wrong and cannot be supported.

The plaintiff-appellant contends that the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 were mortgagees only, and that they as mortgagees had not the power or right to create an interest affecting the mortgaged premises of longer duration than their own interest in the same. That being limited owners in effect they could not create a burden or interest affecting the Zamindari right which would ensure as against the mortgagor after redemption.

This argument at first seemed well founded, but on a closer examination it appears to me to be without foundation. A mortgagee in possession of the property of the mortgagor has clearly defined rights and duties to discharge relative to the mortgaged property pledged as security for the mortgage-debt. These rights and obligations are embodied in sections 72 to 76 of the Transfer of Property Act; and one of the obligations imposed upon a mortgagee in possession is that he shall manage the mortgaged property in a prudent way such as an ordinary man would manage his own business.

It appears to me reasonable and rational that if a mortgagee while in possession lets a portion of the mortgaged premises which has become vacant or untenanted during the currency of the mortgage security that then clearly it is the mortgagee's duty either to occupy the land himself and cultivate it to the best advantage or in the alternative as a prudent business man to let such land to a solvent tenant. The law precludes the possibility of the mortgagee allowing the land to remain fallow, and if the mortgagee did allow the land to remain in a wasteful and unprofitable condition so as to be wholly unproductive the law would impose upon the mortgagee liability for gross mismanagement and default.

Therefore, the position in this case is this that the mortgagees of the Zemindari right and interest in exercise of their statutory duty and obligation created a tenancy or a letting of the lands which formed the subject-matter of their mortgage security to the defendants Nos. 6 and 7.

The question that remains to be considered is what right did the defendants Nos. 6 and 7 acquire in respect of the letting, which was clearly made to them by the action of the mortgagees in possession of the Zemindari interest in the mortgaged property.

The case reported as Atal Chandra Rishi v. Lakhi Narain Ghose (3) seems to me to indicate very clearly that the tenant to whom the letting was made by the mortgagees was at least a non-occupancy raiyat within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Mr. Justice Mookerji deals with this aspect of the case at page 56* of the report, and at page 57* he says: "The possession of the fourth defendant, therefore, in its inception was lawful and as he became a raiyat he acquired the rights of at least a non-occupancy raiyat."

The well-known case which is a Full Bench ruling of the Calcutta High Court reported as Binad Lal v. Kalu Pramanik (4) seems to me in its reasoning to apply with considerable force to the facts of this case. In the case immediately referred to it was laid down that a trespasser, who believing himself to be the de facto landlord of certain premises, inducted a tenant thereon and who made a letting of a certain portion of the premises in the alleged landlord's possession and whom the tenant believed to be the de facto landlord, created qua the tenant a tenancy in the lands so let of a non occupancy character.

This Full Bench ruling referred to has been considered in subsequent cases, but it has never been dissented from though the principle underlying it has been made plainer and clearer by subsequent decisions. Reading the Full Bench ruling with the later authorities reported as Upendra Narain Bhattacharya v. Protab Chandra Pardhan (5), Krishna Nath Chakravarti v. Muhammad Wafiz (6) the sum and substance of these authorities amount to this that where a man believes himself bona fide to be landlord of certain premises, though in law he is not so, and he makes a letting to a person who believes bona fide that such person is the landlord and has power to make such letting that then the interest created by virtue of such letting creates a non-occupancy raiyat interest in favour of the person to whom the letting is made.

The only answer urged in reply to this argument is the definition of a raiyat contained in section 5, sub-section 3 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Sub-section 3 provides that a person shall not be deemed to be a raiyat unless he holds lands either immediately under a proprietor or immediately under a tenure-holder, and the argument is that as a mortgagee is neither a proprietor nor a tenure-holder, that, therefore, the person to whom a mortgagee lets lands cannot be said to be raiyat.

Section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is relied upon for the purpose of showing that that Act contemplates a distinction between a proprietor and a mortgagee.

I cannot agree with this argument. It seems to me to be against the entire current of all modern authority; and if it were open to me to hold I would hold, that a usufructuary mortgagee of the proprietary interest in landed property is qua the occupying tenants on the estate in the position pro tem. of a proprietor; because the whole legal estate of the proprietor is for the time being during the currency of the mortgage vested in the mortgagee as such and all that the true owner of the estate has is a right in equity to redeem the property, when he himself conceives that he is able to discharge the obligation of paying the mortgage debt.

*Pages of 10 C. L. J.—Ed.

Therefore, I hold that in point of law the learned Judge was wrong in deciding that the defendants Nos. 1—5 were tenants of the plaintiffs. But I hold that they were mortgagees in possession under a usufructuary mortgage of the Zemindari right pledged as security for the mortgage debt and that they had power in law to induct a tenant into the tenanted land subject to such mortgage when the whole or part of such tenanted land became unlet or vacant and without a tenant, and that such tenant when inducted by the mortgagees acquired non-occupancy rights in the tenanted land subject to such mortgage as aforesaid.

The question remains to be considered whether the plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation. If I am right in holding that the defendants Nos. 6 and 7 have acquired non-occupancy rights in the lands in suit, then I think it is reasonably clear, having regard to the Full Bench ruling of this Court reported as Janki Singh v. Mahant Jagannath Das (7), that the plaintiff's rights are barred and that this suit is not maintainable, under Schedule III, Article 1, clause (a). If the defendants Nos. 6 and 7 are non-occupancy raiyats, then the obligation in law is upon the plaintiff, if he desires to dispossess the defendants, to bring a suit in ejectment to eject the defendants Nos. 6 and 7 within six months after the expiration of the mortgage or after the mortgage had been redeemed. This the plaintiffs did not do inasmuch as they only brought this suit $2\frac{1}{2}$ years after the mortgage itself was redeemed. The mortgage having been redeemed on the 18th June 1913, the present suit was instituted on the 11th November 1915.

Clearly, in my opinion, having regard to the Full Bench of this Court this suit was barred. The lower Appellate Court found that the plaintiff's claim was not barred by limitation, but the Court failed to consider the question of limitation in the light of the Full Bench ruling of this Court.

Accordingly I hold that the plaintiff's suit ought to have been dismissed and that this second appeal is unsustainable in point of law and must be dismissed with costs and the plaintiff's suit in all Courts dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

If a promissory note executed outside British India is valid according to the law of the place where it was executed, it can ordinarily be sued upon in India and is admissible in a British Indian Court without affixing any Indian stamp on it. If any stamp is necessary, it is sufficient if, at the time of the decree, an Indian stamp is affixed to it. [p. 478, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Malabar at Calicut, in Small Cause Suit No. 317 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. V. Mahadeva Ayyar and G. R. Sivaramakrishna Ayyar, for the Petitioner.—The decisions in Simulu Ebrahim Rowthan v. Abdul Rahiman Mahomed (1) and Mahomed Rowthan v. Mahomed Husin Rowthan (2) only lay down that it is not necessary before suit to affix a British stamp on documents executed outside British India unless it be for purposes of acceptance, payment, endorsement, transfer or negotiation. Filing a suit does not come under any of these categories. It is not shown that, under the law prevailing in Mecca, the promissory note could have been sued on without a stamp on it.

Mr. K. P. Kesava Menon, for the Respondents.—No Indian stamp is necessary to be affixed before filing the suit. Simulu Ebrahim Rowthan v. Abdul Rahiman Mahomed (1) and Mahomed Rowthan v. Mahomed Husin Rowthan (2). The limitations in the decisions do not apply to the filing of suits. The only condition is that the document was legally enforceable in the place where it was executed.

JUDGMENT.—The suit is based upon the promissory-notes executed at Mecca in favour of the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge has held that they are inadmissible in evidence. He has not referred to any authorities in support of his possession. Apparently what he had in mind was section 19 of the Stamp Act. It was pointed out in Simulu Ebrahim Rowthan v. Abdul Rahiman Mahomed (1) and Mohamad Rowthan v. Mohamed Husin Rowthan (2) that it is not necessary before suit to affix a British stamp on documents executed outside British India unless it be for the purposes of acceptance, payment, endorsement, transfer or negotiation. It is argued for the respondents that filing a suit comes under one of these categories. I am unable to agree with this suggestion. If a document is valid according to the law of the place where it was executed, it can ordinarily be sued upon in India without affixing any Indian stamp on the document. Probably the suggestion of Shephard, J., in Simulu Ebrahim Rowthan v. Abdul Rahiman Mahomed (1) may be accepted, namely, that if any stamp is necessary it would be sufficient if at the time of the decree an Indian stamp was affixed to the document. I am not sure whether, under the law prevailing in Mecca, a promissory note like this without any stamp on it could have been sued upon.

But the position taken up by the Subordinate Judge is certainly untenable. It is opposed to the decisions I have referred to. I must, therefore, reverse his decision and remand the suit for disposal in the light of the above observations. Costs hitherto incurred will follow the event.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 886), s 67 (2)—"Settlement", meaning of—U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 57—Settlement records, correctness of—Presumption—Sir, plot recorded as, effect of.

The phrase "settlement" in clause 2 of section 67 of the Oudh Rent Act refers to the last settlement prior to the passing of that Act.

Section 57 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act authorises the presumption that the latest settlement and current records are true. Where in the settlement records a plot of land is recorded as sir, it must be assumed that the record was made after proper inquiry that the plot had become arable and had been in the personal cultivation of the proprietor for seven years prior to the passing of the Land Revenue Act.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Lucknow Division, dated the 8th October 1918, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—I am unable to accept the ingenious argument of appellant's Counsel that the Commissioner has misconstrued the law. There is no doubt that 'settlement' in clause 2 of section 77, an original section of the Oudh Rent Act, 1886, refers to the last settlement prior to the passing of that Act This is quite clear if we turn to the proviso which follows section 13 (b) of the Land Revenue Act of 1901. As the plot in suit was recorded grove without the addition of sir in the 1864 settlement, i.e., the last settlement preceding the Oudh Rent Act, it is quite true that the plot does not come under section 67 (1) (a), Oudh Rent Act, or section 13 (a), Land Revenue Act. But the Commissioner never said it did. We find it recorded in the 1900 settlement as sir, no longer as grove but as arable land. The Commissioner's argument amplified is that as it had become arable in 1900, it had probably become arable some time before, probably 7 years before the passing of the Oudh Rent Act in 1886 and was sir under section 13 (b), Land Revenue Act, 1901, which is a reproduction of section 67 (b), Oudh Rent Act, 1886. At this length of time it is impossible to ascertain exactly what the case was in 1879-1886, but under section 57, Land Revenue Act, to which the Commissioner rightly refers, we have to presume that our later settlement and current records are true. The current and 1900 settlement records show the land as sir and we are warranted in assuming that proper enquiry was made at the 1900 settlement and that it was found that the plot had become arable and been in the personal cultivation of the proprietor from 1879-1886. The 1900 Settlement Officer, therefore, recorded it as sir as defined in section 4 (13) (b), Land Revenue Act The appellant has not shown that the Settlement Officer was wrong and that plot was not arable, in the personal cultivation of the proprieter between 1879 and 1886. I agree, therefore, in not going behind the entry.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 33—Court, duty of, to prepare decree—Failure to prepare decree, effect of—Appeal, right of, whether affected.

Although under section 33 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is imperative that a decrée should follow the judgment and it is the duty of the Court to have one drawn up, yet an omission or neglect by the Court in the performance of its duties in this respect cannot deprive an appellant of his right of appeal.

First appeal from the order of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 22nd January 1914.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, Mr. Abdul Rashid and Dewan Mehr Chand, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain and Mr. Tirath Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff sued the defendant in respect of four different properties. The District Judge held that four distinct causes of action had been combined in one suit, that they should be separately stamped and valued, and that in respect of the claim under appeal, permission for its combination with the other causes of action should be refused. The plaintiff accordingly has instituted a separate suit regarding the other causes of action and the objection regarding misjoinder in the present case has disappeared. In the same case the District Judge also held that the claim must fail on account of the want of the sanction of the Collector under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, and dismissed the suit with costs with liberty to bring a fresh suit, but no decree was drawn up. It is against the latter part of the District Judge's judgment that an appeal has been preferred.

A preliminary objection has been raised by the respondent that no appeal lies merely against the judgment and that Order XLI, rule 1, requiring the memorandum of appeal to be accompanied by a copy of the decree has not been complied with. Further, Counsel for the respondent argues that even if a decree should have been drawn up, it was the duty of the appellant to move the Court for this purpose. Against this, Counsel for the appellant argues that, under section 33 of the Civil Procedure Code, it is imperative that a decree shall follow the judgment and that it is the duty of the Court to comply with the provisions of the law. We agree that a decree should have followed the judgment and that it was the duty of the Court to have had it drawn up, and we do not think that such an omission or neglect of its duties can deprive the appellant of his right of appeal. We, therefore, overrule this objection and allow the appellant to apply to the lower Court within one month for the drawing up of a formal decree, to be attached to the memorandum of appeal as soon as it is obtained.

We think, however, the appellant somewhat to blame in preferring this appeal without a copy of the decree, and for this hearing grant costs to the respondent.

Order accordingly.

Presumption, when arises—Corroboration, whether necessary.

Where the law provides that a presumption arises under certain circumstances, that presumption must arise independently of whether there is any corroboration or not.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 4th August 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 4th Court at Netrakona, dated the 23rd September 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Birendra Kumar De, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The suit out of which the appeal arises was for a declaration of plaintiff's brahmottar right and khas possession on the ground that the defendant was the purchaser of a non-transferable occupancy holding and as such was liable to eviction. Plaintiff purchased the brahmottar right from one Tarakanta, whose father got the same from the grandfather of one Ramgati, who had the taluki right. Ramgati sold his right in the taluk to one Raj Chandra. The tenant on the land was Bhagirath, who was the ryot of the non-transferable occupancy holding and had sold the same to the present defendant. The first Court decreed the suit. The Appellate Court dismissed it on the ground that no presumption can arise unless the Record of Rights is corroborated and that neither the plaintiff nor his vendor had ever been in possession within 12 years My submission is that Bhagirath's possession amounts to the possession of the plaintiff landlord. The question of limitation, therefore, does not arise. The first question is as to plaintiff's title. The learned Judge ought not to have lightly discarded the entry in the Record of Rights. He had decided the case entirely on an erroneous view of the law. The Record of Rights unless rebutted would be presumed to be correct.

Babu Jatindra Mohan Chowdhury, for the Respondents, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff brought the suit out of which this appeal arises for declaration of his debutter title to and for khas possession of certain land. His claim was principally based on an entry in the Record of Rights. The first Court held that the presumption arising from that entry had not been rebutted and decreed the suit. The lower Appellate Court on appeal by the defendants held in effect that the presumption had been rebutted and dismissed the suit. The arguments in this appeal are based on an unfortunate remark in the judgment of the Additional Judge. He says "I consider that the Record of Rights requires good corroboration before any presumption can be said to arise therefrom." That is not a correct statement of law. If the law provides that the presumption arises under certain circumstances, that presumption must arise independently of whether there is any corroboration or not. But reading the judgment as a whole, it is clear that the learned Judge considered the Record of Rights as a piece of evidence and considered the rebutting evidence and held on consideration of the whole that the plaintiff had failed to prove his case. The case solely depends on the amount of weight to be attached to the rebutting evidence in the case and I cannot say that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in law in holding that inspite of the entry in the Record of Rights in the plaintiff's favour his case would fail.

It is further argued that the finding of the lower Appellate Court on the question of limitation is wrong since the possession of the tenant, Bhagirath, must be held to be the possession of his landlord, the plaintiff, but unless we rely on the Record of Rights, it has not been proved that Bhagirath was the plaintiff's tenant. In fact this point really depends on the same consideration as the first point, that is, whether the presumption arising from the Record of Rights has or has not been rebutted.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 235 239—Joinder of charges—Preparation of false balance-sheets on two different occasions, whether same transaction.

Accused, who were the Agents, Secretaries and Treasurers of a Company, were convicted upon charges of (1) cheating and criminal misappropriation in relation to the balance-sheet of the Company for 1912, inasmuch as in that sheet a profit was shown, which they had taken, whereas the Company had not earned a profit, and (2) wilfully making a false balance-sheet of the Company for 1913. The accused were tried jointly on five charges, four of which related to the balance-sheet of 1912 and one to the balance-sheet of 1913. In the trial Court it was objected on behalf of the accused that there could not be a joint trial of the charges relating to the two balance-sheets, but the objection was disallowed on the ground that the offences relating to these balance-sheets formed part of the same transaction On appeal to the High Court:

Held, that the trial was illegal and the convictions could not be maintained. The different acts attributed to the accused in respect of the two balance-sheets did not form part of the same transaction within the meaning of sections 235 and 239 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the joinder of the charges was contrary to the provisions of the Code. JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—This is an appeal by two persons who were convicted by the First Class Magistrate of Poona. It was transferred by this Court for hearing from the Court of the Sessions Judge of Poona to this Court.

The case relates to a Company which for brevity's sake is called the Poona Mill. It had been working as a mill from about the year 1894 with not very fortunate results, though it survived until 1915, in which year the Company went into liquidation and has since been wound up. The accused were for a good many years the Agents, Secretaries and Treasurers of the Company, and it is in relation to the balance-sheets for the years 1912 and 1913 that criminal accusations have been made against them. I need not go into details further than this: the charges in relation to the balance-sheet for 1912 were based on the allegation that in that year the mill had not by its working earned a profit, but that a profit was shown in the balance-sheet and that in so doing and in taking the profit declared, the accused, who, it is said, were really responsible for the preparation of the balance-sheet, committed the offences of cheating and criminal misappropriation. When the balance-sheet for 1913 took its final shape which was not until June 1914, the new Companies Act had come into operation, and under that Act in virtue of section 282 it is a criminal offence to wilfully make a false statement in a balance-sheet. No charge under this section was possible in relation to the balance-sheet for 1912, but this was the charge made in regard to the balance-sheet for 1913. The trial and the appeal had a somewhat unfortunate course. At the trial itself a very large mass of evidence was recorded and a large number of details were minutely inquired into. The Magistrate has dealt with this mass of evidence and with these details in a lucid way, but it does seem to us that much of the evidence and many of the details might have been spared had there been a more painstaking and intelligent inquiry into the affair before it was brought into the Magistrate's Court. As the result of the trial before the Magistrate which, considering the mass of evidence he had to deal with, was not unduly prolonged, the accused were convicted of all the charges. After the appeal was transferred to this Court there was a most unfortunate delay due to the preparation of translations of the many papers. We are not concerned with the cause of that delay at the moment. But it has attracted our notice and I certainly do profoundly regret that such a delay should have occurred in the disposal of a criminal appeal in this Court.

When charges were framed in the Magistrate's Court, exception was taken to them on behalf of the accused. It was urged that there could not be a joint trial of the charges relating to the balance-sheet of 1912 with the charge relating to the balance sheet of 1913. It was argued for the prosecution, as we think most mistakenly, that the joint trial could proceed, because the offences relating to these balance-sheets could be regarded as parts of the same transaction. We think not, and the result is that the trial is illegal and the conviction cannot be upheld.

Before saying why we think this, I must remark that I think where prosecutions of this kind are conducted, where you are dealing with complicated and extensive matters, it is most important that the prosecution should not urge the joint trial of matters as to the joint trial of which there could be any doubt. It does not in the long run save time or trouble. And where there are several matters in contest, if the prosecution will select that on which they have the best case, they will undoubtedly to my thinking in the long run save time and further the ends of justice. Now here there were jointly tried matters relating to two totally distinct affairs, one being the balance sheet for the year 1912, the other the balance sheet for the year 1913. It is said that both of them were prepared in pursuance of a policy of deception, that the Company was really insolvent as early as the year 1910 and that the subsequent balance-sheets were prepared falsely with the deliberate purpose of concealing this practical insolvency; and it is said that because this was so, the preparation of these two balance-sheets for successive years was in reality but one transaction. The word 'transaction' used in the Criminal Procedure Code is not defined. Its meaning has frequently been illustrated by cases which are in the books, but in the long run we have to deal with every case that arises on its own facts. Knowing the general idea of the words 'the same transaction', we have to determine whether these words do or do not apply to the particular facts of a particular case. Here it seems to me that to apply the words 'the same transaction' to these two separate proceedings is to confuse the meaning of those words with the idea of things that are done in pursuance of a conspiracy. From the prosecution point of view it is perfectly correct to say that both these balance-sheets were prepared in pursuance of a conspiracy. One only has to think over the matter, a little carefully, however, to see that this idea of a conspiracy covers a very great deal that cannot be included in the idea of 'the same transaction.' If we were to take those words as covering a case of this kind, it would lead us to treat the same acts of misconduct or fraud, however often repeated, as constituting the same transaction, if there was the same general purpose underlying the repeated acts. But something far more definite than that is required, before separate proceedings can be brought within the meaning of the words 'the same transaction'. I cannot, I confess, think of any way of describing the preparation of these two balance sheets so as to bring them within the true idea underlying the words 'the same transaction.' I regard the preparation of these two balance-sheets as entirely separated occurrences. The balance-sheet for the year 1912 was prepared from the accounts of that year. It related to the affairs of that year and had for its purpose the presentment, truly or falsely, of the condition of the Company as the Agents wished it to appear in that year. Similarly with the balance sheet of 1913. The two affairs seem to me to be quite as distinct as where you have a band of dacoits co operating with the same general purpose of plunder, who commit several dacoities at different places and at different times. I never heard it suggested that occurrences of that kind should be regarded as forming parts of one transaction, though three of such cases might be tried together on other grounds. Therefore, it seems to me that the joinder of these charges was against the law, that, therefore, there has not been a proper trial and that the appellants must be acquitted and discharged.

We then have to consider what is to follow. For my part I think it better that the proceedings should end here and now, and that they should not be revived. I think so, amongst others, for these reasons.

It is now an old story. The Company has been wound up and has come to an end. The appellants have been subjected to a trial of considerable length and to a very long period of suspense between the trial and the hearing of the appeal, and they must have been put to very serious expense in connection with legal charges. That being so, it seems to me that it would be oppressive to have them tried over again unless this were a case of a very flagrant type.

As regards the charge for the year 1912, after hearing what has been said on behalf of the defence and giving close attention to the evidence, it seems to me doubtful whether the conviction would be sustained. When we came to ask the Advocate General, who appears for the prosecution, whether he would elect, if further proceedings were taken, to go on with that charge or with the one relating to the year 1913, he said that he would go on with the latter charge, that is for the year 1913. So what we are concerned with now is the broad general facts relating to that charge. It is a charge under section 282 of the new Companies Act, which makes the preparation of a false balance-sheet in itself an offence. Prior to the enactment of that section the preparation of a false balance-sheet in itself was not an offence. That is a matter which may very properly be taken into consideration.

Then the evidence, the judgment of the Magistrate and, as I understand it, the theory of the prosecution do not so much suggest that we are dealing with fraudulent persons who have cheated their Directors or their share-holders, as with persons who have, it may be, presented the balance sheet with much concealed that ought to have been displayed, but who have done this for the purpose of enabling the Company to survive as a working Company, to give it another chance of tiding over years of difficulty and eventually reaching years of security. And I think the case as a whole suggests that this really was so and that the object of the accused—the appellants—was not the enrichment of themselves, but the benefit and survival of the Company. Whether that be really the truth of the matter I cannot say, but it is a view of the case which presents itself very readily to the mind and which we are certainly justified in accepting as a working hypothesis for the time being.

Those being the conditions, then, I think that it would indeed be rather oppressive if we were to direct that further proceedings should go on. So I think we should express that opinion and that our order should be simply that the appellants be acquitted and discharged.

SHAH, J.—In view of the importance of the case I desire to state briefly the grounds upon which I agree with my learned brother.

The two appellants in this case were tried jointly on five charges by the First Class Magistrate of Poona; and after a prolonged trial, the learned Magistrate convicted them of all the offences charged and sentenced them to different terms of imprisonment.

The appellants preferred an appeal to the Court of Session at Poona, and that appeal has been transferred to this Court.

At the outset I desire to express my agreement with the remarks of my learned brother as to the delay that has occurred in the hearing of this appeal, though in a large measure it is attributable to the exceptionally heavy record, and to the circumstance that it is an appeal from the judgment of a First Class Magistrate in a warrant case and not an appeal from the judgment of a Sessions Court, as is usually the case.

After arguing the appeal on the merits as to the set of charges connected with the balance sheet of 1912, the Counsel for the appellants urged that the joinder of the charges in the present case was contrary to the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that the whole trial was illegal. We have heard the learned Advocate-General as to the joinder of the charges and the legality of the trial and as to the order to be made in the event of the trial being found to be illegal. The first four charges against the two appellants framed by the trial Court relate to the balance-sheet for the year 1912, and the point of the charges is that the profit of Rs 35,179 for the year 1912 is shown in that balance-sheet dishonestly with a view to induce the Directors to recommend and the share-holders to sanction the declaration of a dividend, when in fact there was no profit, and further that the two accused dishonestly received their respective dividends in connection with the shares held by them in this Company and the commission which would be due to them under the Articles of Association on the profits shown in that balance-sheet. That is the substance of the first four charges. It is not suggested that the joint trial of the accused in respect of these four charges would be open to any objection, if there were no further independent charge.

The further charge relates to the making of a false balance-sheet for the year 1913, which is an offence punishable under section 282 of the Indian Companies Act VII of 1913, the balance sheet having been submitted to the Directors and share-holders after the 1st April 1914 when the Act came into force. The joint trial of the two accused in respect of all these charges can be justified only if the acts attributed to the appellants can be reasonably held to form part of the same transaction. Under sections 235 and 239 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the charges that could be tried must arise out of acts committed in the same transaction or so connected together as to form the same transaction. I do not think that section 234 of the Code has any application to the facts of this case. The trial Court has allowed the joinder of charges against the accused in spite of the objection raised on their behalf and the question now is whether this joinder is legal.

In my opinion the acts attributed to the accused in respect of the balance-sheet of 1912 are quite distinct and separate from the acts attributed to them in respect of the balance-sheet of 1913, and according to no possible meaning of the word 'transaction,' can it be said that these acts form part of the same transaction. The acts are quite separated in point of time; there is, in my opinion, no continuity of action. The acts attributed to the accused in respect of the balance sheet of 1912 relate to the declaration of profits for the year in the balance-sheet, while the acts attributed to the accused in respect of the balance-sheet of 1913 relate to various items, detailed in the charge, which have practically no connection with the profits of the year 1912 and the declaration of the dividend and the charging of the commission in respect of that year. The inquiry relating to the question of profits in the year 1912 would be quite distinct and essentially different in its scope from the inquiry which would have to be made with reference to the acts attributed to the accused in respect of the balance-sheet of 1913. Lastly, it cannot be said that there was any object common to these two sets of acts. As to the first set of charges the accused are said to have shown the profits during the year 1912 falsely in order to earn their commission and the dividends on the shares. As to the other charge the object is said to be to conceal the true condition of the Company, in order to keep it going. Thus the objects are essentially different. The way in which the charge in respect of the balance sheet of 1913 has been explained by the learned Advocate-General with reference to the items of depreciation, reserve fund, and the unpaid dividend accounts illustrates to my mind clearly that the acts said to have been done with reference to the charge under section 282 of the Indian Companies Act are entirely distinct and have reference solely to the balance-sheet of 1913. It is true that the charge under section 282 of the Indian Companies Act as framed in the lower Court relates to many more items; and it may be that the general object of concealing the true condition of the Company was common to the preparation of the balance-sheets for various years, including the years 1912 and 1913. That in fact is the only ground upon which it is suggested that the several acts may be treated as constituting the same transaction. It is argued that during all the years of stress and difficulty the Agents of this Company tried to underestimate the losses and to overestimate the profits of the Company with a view to conceal the true state of the Company. Assuming that to be the general purpose underlying the preparation of these balance-sheets for many years, particularly the balance sheets for the years 1910 to 1913, I do not think that such a general purpose can afford any justification for treating the different acts attributed to the accused as forming part of the same transaction within the meaning of sections 235 and 239 of the Code. Thus the joinder of the charges is clearly contrary to the provisions of the Code: and it follows that the whole trial is illegal.

The question then arises as to whether we should order a re trial of the accused. I am clearly of opinion that in the interests of justice no re-trial is needed and that it would be proper to allow the proceedings to terminate at this stage.

The prosecution are to a certain extent responsible for the joint trial on all these charges. The original complaint contained allegations covering all the charges, and I do not find anything in the proceedings to show that the prosecution at any time attempted to make it clear to the trial Court that the joinder of charges could not well be justified. On the contrary the trial proceeded in spite of the objection raised by the defence. Further the trial in this case has been much prolonged and, as the voluminous, needlessly voluminous, record of the case shows, undoubtedly very expensive to both the parties. Besides the circumstances connected with the charge also suggest that there should be no further trial. The learned Advocate-General has pressed for a re trial in respect of the charge under section 282 of the Indian Companies Act relating to the balance-sheet of 1913 and as he explained the charge, no doubt, the re-trial would be much more limited in its scope than the trial which proceeded on the charge as framed in the lower Court. The charge under section 282 of the Indian Companies Act as framed in the trial Court necessitated an inquiry into the accounts of the Company ranging over a period from 1894 to 1913. It must be remembered that the acts attributed to the accused substantially relate to the year prior to the coming into force of the new Companies Act, and that the balance-sheet is to a certain extent the result of the accumulated errors of the past years arising out of a faulty method of keeping accounts and not the result of any dishonesty on the part of the accused. Treating the charge under section 282 of the Indian Companies Act as limited in the manner now suggested on behalf of the prosecution, I do not think that the interests of justice demand that there should be any further trial on that charge.

As regards the set of charges relating to the balance-sheet of 1912 the learned Advocate-General has fairly conceded that there need be no re-trial. I do not think that any useful purpose could be served by ordering any further proceedings in connection with those charges.

On these grounds I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

Accused acquitted.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 297, 298—Jury trial—Charge to Jury—Judge, duty of—Criminal trial—Defences, alternative, whether permissible.

In delivering a charge to a Jury care should be taken to place the defence set up fairly before the Jury and to ensure that the Jury appreciate the issue or issues which they have to try. The charge should include the usual warning as to the duty of the Jury to the prosecution on the one hand and to the prisoner on the other. [p. 486, col. 2.]

General rules as to the form a charge should take indicated. [p. 486, col. 2.]

Where the Jury was not made fully acquainted with the nature of the case for the prosecution and the nature of the case for the defence:

Held, that the mode in which the case was placed before the Jury was defective and that the convictions of the accused in accordance with the verdict of the Jury and the sentences passed upon them should be set aside and the case re-tried by another Judge. [p. 488, col. 1; p. 489, col. 1.]

It is not desirable that a Judge should resort to the services of the Public Prosecutor for the purpose of delivering his charge to the Jury. [p. 488, col. 2.]

It is open to an accused person to adopt a defence in the alternative, such as that he was not present at the occurrence and did not strike the complainant but that if he did strike him he acted in self-defence. [p. 488, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Faridpur, dated the 8th February 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri (with him Moulvi A. K. Fazlul Huq and Babu Atindra Nath Mukerjee), for the Appellants.—The whole case teems with misdirections. The case is a very complicated one, with disputes as regards possession of the lands in question. The learned Judge has dealt very summarily with the case in his charge to the Jury. Nobody can understand what the case is for the prosecution from his perusal of the charge. The charge must always be clear and lucid and place the case for the prosecution and the case for the defence clearly before the Jury to enable them to judge facts. The whole thing depends upon the question of possession of the lands on which the corn was grown and cut, but your Lordships will see from the charge the perfunctory way in which he deals with this every important question. The charge cannot be said to help the Jury in any way, which it ought to. The statement of the common object is an essential element in a charge under section 149, Indian Penal Code. The learned Judge has not fully dealt with the matter. Then again the learned Judge's statement of law with regard to the offence under section 324, Indian Penal Code, is defective. That there could be the plea of private defence in the alternative should have been emphasised by the learned Judge in his charge. And lastly I complain against the learned Judge's taking the assistance of the Public Prosecutor and an officer of the Court in preparing or explaining the charge.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukerji, for Mr. Orr, for the Crown.—It cannot be denied that the decision of the case involves a nice question of possession of the lands in dispute at the time of the occurrence, and the learned Judge's charge is defective in that respect as also in respect of the statement of the law as regards section 324, Indian Penal Code. But I submit that these are not misdirections so as to vitiate the charge. The whole evidence was there before the Jury and they brought in a verdict of guilty.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri was not called upon to reply.

Babu Prosanta Bhusan Gupta, for the Complainants.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—The nine appellants were tried by the Sessions Judge of Faridpur and a Jury. The Jury found them all guilty under section 148 of the Indian Penal Code, and also under section 304 read with section 149. They further found four of the appellants guilty of substantive offences under section 324. The Sessions Judge accepted the verdict of the Jury and sentenced the appellants to various terms of imprisonment. The appeal is based on the ground of misdirection in the charge delivered by the learned Sessions Judge to the Jury.

The first part of the charge deals at some little length with the difference between stories which are wholly true, stories which are partly true and partly false and stories which are wholly false. No exception can be taken to this part of the charge but it may be doubtful whether it gave the Jury very much assistance.

We have no desire in this connection to lay down any precise rule as to the form which a charge should take. The form and contents of the charge will vary, of course, with the circumstances of individual cases, with the nature of the evidence the Judge has to deal with and the mode in which the case for the prosecution and the case for the defence are conducted. Generally speaking, however, it is usual to begin a charge by setting out the offence or offences which the prisoner is charged with having committed and explaining the law relating to those offences. Then the case for the prosecution and the case for the defence may be referred to, and such comments made on the evidence adduced on either side as the Sessions Judge may think it desirable or useful to the Jury, to make. Care should be taken to place the defence set up fairly before the Jury and to ensure that the Jury appreciate the issue or issues which they have to try. The charge should, of course, include the usual warning as to the duty of the Jury to the prosecution on the one hand and to the prisoner on the other. Having said so much, I repeat that I by no means imply that a charge must necessarily take one form rather than another. We should certainly not have interfered in this case merely on account of the order followed by the learned Judge in the remarks which he addressed to the Jury.

A great part of the difficulty which we have experienced in this case arises from the fact that there is no clear statement in the charge as to the case for the prosecution. In that respect the learned Vakil who has appeared for the Crown has rendered us, as he usually does, great assistance The case for the prosecution as he stated it is as follows:—

There are 3 plots of land bearing numbers 340, 341 and 342. They lie contiguous to one another. In the settlement of the year 1315, plot No. 340 was recorded in the name of Julmat, the father of the accused Lokman, plot No. 341 in the name of the complainant Umarali and his brother, and plot No 342 in the name of Afiraddi, another of the accused. The plot in the complainant's name lies between the other two plots Apparently nothing happened till 1918, when a dispute arose between the complainant's party and the party of the accused as to some of the lands covered by plot No. 341. The complainant's party informed the Sub Divisional Magistrate that there was a dispute and applied for the demarcation of the land. An Amin was sent out and he apparently found that the 3 plots had been sub-divided and that several parties were in possession. He made his report to that effect. Subsequently the complainant's party complained that the party of the accused had committed mischief on land in possession of the complainant. The accused also went before the Magistrate and moved him to take proceedings under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. An enquiry was made and proceedings were in fact initiated under section 145 of the Code. That was the state of things at the time of the occurrence which is the subject-matter of this case. Undoubtedly there was an encounter between the two parties. On the side of the complainant's party one man was killed and 4 men were seriously injured. The prosecution alleged that on Sunday, the 21st July, the complainant and his party had cut some jute on land comprised in plot No. 341. The accused came to know of that and went about collecting lathials. On Monday the complainant's party cut more jute and the accused came to the place in a body, consisting of men variously armed with lathis, spears and so forth. Those men fell upon the complainant's party with the result which I have mentioned. Upon the case so stated, the question of possession undoubtedly arises, and one objection which, I think, may be properly made to this charge is that the learned Sessions Judge has not dealt clearly with that question. What he said to the Jury is this:—"In order to decide this case if it is necessary to see who grew that crop you will consider that evidence, but you are to remember that the actual question you are sitting here to decide is not 'who grew this crop' but did these accused do the things alleged against them in the charges." As to that it may be that there is no actual error of law in the passage quoted. But as it stands, what is said is neither lucid nor very helpful.

As the learned Vakil for the Crown has put the case before us to day, he has conceded that the evidence on this record on the question who was in actual possession of the land at or about the time of the occurrence is so conflicting that it would be difficult for the Jury to come to any satisfactory conclusion on the point. Then he says that the question of possession does not very much matter, because, if the case for the prosecution is believed that the principal accused collected lathials, went to the land, and assaulted the complainant and his party, they committed the offence of rioting inasmuch as they had ample time to obtain the assistance of the authorities. It may be so but so far as I can see, that was not how the case was laid before the Jury. It is very doubtful whether the Jury were so instructed that they were able to appreciate the considerations which arose in such a state of things and the defence which seems to have been made.

It is perfectly true that in the statements which they made when examined by the Court the appellants simply denied that they had gone to the land or had had anything to do with any riot. They were, however, represented by a learned Pleader at the trial and the cross-examination of the witnesses shows that at any rate one of the defences set up was that the accused were acting in the exercise of the right of private defence of property.

The guilt of the accused had also to be considered with reference to the common object alleged in the charges.

All we need say now, however, is that it does not appear to us that the Jury were made fully acquainted with the nature of the case for the prosecution and the nature of the case for the defence.

What I have said relates to the charge under section 148 and to the other charges in which section 149 of the Code is mentioned.

There remains the charge against some of the accused under section 324. As to that charge the Sessions Judge says this: "Certain persons are charged with causing certain wounds. If you find they gave those wounds, they cannot plead right of private defence because they have not admitted giving those wounds."

It is conceded and very properly conceded by the learned Vakil for the Crown that those words, as they stand, do not correctly represent the law. The Judge was entitled to tell the Jury that when a prisoner is charged with wounding another, the burden of proving that the wound was inflicted in the exercise of the right of private defence lies on the prisoner The Judge might have gone further and said that a plea in this form, "I was not present and did not strike the complainant but if I did strike him, I acted in self-defence," is not very convincing. Nevertheless it is open to a prisoner to adopt such a defence in the alternative, and if he cannot satisfy the Jury that he did not strike the complainant but can satisfy them, either by the cross-examination of the complainant's witnesses or by adducing evidence on his own behalf, that in striking the complainant he acted in self-defence, then he is entitled to an acquittal.

In our opinion the mode in which this case was placed before the Jury is defective and the conviction of the appellants and the sentences passed on them must be set aside. We consider that a fresh trial should be held and it seems advisable that the trial should be conducted by another Judge who will come to the case with a fresh mind. We accordingly direct that the case be re-tried by the Additional Sessions Judge of Faridpur.

I cannot leave this case without making one or two observations as to comments made at the Bar on the mode in which the Sessions Judge prepared and delivered his charge. He tells us that he wrote one part of it in English and obtained a Bengali translation of that part from an officer of his Court. Another part was also written in English and a translation of that was obtained from the Public Prosecutor. If the charge was to be delivered in Bengali and the Sessions Judge was not himself sufficiently acquainted with that language to prepare the charge in Bengali himself, it was, in my opinion, open to him to obtain such assistance as he required from the officer of his Court. It may be suggested, however, to the learned Sessions Judge that it is not desirable that he should have resort to the services of the Public Prosecutor for this purpose. The remainder of the charge, the Judge tells us, was delivered in English and was translated sentence by sentence to the Jury by an officer of his Court. If the Sessions Judge found a difficulty in addressing the Jury in Bengali there was, as it seems to me, no alternative open to him except to employ an interpreter, and no valid exception to the proceedings can be taken on this ground.

CHAUDHURI, J.—I entirely agree. I should like to add that it was difficult for me to follow the case from the Judge's charge. I did not understand the case for the prosecution until the learned Vakil for the Crown placed it before us. The Jury may have found it more difficult to follow it, as the Judge's charge was delivered through interpreters. No doubt the Jury are responsible for their verdict and are the sole judges of fact-; but it is to be remembered that the Judge's charge is not only for the purpose of stating the law and explaining it to them, but also of helping the Jury to find facts. He has to advise the Jury as to the logical bearing of the evidence admitted upon the matters to be found by them. He ought to do that to limit the chances of error of the Jury. It is a privilege granted to Judges of our Courts and a duty cast upon them. The learned Judge says that he "placed the evidence of the witnesses before the Jury reminding them of the nature of the offence and dealing with some of the principal points." That hardly helps us to understand the manner in which he did so. In a case of this character it is absolutely essential that the principal points should be clearly placed before the Jury and it should appear from the Judge's charge that he did so. The law requires that in rioting cases, the common object should be clearly stated in the charge which the accused have to meet. He should explain it in his charge. Having regard to the large number of persons and plots of lands concerned in this case, the different kinds of title which were apparently set up and the question of possession involved, the case for the prosecution and the defence should have been set out in the Judge's charge in greater detail, to enable us to judge whether the points requiring consideration had been clearly put before the Jury. Two points strike us as very important, namely, the point of time when the accused knew that their crops were going to be cut, and whether they could have sought the assistance of the Police in time to prevent the alleged aggression, but there is hardly any indication in the charge that these points were put before the Jury. It is no use referring to colour charts in dealing with evidence. They may confuse the Jury. I do not doubt that the learned Judge tried his very best to put the matters he considered necessary before the Jury, but judging from the charge alone we consider it unsatisfactory. It is inconvenient to have the charge delivered through interpreters. It may be worse than that. But upon the explanation given by the learned Judge that he corrected and supervised the interpretation, I do not think the manner in which the charge was delivered in this case is open to serious objection. But for the reasons above given I agree in directing that a re-trial be held by the Additional Sessions Judge of Faridpur.

Re-trial ordered.

Petroleum Act (VIII of 1899), s. 15A—Storing petrol for person not licensed to deal in petrol—Offence—Abetment.

The accused A and B were the manager and servant of a firm holding a license for storing petrol, who undertook to receive and store petrol for C (also an accused in the trial Court). Several drums of petrol were consigned to the firm from various places by C and were received and stored by A and B. C had no license to deal in petrol and he was convicted of importing, transporting and possessing petrol without a license. A and B were convicted for having abetted him. C appealed to the Sessions Judge and A and B moved the High Court:

Held, that in storing the petrol the firm in no way infringed the law, as they were under no obligation to inquire whether or not C had received the petrol in a licensed or unlicensed way, and that, therefore, A and B had committed no offence [p. 409, cols. 1 & 2]

Criminal application for revision from convictions and sentences passed by the City Magistrate, First Class, Ahmedabad.

Mr. H. V. Divatia, for Accused Nos. 2 and 3.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—We are much obliged to the Government Pleader in this case for the pains he has taken to make us acquainted with the prosecution view of the matter. He was not originally instructed to appear, but the Magistrate's judgment presented so much difficulty to us that we asked him to look into the papers of the case and put before us the case for the prosecution.

That case appears to be this: Accused No. 1, who is a trader in Ahmedabad, finding that the price of petrol had risen in February 1918 and being anxious to make a profit out of this rise in price, took to dealing in petrol. He had himself no license either for the import or transport or possession of petrol. So he entered into an arrangement with Cama Brothers, of whom accused No. 2 is a representative, that they were to receive for him and store for him the petrol that was sent to Ahmedabad to his name. Thereafter he sold some petrol of his that was in the custody or possession of Cama Brothers. He also imported from Rajkot eleven drums which were sent covered by a railway receipt in the name of accused No. 1's firm which was taken possession of in Ahmedabad and stored by Cama Brothers. He also transported in a similar way a quantity of petrol from Ranpur to Ahmedabad. It is quite immaterial for the purposes of the point which we have to consider to trouble either about the quantities or the dates. It suffices for our purpose to assume that the transport and import by accused No. 1 was contrary to the provisions of the Petroleum Act.

All the three accused were tried by the First Class Magistrate in Ahmedabad, accused No. 1 for the commission of the offences of transporting, importing and possessing without a license and accused Nos. 2 and 3 for abetting him in so doing. They were all convicted. The sentence inflicted on accused No. 1 was an appealable sentence. He has appealed and his appeal is still pending before the Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad. The sentences inflicted on accused Nos. 2 and 3 were not appealable. So they have applied to us in our revisional capacity to set aside the sentences.

We assume for the purposes of this case that accused No. 1 has been rightly convicted, and we further assume that accused Nos. 2 and 3 have done all the physical things which the prosecution allege that they have done. The case turns entirely on what was their intention. It would be a perfectly legitimate thing for Cama Brothers or any one else with a proper license to store petrol which had been sent to Ahmedabad in the name of and for the accused No. 1. Cama Brothers had a proper license and in storing petrol they were not in any way whatever breaking the law so long as they did not exceed the quantity which they were licensed to store or possess. It is not alleged against them that they did exceed this quantity. They were under no obligation to inquire whether accused No. 1 had received the petrol in a licensed or an unlicensed way. That was no business of theirs any more than it was the business of the Railway Company, when they carried the petrol, as they did in this case, to inquire whether the person transporting it had or had not the necessary license. On the facts alleged, moreover, it is quite clear to my thinking that we must assume that Cama Brothers were ignorant that the law was being deliberately broken and we must continue so to assume, unless definite circumstances are established from which it must be reasonably inferred that Cama Brothers were in collusion with Parikh Brothers, i e., the firm of accused No. 1; or at least that they knew that in storing accused No. 1's petrol they were helping him to deal in petrol which he had obtained by illegal means, that is, by importing or transporting without a license. The only particular reason which is given for inferring that Cama Brothers were colluding with Parikh Brothers and did know that the petrol was obtained by methods deliberately contrary to the provisions of the law, is that they have not given an entirely frank account of their part in the affair. It may be that they have not, though on the Magistrate's judgment I am not sure that even that can be said. Unfortunately when matters come before a Magistrate, it very commonly happens that people do not give a frank explanation of the circumstances although the true circumstances may be, as far as they are concerned, perfectly innocent. So it seems to me that there are not any circumstances proved which do definitely suggest that Cama Brothers were acting in collusion with accused No. 1 for the purpose of evading the law. Indeed, if I had to conjecture one way or the other, I should be disposed to conjecture that they were not conscious that the law was being intentionally evaded. I think the Magistrate has in some way been misled by the idea that there was something fraudulent in the case. Now there was nothing at all which was fraudulent in the ordinary sense of that word. Accused No. 1 may have been guilty of importing and transporting petroleum without a license and he may have been very properly convicted. (As to that we do not express any opinion whatever.) But so far as the evidence discloses the circumstances, he did not act in any fraudulent way. He acted perfectly openly. Not so much as if trying to evade the law clandestinely but as if openly defying the law. For he had the petroleum sent by railway, covered by a railway receipt in his own name, so that everything which it was necessary to discover as against him was made patent. If once this idea of fraud, of something clandestine or deceitful, is eliminated, and I think it must be eliminated in this case, there really remains no reason that I can see for supposing that Cama Brothers were acting in anything but a perfectly straightforward, natural and businesslike way. I do not wish to be understood to suppose that because a man has acted openly and not fraudulently, he may not have acted contrary to the law. I am assuming that accused No. 1 did act contrary to the law and that he has been rightly convicted.

The case is, if anything, even weaker on the point of possession than it is in the matter of transport and import. It is said that accused No. 1 was for the purpose of the Act in possession of the petroleum which was actually on the premises of and under the control of Cama Brothers, who have a license. I will not say anything as to whether in such circumstances accused No. 1 could be rightly convicted of possession, because that is a point for the Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad to decide. But it seems to me that by no stretch of ingenuity can Cama Brothers be said to have abetted accused No. 1 in being in possession against the law of this petroleum unless, of course, it were clearly established that there was a conspiracy between Cama Brothers and accused No. 1 for the purpose of evading the law. As I have already explained, such a conspiracy is not suggested by the evidence and circumstances of the case. Even if it were, I should still be very doubtful whether Cama Brothers could be said to abet the unlawful possession by accused No 1 of petrol.

I have dealt with the case at quite considerable length, because it seems to me to be a case of some importance. I think the Magistrate has so used the law, in this case, as to show that there is a very real danger that perfectly legitimate business operations may be obstructed and rendered difficult by applying a law like the Petroleum Act with a stringency that was never intended. I think that when assumptions are made, in what appear to be ordinary business transactions, that there is an intention to defeat the law, those assumptions need to be based on something substantial. If too readily made, they will have the effect of impeding perfectly legitimate business.

I think, therefore, that in the case of these two applicants, Behramsha Ratanji accused No 2 and Vanmali Devchand accused No. 3, the convictions must be set aside and the fines, if paid, refunded.

SHAH, J.—I agree.

NAND KISHORE PRASAD—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 403—Acquittal on charge of cheating—Trial on charge of falsification of accounts on same record, legality of—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 420, 477A.

Two persons AR. and NK. were convicted, the former under section 420 and the latter under sections 420/109 of the Penal Code. They appealed, and N. K. was acquitted. AR. moved the High Court in revision, which held that the conviction should have been under section 477A of the Penal Code and directed the Magistrate to commit the case to the Court of Session under that section The Magistrate issued a notice to both AR and NK. requiring their attendance before him to show cause why they should not be committed to the Court of Session. NK. protested, relying on the fact that he had been acquitted by the Sessions Judge and that until such acquittal was set aside, the Magistrate could not commit him again, on the record of the proceedings as they then stood, to take his trial for an offence under section 477A of the Penal Code. The Magistrate, however, expressed his intention of committing both accused to the Sessions. NK. then moved the Sessions Judge to set aside the Magistrate's order in so far as it affected his commitment. The Sessions Judge referred the case to the High Court for directions as to the propriety of the Magistrate's order:

Held, that NK. could not, so long as his acquittal under section 420 of the Penal Code stood, be properly tried again, upon the record as it then stood, for an offence under section 477 and that if the Crown wished to proceed against him, they must do so in a proper manner and by a separate proceeding, and not upon the original record. [p. 492, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal reference by the Sessions Judge, Patna, dated the 24/26th May 1919.

FACTS appear from the following reference made by the Sessions Judge of Patna:—

"Under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, I herewith transmit the record of the marginally noted* case to be laid before the High Court with the following report:—

"(1) A brief analysis of the case.

"Two persons Abdul Rauf and the petitioner Nand Kishore Prasad were charged before the Deputy Magistrate of Bankipur, the first under section 420, Indian Penal Code, and the second under section 420/109, Indian Penal Code, with cheating and abetment of cheating. They were convicted by the Deputy Magistrate, but on appeal, while the conviction of Abdul Rauf was upheld, the conviction of Nand Kishore Prasad was set aside on the merits, the Appellate Court holding that the case against him was not more than one of strong suspicion. Abdul Rauf then moved the High Court in revision questioning the jurisdiction of the Deputy Magistrate to try the case, and the High Court held that the real offences committed in this case were under section 477A, Indian Penal Code, and not within the cognizance of the Court of the Deputy Magistrate. The Hon'ble Judges, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence and directed the Deputy Magistrate to commit the case to the Court of Session. A notice was thereupon served by the Deputy Magistrate on Nand Kishore Prasad as well as upon Abdul Rauf requiring him to appear on 1st April 1919. The petitioner protested and prayed to be discharged, but the Deputy Magistrate ordered that the petitioner Nand Kishore Prasad will have to appear as an accused in the case under section 477A.

"2. The order recommended for revision.

"The order requiring the petitioner to appear before the Magistrate as an accused under section 477A.

"3. The grounds upon which in the opinion of this Court the order should be reversed.

"The petitioner was tried on certain charges under section 420 read with section 109, which prima facie the Deputy Magistrate of Bankipur was competent to try. He was acquitted on the merits by the Court of Appeal and the case against him ended there. That acquittal still stands and there is nothing on the face of the record to show that the trial of Nand Kishore Prasad was without jurisdiction. The order of the High Court related only to the case against Abdul Rauf and it cannot be inferred from the mere fact that the trial of Abdul Rauf was held to be incompetent that the trial of Nand Kishore Prasad was incompetent also. The order of the High Court cannot be read as affecting Nand Kishore Prasad, who was not summoned to appear before that Court. The order was passed under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, and sub-section 2 of that section lays down that no order under this section shall be made to the prejudice of the accused until he has had an opportunity of being heard either personally or by Pleader in his own defence. It is obvious, therefore, that the order passed by the High Court did not extend to the case of Nand Kishore Prasad nor has his acquittal been affected."

The order of the High Court (Mr. Justice Roe and Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad), dated 3rd March 1919, referred to in this reference was as follows:—

ROE, J.—It seems to us clear that the real offences committed in this case were under section 477A, Indian Penal Code, not within the cognizance of the Court of the Deputy Magistrate notwithstanding his attempt to minimise them. We set aside the conviction and sentence and direct the Deputy Magistrate to commit the case to the Court of Session. It will be open to the Sessions Judge either to try the case himself or to make it over to the Assistant Sessions Judge.

We invite the attention of the Court which will try these cases to the fact that there is considerable authority for the proposition that where the falsifying of an account has resulted in the commission of the minor offence of cheating, not more than one charge should be investigated at one trial.

The accused will remain on bail to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate pending the decision of the case in the Sessions Court.

JUDGMENT.—This criminal revision comes before me upon a reference made by the learned Sessions Judge of Patna.

It would appear that two persons were charged with an offence under section 420 of the Indian Penal Code. Abdul Rauf was the principal offender; and Nand Kishore was charged with being an abettor, and with having committed an offence under section 420 read with section 109 of the Indian Penal Code. The charge preferred under section 420 was cognizable and triable by the Deputy Magistrate.

The Deputy Magistrate convicted both the accused; and from this conviction there was an appeal to the learned Sessions Judge of Patna.

Upon the hearing of the appeal the learned Judge affirmed the conviction as against Abdul Rauf, and acquitted his co-accused Nand Kishore, holding that there was no evidence before him upon which he could properly hold that Nand Kishore aided and abetted Abdul Rauf in committing the act of cheating that was alleged against him by the prosecution.

Abdul Rauf maintained assiduously before the learned Sessions Judge that the case against him was one not properly triable under section 420 of the Indian Penal Code, but that he should have been charged and tried for an offence under section 477A, Indian Penal Code.

The prosecution contended that the charge preferred against Abdul Rauf under section 420 was correct in form and should be maintained.

The Crown took no steps whatsoever to impeach the validity of the acquittal of Nand Kishore pronounced by the learned Sessions Judge.

Abdul Rauf applied to the High Court against the order of conviction by the learned Sessions Judge of Patna, and contended that his conviction under section 420 of the Indian Penal Code was improper; and that he ought to have been convicted, having regard to the facts of the case preferred against him, of an offence under section 477A of the Indian Penal Code.

A Division Bench of this Court, presided over by Mr. Justice Roe and Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad, held that the contention of Abdul Rauf was correct; and accordingly they set aside the conviction of Abdul Rauf under section 420 of the Indian Penal Code, and directed that he should be committed to the Sessions for trial for an offence under section 477A, Indian Penal Code. Nand Kishore was not represented, nor did he appear on the hearing of the application in revision presented to the High Court by Abdul Rauf.

The original case against Abdul Rauf, owing to the order of the High Court, was returned to the Deputy Magistrate for commitment to the Sessions.

I should observe that the High Court's judgment and order is absolutely silent with regard to the acquittal of Nand Kishore. Nor did the High Court take any steps to summon Nand Kishore before it with a view of setting aside the acquittal which had been pronounced in his favour. I, therefore, take it that the High Court never had present to its mind the case of Nand Kishore.

Upon the record of the case being returned to the Deputy Magistrate for commitment, the Deputy Magistrate served notice upon Nand Kishore, dated the 1st April 1919, requiring him to show cause why he should not be committed for trial to the Sessions jointly with Abdul Rauf for an offence under section 477A of the Indian Penal Code. Nand Kishore filed a petition by way of cause, relying strongly on the fact that he had been acquitted by the learned Sessions Judge of the offence preferred against him under section 420, and that until such acquittal was set aside the Deputy Magistrate could not commit him again on the record of the proceedings as they then stood to take his trial for an offence under section 477 of the Indian Penal Code.

The Deputy Magistrate, judging from his order, dated the 15th of April 1919, which was passed after the petitioner's petition of cause was filed, was of opinion that he was bound, having regard to the order of the High Court, to commit not only Abdul Rauf, but also Nand Kishore to the Sessions, to stand their trial for an offence under section 477A, without in any way, so far as Nand Kishore was concerned, hearing any additional evidence which would warrant the inference that he was guilty of an offence within the meaning of that section.

The learned Deputy Magistrate expresses his intention of committing both the accused to the Sessions to stand their trial for an offence under section 477A, Indian Penal Code, on the 15th of April 1919.

Thereupon Nand Kishore applied to the learned Sessions Judge to set aside the order of the learned Deputy Magistrate in so far as it affected his commitment for an offence under section 477A, Indian Penal Code.

The learned Judge felt, and I think rightly felt, that so long as the acquittal under section 420 of the Indian Penal Code stood as against Nand Kishore, he could not properly be tried again, upon the record as it then stood, charged with an offence under section 477, and accordingly the learned Judge referred the case to this Court for directions with regard to the propriety of the order passed by the Deputy Magistrate, dated the 15th April 1919.

I am satisfied that the Deputy Magistrate was wrong in holding that by virtue of the order made by the High Court he was bound to commit Abdul Rauf and Nand Kishore jointly for having committed an offence under section 477A of the Indian Penal Code.

It may or may not be open to the Crown to proceed against Nand Kishore for an offence under section 477A, Indian Penal Code, but if they do so they must do so in a proper manner and by a separate proceeding, and not upon the original record as it at present stands. The Government Advcoate virtually admits this contention.

Therefore, I intend to set aside the order of the learned Deputy Magistrate, in so far as it expresses an intention to commit Nand Kishore to the Sessions to be tried for an offence under section 477A read in conjunction with section 109 of the Indian Penal Code.

Various arguments have been addressed to me as to the right of the Crown to proceed against Nand Kishore independently of the order of this Court made upon the application of Abdul Rauf and notwithstanding his acquittal by the learned Sessions Judge. I do not intend to discuss or consider the arguments addressed to me by the learned Government Advocate. They are, in my opinion, immaterial for the purpose of determining the short point referred to me by the learned Sessions Judge of Patna. It will be sufficient to consider the elaborate arguments of the learned Government Advocate, should any point arise, at a later stage which may require more properly their consideration. But at present, I am satisfied that it was not the intention of the High Court, nor was it possible for the High Court, to direct a prosecution of Nand Kishore, having regard to the acquittal that had been pronounced in his favour, until at least the High Court had heard Nand Kishore in his own defence, and had satisfied itself that he ought to and should be prosecuted for an offence under section 477A, Indian Penal Code.

Accordingly I hold that the order of the learned Deputy Magistrate, Mr. Sircar, dated the 15th April 1919, qua Nand Kishore is improper, and that he has no right under the circumstances of this case to commit Nand Kishore for trial for an offence under section 477A of the Indian Penal Code.

Answer accordingly.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 147—Rioting—Common object—Evidence—Proof.

The alleged common object of an assembly which renders it unlawful must be established by evidence; it is not a matter that can be inferred.

GOVIND v. EMPEROR.

In the absence of a clear finding as to how a fight originated, a conviction for rioting cannot be maintained.

Criminal revision against the order of the Judicial Commissioner, Chota Nagpur.

Messrs. S. Sinha and Rajendra Prasad, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—The petitioner Jadubar Singh has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for six months for an offence under section 147, Indian Penal Code, in respect of a field called Suarmara.

The petitioner and his cousin Ram Singh are in dispute about this land and it appears that on the day of the occurrence each, with a party numbering seven or eight, went upon the land and a fight took place.

The finding in this case is that Jadubar was entitled to joint possession with Ram Singh in equal proportions and that on the day of the occurrence he went to cut the dried up paddy, which was then upon the land. It is found that both parties had sowed the land jointly but on account of the dispute the paddy was not watered and that, therefore, it had become dry and useless. There can be no doubt, however, that Jadubar had a right to cut half that paddy. The Police appear to have sent up both parties for rioting and both parties were convicted by the Magistrate.

In regard to Jadubar's party the learned Judicial Commissioner finds that though the claim set up in the trial Court to a right to the whole field is false, they had a joint right to cut the paddy. But the learned Judicial Commissioner thinks that, as it was their intention to assert a right to the whole field and to exclude Ram Singh, the common object of the assembly was unlawful and that in causing hurt in prosecution of that common object the offence of rioting was committed.

Now the finding as to the common object must be supported by evidence. Beyond the defence set up at the trial there appears to be no evidence that the object of Jadubar's party in going upon the field was to do more than cut their share of the produce. It would have been possible from the acts of Jadubar and his party, when Ram Singh's party arrived, to draw the conclusion that their object was something more than to assert their undoubted title to half the land; but neither the first Court nor the learned Judicial Commissioner has been able to come to any finding as to what took place when Ram Singh arrived and who began the fight. If Ram Singh began the fight while Jadubar's party were peacefully employed, there could clearly be no ground for holding Jadubar's party guilty of the offence of rioting. They had a right in that case to use appropriate force for the purpose of repelling the attack; and in the absence of any clear finding as to how the fight originated, it is impossible to support the conviction and sentence.

The result is that the conviction and sentence are set aside and the petitioner released from bail.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—I agree.

Conviction and sentence set aside.

Obiter.—A Court of revision is not concerned with the policy underlying a legislative enactment, it is only concerned with the legality of the proceedings sought to be revised. [p. 496, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Chhindwara.

Messrs. Atmaram Bhagwant and D. W. Kathale, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—The applicant has been convicted of an offence under section 34 of the Police Act and fined Rs. 20. Section 34 of the Police Act, fifth clause, runs as follows: "Any person who throws or lays down any dirt, filth, rubbish or any stones or building materials; or who constructs any cow-shed, stable, or the like; or who causes any offensive matter to run from any house, factory, dung-heap, or the like."

The Civil Surgeon noticed in the course of his inspection filth from the applicant's latrine flowing on the road. What was the cause of this has not been clearly stated in the judgment, nor anywhere on the record. From a note sent by the trying Magistrate through the District Magistrate it would appear that the cause of the offensive matter running out of the house was a bad state of repairs of the outlet, which has since been put in proper order. It is contended before me that there should have been a prosecution not under the Police Act, but under the Central Provinces Municipal Act, the terms of which are said to be much wider than those of the Police Act. Section 110 of the Municipal Act says: "Whoever, without the written permission of the Committee, causes or allows the water of any sink, sewer or cess-pool, or any other offensive matter, to flow, drain or be put upon any street or public place or into any sewer or drain not set apart for the purpose, shall be punishable with fine which may extend to twenty rupees."

It is also rightly pointed out that such a prosecution could only have been at the instance of an officer authorized by the Municipal Committee, and such an offence would have been compoundable.

Reference has also been made to certain questions and answers in the Local Legislative Council regarding the policy of prosecutions being left in the hands of the Municipal Committee, but as a Judge I am not concerned with any question of policy, but only with the legality of the proceedings sought to be revised.

If the Municipal Act had been a contemporaneous Act, instead of being an Act passed nearly half a century afterwards, I should have been inclined to accept the applicant's suggestion that there is a difference between "causes" and "allows." In ordinary English, a man is said to cause a thing if he allows it to exist. The word "causes" is not a term of art. Section 268 of the Penal Code shows that a person may be guilty of a public nuisance by reason of an act or an illegal omission. The offence in this case is one of public nuisance provided for by the Police Act. On this ground I can see no reason for interference.

The conviction does not appear to have been based upon anything observed at the local inspection, but upon the evidence given in the case. The local inspection, on the contrary, disclosed that proper repairs had been made to the outlet of the latrine, in other words, that the nuisance had ceased, a fact so far favourable to the accused. This does not, however, discredit the evidence that the nuisance did exist on a previous date.

Ground 3 does not seem to have been urged in the Court below. The applicant does not say that he reported to the Municipality about the dereliction of duty on the part of the Municipal scavengers. If he had done so, it might have been taken by the lower Court in mitigation of punishment.

I see no reason to interfere with the sentence. The application is, therefore, dismissed.

Application dismissed.

APPEAL FROM THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

June 3, 1919.

THE MIDNAPUR ZEMINDARY COMPANY, LTD.—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

UMA CHARAN MANDAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Appeal, second—Findings of fact on first appeal, finality of—High Court, power of interference of.

The High Courts in India are not entitled in a second appeal to go behind the findings of fact of the first Appellate Court, unless such findings result from the misconstruction of a document or the misapplication of law or procedure. [p 500, col. 2.]

Consolidated appeals from twenty decrees of the Calcutta High Court (Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee and Mr. Justice Beachcroft), dated the 1st June 1914 and reported as 26 Ind. Cas. 182, reversing in second appeal decrees, dated the 30th September and 30th November 1910, of the District Judge, Manbhum.

FACTS.—The appellants sued claiming that they were purchasers of an under-tenure sold for arrears of rent under Bengal Act VIII of 1865, and, therefore, entitled under section 16 of the Act to avoid the incumbrances held by the defendants respondents.

The defendants-respondents pleaded inter alia that the Court-sale at which plaintiffs purchased was really a private sale and was a collusive and fraudulent device and that plaintiffs were, therefore, not entitled to the benefit of the Act.

The Subordinate Judge of Purulia, who tried the case fixed among others the following issue:—

"7. Were the rent decree and sale in execution of the same fraudulent, collusive and illegal?"

Both parties adduced evidence and the Subordinate Judge found this issue in plaintiffs' favour. His judgment on the point is cited at length by their Lordships. It was affirmed in appeal by the District Judge of Manbhum.

The proceedings on second appeal are reported at 26 Ind. Cas. 82; 19 C. W. N. 270. The High Court held that the circumstances under which the public sale was brought about and took place established that the sale in reality was a private sale, and that plaintiffs were not entitled to avoid the incumbrances. The material part of their judgment is cited by their Lordships. They dismissed plaintiffs' suit, which the lower Courts had decreed.

Hence this appeal.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. C., and Sir W. Garth, K. C., for the Appellants, submitted that the High Court had no jurisdiction in second appeal to go behind the findings of fact at which the District Judge had arrived. Durga Chowdhrani v. Jewahir Singh Chowdhri (1).

The two lower Courts concurrently found on the evidence that the sale was neither collusive nor fraudulent, that it was a public sale regularly held, and that defendants had notice of it. There was no evidence whatever of any fraud on the part of the plaintiff Company.

Mr. Dube, for the Respondents, submitted that the question whether the sale was collusive and fraudulent was a mixed question of law and fact. There was sufficient evidence from which the High Court could infer that the sale was really a private one. The District Judge found that "this arrangement undoubtedly existed between the Raja and Jiban Babu, viz., that the Company should bid up to Rs. 40,000 and that the Raja should allow the sale to proceed." From that finding and others the High Court was competent in second appeal to draw the inference of fraud. Such an inference is one of law. Ramgopal v. Shamskhaton (2).

Mr. De Gruyther, K.C., replied.

JUDGMENT.

SIR JOHN EDGE.—These are consolidated appeals from twenty decrees, dated the 1st June 1914, of the High Court at Calcutta which reversed decrees, dated the 30th September and the 30th November 1910, of the District Judge of Manbhum, which had affirmed decrees, dated the 21st March 1910, of the Subordinate Judge of Purulia. The decrees of the High Court which are the subject of these consolidated appeals dismissed the suits, which were suits for a declaration of title and for khas possession by the eviction of the defendants from lands held by them severally in Pergunnah Barahabhum and for such other reliefs as the plaintiffs might be entitled to.

(1) 17 I. A. 122; 18 C. 23; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 560; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 16 (P. C.).

(2) 19 I. A. 228; 20 C. 93; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 247; 17 Ind. Jur. 38; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 63 (P. C.).

The plaintiffs' case was that they were successors in title of Robert Watson & Co., who, on the 8th March 1885, obtained a patni lease, which included the lands in question, from Rajah Brajakishore Singh, the then Zemindar. Mr. H. Mathewson, in whom were then vested the rights of Robert Watson & Co., under the patni lease, on the 25th June 1906, conveyed all his rights in the patni taluk to the plaintiffs. Under the patni tenure there was an old under-tenure held by one Sharup Ganjan Singh, whose interest therein was purchased in 1899 by Rajah Jagabandhu Singh at a sale in execution of a decree against Sharup Ganjan Singh. Rajah Jagabandhu Singh, made default in payment of rent due by him to the plaintiffs, and on the 19th August 1908, the plaintiffs obtained a decree for Rs. 104-13 0 and on the 7th December 1908, the under tenure of Rajah Jagabandhu Singh of the lands in question was, in execution of that decree of the 19th August 1908, sold at a Court sale under Bengal Act VIII of 1865, and was purchased by the plaintiffs who claim to have thereby acquired it free from all incumbrances within the meaning of section 16 of that Act, on the ground that such rights as the defendants or any of them had in the lands were incumbrances free from which under that section the plaintiffs acquired by that purchase the under-tenure of Rajah Jagabandhu Singh.

The case of the defendants in answer to the plaintiffs' claim may be briefly summarised as follows:—

1. That the sale of the 7th December 1908 was not held in accordance with the requirements of sections 4 and 5 of Act VIII of 1865.

2. "That the sale held on the 7th December 1908 was not a public sale, but that it was a fraudulent device on the part of the plaintiffs and Rajah Jagabandhu Singh to give to a private sale the appearance of a public sale."

3. That the lands which were sold did not constitute an under-tenure, but only part of an under-tenure.

4. That the incumbrances were in existence before the under-tenure was created, and could not be avoided by the plaintiffs.

The suits in which these appeals have arisen were tried by the Subordinate Judge of Manbhum. He fixed a number of issues for trial, the most material of which in this appeal was the seventh: "Were the rent-decree and sale in execution of the same fraudulent, collusive and illegal?" Evidence was recorded by the Subordinate Judge bearing on the seventh issue. It was contended on behalf of the defendants that from the fact that Rajah Jagabandhu Singh had not paid or tendered before the sale the amount decreed, it should be inferred that he and the plaintiffs had corruptly agreed that his under-tenure should be sold to the plaintiffs in execution of the decree, and it was endeavoured to be proved that such an agreement had been made between them in order to defeat the rights of the defendants as subordinate holders, and that in order to carry out that agreement there should be no proclamation of the intended sale.

As to the seventh issue, the Subordinate Judge stated in his judgment as follows:—

"Seventh Issue.—It was contended in the written statements that the rent decree and proceedings in execution of the same were fraudulent, collusive and illegal. But at the trial it was not seriously contended that the decree was collusive and fraudulent and illegal. There is not an iota of evidence on the record to show that the arrears were not due and the decree for rent was passed as a result of collusion between the plaintiffs and Raja Jagabandhu Singh. The latter was examined as a witness for the defence and he did not say so. There was no appeal against the decree and it could not by any means be held to be illegal.

"The next question for decision is whether the proceedings in execution of the decree were collusive and fraudulent. The case for the defence, as set forth in the written statements, was that from before the decree there was an arrangement between the plaintiffs and the defaulter Raja Jagabandhu Singh that the tenure would be purchased by the plaintiffs in a sale for arrears of rent, so that they could avoid the under-tenures created by Sharup Ganjan Singh, and in furtherance of that object the sale-proclamation was not published but suppressed altogether and the defaulter did not intentionally deposit the amount due under the decree for rent, which was only Rs. 100 and odd, and the property was knocked down for a sum which had been fixed as the price of the property. That the sale-proclamation had been suppressed as a result of the negotiations between the plaintiffs' agents and the defaulter Raja Jagabandhu Singh was not stated by him or by his Dewan, Girish Chandra Baguli, who had been looking after the cases for the defence from the very beginning. On the other hand, he deposed that he came to know of the date of the sale from a copy of the sale proclamation brought to him by a Digar residing near Pandra The evidence adduced by the plaintiffs about the service of the sale-proclamation in the Mofussil is very meagre, and the statements of the witnesses examined by them are full of discrepancies and contradictions. But we must make allowance for loss of memory on the part of the peon and the identifier who went to the villages about a year and a half ago. Then the class of persons to which the witnesses belong, are apt to make mistakes in the matter of details It is quite probable that the peon and the identifier did not go to all the villages of the Taraf, but I do not think the proclamation was suppressed altogether. I believe that the sale-proclamation was published at least at Haradah. It appears that the sale was advertised in the local vernacular paper and the plaintiffs' agent must have known that the news about the property being brought to sale could not be kept secret. The fact that the defendants did not try to deposit the arrears which amounted to a trifling sum, if they came to know of the sale, may be due to their belief that the defaulter would not allow the property to be sold, especially before the decision of the appeal to the High Court."

There was, in fact, no evidence of any collusion between the plaintiffs and Rajah Jagabandhu Singh, but there was evidence that one Jiban Baku, who was a Naib in the employment of the plaintiffs, but who had no authority to make any agreement on their behalf, had promised to get the plaintiffs to bid up to Rs. 40,000 for the property at the sale. As to him the Subordinate Judge found that he had agreed to use his influence with the plaintiffs so that the property might be sold at a fair price, but that there was no evidence that he was authorised by the plaintiffs to make any negotiations with Rajah Jagabandhu Singh. The Subordinate Judge found that the sale was not fraudulent or collusive.

The District Judge, before whom the appeals from the decrees of the Subordinate Judge came, stated in his judgment that: "Before me two points and two points only have been argued. These points are common to all the appeals." These points were as to the nature of the tenure which was sold at the sale of the 7th December 1908, and as to whether the rent-decree was a fraud against the defendants and the sale was fraudulent. As to the first of these two points, the District Judge agreed with the Subordinate Judge in finding that the tenure which was sold for arrears of rent was separate tenure and had been created by a ruffanama in 1884. On the second of the above points the District Judge stated that the facts of the sale were suspicious and he had examined the evidence very carefully, but that "on the whole I am satisfied that, although there may have been a good deal of sharp practice over this sale, there has not been fraud in a legal sense such as would vitiate the proceedings." The District Judge examined the evidence with care. He agreed with the Subordinate Judge that there was no evidence to show that the decree for the rent in arrear was in any way collusive. As to the sale the District Judge came to the conclusion that the facts proved were not sufficient to constitute fraud and that fraud could not be inferred from them. He found that the sale was not fraudulent and collusive and could not be held to be inoperative against the defendants, and stated:—

"My findings in this case, therefore, agree in every respect with those of the learned Subordinate Judge. The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to annul all the encumbrances which have been created subsequent to 1884 when this tenure, which was sold for arrears of rent, was created."

The District Judge then proceeded to consider whether the incumbrances which the plaintiffs claimed as inoperative as against them had been created before or after 1884, and made decrees which were appealed to the High Court.

In the appeals to the High Court the learned Judges stated that the questions whether Sharup Ganjan Singh had held one or two tenures and what was the effect of the deed of compromise of the 6th March 1884, were of considerable nicety and by no means free from doubt, but that it was not necessary to consider these questionsas the defendants were entitled to succeed on the ground that the sale of the 7th December 1908 was, in their opinion, "brought about and accomplished under circumstances which make it in essence a private sale, and disentitled the purchaser to claim the privileges accorded by law to a purchaser of an entire tenure at a real sale under the Bengal Rent Law." These learned Judges stated their conclusions as follows:—

"In the case before us, the default was wilfully made; the sale was deliberately brought about, though the judgment-debtor was able to pay the judgment debt; the purchasers and the price to be paid by them were settled in advance; here we have all the characteristics of a private sale. It was clearly an abuse of statutory provisions for sale of tenures in execution of decrees for rent, to bring about designedly a sale under such circumstances, so that the rights of under-tenure-holders might be destroyed, an unencumbered title conveyed to the purchaser and the maximum of benefit conferred upon the defaulter. The transaction in all its characteristics was a private sale, and if we were to regard it as a real rent sale, we would have to hold that an unscrupulous tenure-holder may successfully avail himself of the stringent provisions of the rent law, solely with a view to injure subordinate tenure-holders and to profit by their detriment, while providing, by means of a secret arrangement with the intending purchaser, ample safeguards against any possible loss to himself by the transaction. The conclusion appears to be irresistible that the plaintiffs must be treated as in no better position than purchasers by a private transfer. In this view, their claim for annulment of the under-tenure of the defendants cannot be sustained."

Upon that view of the facts and of the law they dismissed the suits.

It appears to their Lordships that the conclusions of the High Court are inconsistent with the findings of fact on first appeal, by which the High Court was bound. If the sale had been the result of a corrupt agreement between the under-tenure holder and the purchaser at the sale, the purchaser might no doubt lose the benefit of section 16 of the Bengal Act of 1865, and especially if the default in payment of rent had been deliberately incurred in furtherance of such an agreement. But in the present case there was no evidence of such a wilful default having been made; and the finding of the Subordinate Judge, with which the District Judge concurred, that there had been no fraud or collusion, was sufficient to entitle the plaintiffs to the decree. The High Court was not entitled to go behind the findings of fact of the District Judge, which did not result from the misconstruction of a document or the misapplication of law or procedure, but upon the oral evidence in the case; and the suits should not have been dismissed.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that these appeals should be allowed with costs, that the decrees of the High Court under appeal dismissing the suits should be set aside, and that the suits should be remitted to the High Court to be disposed of in the appeals and cross-objections according to law.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2318 OF 1917.

May 9, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Newbould.

GIRISH CHANDRA CHAKRABARTY —PLAINTIFF APPELLANT

versus

GIRISH CHANDRA ROY AND OTHERS— DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Appeal—Fraud, plea of, whether can be raised in appeal—Appellate Court, duty of.

An Appellate Court ought not to allow a plea of fraud to be raised at the hearing of an appeal before it, which was not raised in the trial Court nor in the grounds of appeal, without giving the opposite party an opportunity of rebutting the plea.

Appeal against the decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Mymensingh, dated the 3rd July 1917, modifying that of the Munsif, 3rd Court at Kishoregunge, dated the 27th July 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Romesh Chandra Sen, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for rent. The defendants purchased the holding at an auction sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent. The plaintiff claimed rent at the rate of Rs. 40 while the defendants averred that it was Rs. 39. The defendants' sale-certificate showed that the rent payable was Rs. 40. The first Court decreed the suit at Rs. 40. In the Court of Appeal below the defendants raised for the first time the plea that the decree was fraudulently obtained. The lower Appellate Court accepting the plea decreed the suit at Rs. 39. My only point is that the learned Judge is wrong in law in acting upon a plea that was neither raised in the written statement nor in the first Court nor in the memorandum of appeal. We should have been given an opportunity to rebut the plea.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent. The only point for determination is whether the rate of rent is Rs. 40 as alleged by the plaintiff or Rs. 39 as alleged by the defendants. The defendants purchased a tenancy right at an auction sale held in execution of a decree against the previous tenants for arrears of rent, in that suit and in subsequent proceedings including a sale-certificate the rent of the holding is shown as Rs. 40. The learned Subordinate Judge has reversed the finding of the Munsif that the defendants were liable to pay rent at the rate shown in the sale-certificate on the ground that the jama of Rs. 40 was fraudulently inserted in the plaint, decree and the sale-certificate and that the defendants were not bound by the statement of the plaintiff himself when it was found to be fraudulent. No allegation of fraud was made by the defendants at the trial of the suit in the Court of first instance, nor was such allegation even made in the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court. The lower Appellate Court was not justified in allowing the plea of fraud to be raised before it without giving the plaintiff an opportunity of rebuting that plea.

The appeal must be decreed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the first Court restored with costs in the lower Appellate Court.

As the respondents did not appear, I make no order as to costs in this Court.

Decree set aside.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Gaya, dated the 24th September 1917.

Mr. Panchanan Banerjee, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. N. Singh, R. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs, the maliks of the land in suit, from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya, dated the 24th September 1917. The question in dispute between the parties is whether the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 have acquired occupancy rights in certain land the proprietary interest of which is in the plaintiffs. The learned Subordinate Judge, after dealing with the evidence in the case, has come to the conclusion, as a finding of fact, that the plaintiffs have failed to satisfy him that the Record of Rights finally published on the 5th April 1916, which is in favour of the defendants' case, has been rebutted by the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs. That is a finding of fact by which this Court in second appeal is bound, but it is contended, in the first place, that the defendants acquired their title from an Ijaradar and that, having been put in possession of the land by the Ijaradar, their interest, whatever it may be, ceased when the Ijaradar's term expired and that the landlords were thereupon entitled to eject them, claiming as they do this land as their bakasht land. In order to support that proposition, the learned Vakil for the plaintiffs has been driven to contend that an Ijaradar has no power whatever to induct a tenant on to the land, but in support of this proposition he has been unable to produce any authority whatsoever. I have no hesitation in holding that an Ijaradar has power to induct a tenant on to the land which is the subject of his Ijara, apart from any stipulations in his document of title which may prevent him from so doing. In the present case it has not been shown that there were any such stipulations and as the defendants were settled raiyats of the village in which the land is situated, it seems to me that once they became tenants under the Ijaradar they acquired an occupancy right in the land which they held under the Ijaradar. So far as that point is concerned, I think that this appeal must fail.

The next question which was raised was one of estoppel. It appears that three Ijara deeds were produced and these are dated respectively June 1894, June 1906 and January 1907. The first is an Ijara deed executed by the plaintiffs in favour of certain Ijaradars therein named. The second is a transfer of the same right by the original Ijaradars to others, and the third is a re-transfer of the same right to the present defendants. According to the description of the boundaries of the land therein transferred under the Ijara deeds it is sought to be made out that the lands in suit or some of them were in fact the lands in khas possession of the plaintiffs. The land which was the subject of the Ijaras mentioned was a survey plot numbered 550 and the boundaries of that plot on the north and east are described as the kasht of the executant; that is to say, under the first deed of the plaintiffs, and under the subsequent deeds, although the word "executant" is not used, the plaintiffs' names are mentioned. It is said that, as the defendants took a transfer of this land, they are estopped from contending that the boundaries therein described in the Ijara are not accurate. In the first place, as pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, the boundaries which are relied upon are those to the east and the north, and on looking at the survey map, it appears that none of the plots which are described as the kasht land of the maliks are amongst the 5 plots in dispute except one. Of these five Nos. 540 and 541 do not adjoin plot No. 550 at all. Plots Nos. 551 and 552 do adjoin plot No. 550 which was the subject of the Ijara but on that boundary the land is not described as the kasht land of the landlords The other one which is No. 539 does adjoin No. 550 and it is described as the kasht land of the landlords. But, for reasons which the learned Subordinate Judge gave, he came to the conclusion that this matter was not in itself sufficient to rebut the clear evidence adduced by the Record of Rights and the way he dealt with it is this: that the original Ijara which was not granted to the defendants at all contained a description given by the plaintiffs and that clearly the defendants could not be bound by that; that the subsequent Ijaras, which were a transfer of the plot in question, were merely a repetition, so far as the boundaries went, of what was contained in the original Ijara, and that, whether they were originally right or whether they were originally wrong, there was nothing to show that at the date when the final transfer was made in 1907 the description of the boundaries therein mentioned, being merely a repetition, was accurate so far as it related to the plot in question. But it is contended that the defendants having taken this document are estopped from denying the accuracy of it. It is unnecessary to decide that question, because an estoppel, if such existed, would merely be to this extent that in the year 1907 one plot of the disputed land was in the khas possession of the maliks. Now, the Record of Rights was published long after that, in the year 1916, and it seems to me that, even if there should be an estoppel as against the defendants in this case from denying the accuracy of a document of the year 1907, that is not sufficient to rebut the evidence of the Record of Rights published in the year 1916. For these reasons I have come to the conclusion that the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge, even if it may not have rightly decided the question of estoppel about which it is unnecessary to form any opinion, would not in fact make any difference to the ultimate decision seeing that in any event, the estoppel, if such exists, does not go really far enough. For these reasons I am of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

FOSTER, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 577 OF 1916.

November 19, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Wilberforce and Mr. Justice Martineau.

MANOHAR LAL—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

NANAK CHAND—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Plaintiff instituted the present suit for partition of certain joint property and for possession of certain other property as exclusively his. In 1909 a partition of some joint property of the parties was made by arbitrators appointed by them, and the plaintiff now alleged that there was other joint property, besides that dealt with by the arbitrators, which the defendant did not disclose, and the present suit related to this property. The defendant denied that the suit property was joint, and pleaded that the arbitrators' award, and the decree thereon, estopped the plaintiff from now alleging that any property, other than that included in the award, was joint, that the plaintiff had admitted at the time of the arbitration that the suit property was the exclusive property of the defendant, and that he had abandoned his rights in respect of the other property claimed by him. The trial Court, without recording a finding whether the property alleged to be joint was joint, dismissed this portion of the suit on the ground that the plaintiff not having included the property now alleged to be joint in the claim of 1909, he was debarred from suing for it now, the matter being res judicata. The plaintiff appealed:

Held, (1) that as the arbitrators neither gave any adjudication nor made any inquiry about the existence of joint property other than that mentioned in the agreement to refer to arbitration, and were told nothing about the property now in suit, their award did not operate as res judicata so as to bar the claim for partition of this property; [p. 504, col. 2]

(2) that it was for the defendant to prove that the plaintiff had waived his rights, and waiver was not to be inferred from plaintiff's omission to give evidence and explain when and how he came to know that the property was joint; [p. 504, col. 2.]

(3) that in the absence of proof that plaintiff knew at the time of the arbitration that the property was joint, his admission would not amount to waiver; the admission being gratuitous could be withdrawn, and did not create an estoppel as it did not lead to any change in defendant's position. [p. 505, col. 1.]

First appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, dated the 23rd December 1915.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, Mr. Abdul Rashid and Dewan Mehr Chand, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain and Lala Tirath Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the defendant's son, but was adopted by Bhai Nand Gopal, who was a brother of the defendant's mother. It has been found by the lower Court, and the correctness of the finding has not been contested before us, that the defendant lived with Nand Gopal and managed his property and that he continued managing it after Nand Gopal's death, which occurred in 1895. In 1909 a partition of some joint property of the parties was made by arbitrators appointed by them.

The plaintiff alleges that besides that property there was other joint property, specified in paragraph 8 of the plaint, which the defendant did not disclose. He sues for its partition, and also for possession of certain property, moveable and immoveable, mentioned in paragraph 9 of the plaint, which he claims as exclusively his, and of 3 kanals 16 marlas of land at Kila Gujar Singh, mentioned in paragraph 10, which he says is part of some land that was allotted to him at the partition in 1909.

The lower Court has dismissed the suit in regard to the property specified in paragraphs Nos. 8, 9 (c) and (d) and 10 of the plaint, and passed a decree only for that mentioned in paragraph 9 (a) and (b). Both parties have appealed.

With regard to the claim for partition of the property specified in paragraph 8 of the plaint the defendant denied that this property was joint, and pleaded that the arbitrators' award in 1909 and the decree passed thereon estopped the plaintiff from alleging that any property other than that which was included in the award was joint, that the plaintiff had admitted, at the time of the partition that the property now claimed as joint was the defendant's exclusive property, and that he had abandoned his rights in respect of the property mentioned in clause (a) of paragraph 8.

The lower Court, without giving a finding as to whether the property mentioned in paragraph 8 is joint, has dismissed this portion of the claim on the ground that the plaintiff, not having included the property alleged to be joint in the claim which he made in 1909, is debarred from suing for it now, the matter being res judicata.

The learned Subordinate Judge is of opinion that the arbitrators were appointed in 1909 to partition the whole of the joint property, and not merely the specific property mentioned in the award. This is against the evidence of Mian Jamiat Singh, one of the arbitrators, who appears to be a disinterested witness and says that they were appointed only for the purpose of partitioning the property mentioned in the award, and that they had not to inquire whether there was other joint property. The agreement of the 13th June 1909, by which the parties referred the matter to arbitration, did not recite that the whole of the joint property was to be partitioned, while in the award given on the following day it was stated by the arbitrators in the preamble that they had been appointed to divide the joint property "given below." In any case it is clear that the arbitrators neither gave any adjudication nor made any inquiry about the existence of other joint property, and they were told nothing about the property mentioned in paragraph 8 of the plaint, so that we cannot agree with the lower Court that the award of 1909 operates as res judicata so as to bar the claim for partition of this property.

Mr. Sheo Narain on behalf of the respondent has in fact not tried to support the lower Court's finding on this point, but has argued that the plaintiff accepted the partition in 1909 as a partition of the whole of the joint property, that he did not wish to quarrel with his father, and considered some of the property to be not worth fighting for, and that so he dropped his claim to a share in the property specified in paragraph 8 of the plaint. In other words, it is argued that the plaintiff is estopped from suing for partition of this property by having waived his rights.

In the lower Court, however, waiver was not pleaded, except in regard to the property mentioned in clause (a) of paragraph 8 of the plaint, and the contention now put forward is not supported by evidence. The statement of Mian Jamiat Singh, the principal witness as to the partition in 1909, does not show that the plaintiff gave up his rights in any of the property. Mr. Sheo Narain lays stress on the fact that the plaintiff has not gone into the witness-box to explain when and how he came to know that the property was joint. But it was for the defendant to prove that the plaintiff had waived his rights, and waiver is not to be inferred from the plaintiff's omission to give evidence.

Some documents have been referred to as proof of admissions on the plaintiff's part. Only two relate to property included in paragraph 8 of the plaint, namely, (1) a notice—Exhibit D-15, dated the 8th September 1911, from the plaintiff's Pleader to the defendant (page 212 of the printed record), and (2) a receipt—Exhibit D-21, dated the 21st August 1910, executed by the plaintiff (page 217 of the record).

In these the houses mentioned in clauses (a) and (d), respectively, of paragraph 8 of the plaint are spoken of as the property of the defendant.

Now, in the first place, assuming that the houses in question were joint property, it has not been proved that the plaintiff knew them to be joint when the admissions were made, and in the absence of proof of such knowledge there could be no waiver. He might well have believed that the defendant, who was managing the property and receiving the rent, was the sole owner. In the second place, the admissions referred to above were gratuitous admissions which could be withdrawn [see Muhammad Imam Ali Khan v. Husain Khan (1)] and they do not create an estoppel, as they did not lead to any change in the defendant's position.

We find no evidence to prove that the plaintiff waived his rights in the property or is estopped from suing for partition.

It becomes necessary, therefore, to determine the issues relating to the alleged joint property which the lower Court has left undisposed of. Before dealing with the claim to the remainder of the property in suit we remand the case to the lower Court, under Order XLI, rule 25, Civil Procedure Code, for findings to be given on issues Nos. 8 and 10 to 14.

Case remanded.

Interest Act (XXXII of 1839), scope of—Interest, right to, in cases not covered by Act—Claim for unascertained amount due as plaintiff's share of trade—Interest awardable as damages—Rate of interest—Suit by Muhammadan sharer for his share of assets—Interest, right to.

The Interest Act is not exhaustive of all claims as to interest and it is open to the Courts in India to award interest in cases not coming within the purview of the Act, on principles of equity, justice and good conscience. [p. 507, col 1: p 508, col. 1.]

To attract the provisions of the Interest Act, the amount in dispute must be a debt or a certain sum payable at a certain time or otherwise. It has no application to an unascertained sum claimed as the profits of a trade. [p. 507, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the preliminary decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tuticorin, in Original Suit No. 70 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Rangachariar (with him Mr. C. R. Subramanya Aiyar), for the Appellants.—The plaintiff is not entitled to interest on her share of the partnership business carried on by her father. Under the Interest Act interest can be claimed only from the date of demand. Here there was no demand. See Kamalammal v. Peeru Meera (1), Subramania

(1) 20 M. 481; 7 M. L. J. 263; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 341.

Aiyar v. Subramania Aiyar (2) and Lala Kalyan Das v. Sheikh Maqbul Ahmad (3).

The claim here is for an unascertained amount and interest is not awardable. Marian Beeviammal v. Kadir Meera Sahib Taragan (4). Any claim for interest must come within the provisions of the Act and in matters outside the Act interest is not payable: see London, Chatham and Dover Railway Company v. South Eastern Railway Company (5).

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Ayangar (Advocate-General), for the Respondent.—The claim, it is true, is not governed by the Interest Act. But the Interest Act does not profess to cover all classes of cases. There is a proviso that interest shall be payable in all cases in which it is now payable in law.

The interest being claimed on an unascertained amount, interest might be awarded in the shape of damages. Indian Courts are not tied down by English precedents and are ordained to award interest on principles of equity and good conscience. The cases referred to by the appellants' Vakil are all cases under the Act.

The defendants have used the plaintiff's money and have derived profits and it is only fair that they should compensate plaintiff.

There is also a kind of quasi-fiduciary relationship between the plaintiff and her co heirs, the defendants, which justifies the plaintiff's claim for interest.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by a Mahommedan co-sharer for recovery of her share of her father's property from her brothers and sisters. The right of the plaintiff, who was a minor, to sue was denied in the Court below but has not been pressed before us. The only two points which Mr. T. Rangachariar argued were: (1) whether the plaintiff is entitled to mesne profits of the immoveable property and (2) whether she is entitled to interest upon her share of the assets of the partnership carried on by her father. On the first question it was pointed out to us that in the Court below there was no allegation that mesne profits were not payable. There is no issue upon the point, and there is no discussion in the judgment of the Court below about it. Issue No. 6 assumes that the plaintiff was entitled to mesne profits and only raises the question of the deductions claimed by the defendants in their written statement. Under these circumstances we refused to allow the learned Vakil to argue that point before us.

The second question has been argued elaborately by Mr. Rangachariar for the appellants and by the learned Advocate-General for the respondent. We have come to the conclusion that the decree of the Court below is right, though not for the reasons given by it. It is clear from the admissions in the written statement and from the evidence in the case that the share of the plaintiff in the firm's assets was utilised by the 1st and 2nd defendants in the trade carried on by them and that profits were derived from that trade; the amount of profits alone had not been ascertained. The learned Vakil for the appellant relied upon Kamalammal v. Peeru Meera (1), Subramania Aiyar v. Subramania Aiyar (2) and Lala Kalyan Das v. Sheikh Maqbul Ahmad (3) and the earlier Madras cases and contended that, as no notice of demand was made, no interest was allowable under Act XXXII of 1839. All of them were cases under the Act. In the first place, it must be pointed out that the Interest Act is not comprehensive of all claims to interest. Without going into details, it may be mentioned that the object of 3 and 4 William IV, Chapter 42, section 28, which was extended to India by Act XXXII of 1839, was to repeal the Usury Laws relating to interest. Prior to the enactment of 3 and 4 William IV, there was a law in the reign of Edward the Confessor which absolutely prohibited Courts from awarding interest in suits upon moneys lent. Attempts were made in the reign of Henry VIII to mitigate the rigour of this prohibition. 3 and 4 William IV, Chapter 42, was enacted with a view to meet such a demand. It is clear from the language of the Act that the provisions dealt with only a particular class of cases, and enabled the Courts to give interest at the current rate under certain conditions. The framers were anxious that the right to interest, if any, otherwise possessed should not be interfered with by this enactment, and inserted the proviso to the effect that interest shall be payable "in all cases in which it is now payable by law." In India also, ancient texts can be quoted to show that there was a prohibition against the taking of interest on moneys lent. One text of Manu exemplifies the abhorrence felt by the ancient sages on this question. Manu stated: "Neither a Brahmin nor a Kshatria, though distressed, must receive interest on loans but each of them, if he please, may pay a small interest permitted by law, on borrowing for some pious use, to the sinful man who demands it." See Colebrooke's Digest, page 28. It looks as if when 3 and 4 William IV was extended to India, these provisions contained in the Hindu Law were kept in mind. It is, therefore, clear that the Interest Act is not exhaustive of the subject.

There is another difficulty in the way of applying the Interest Act to the present case. To attract its provisions the amount in dispute must be a debt or a certain sum payable at a certain time or otherwise. What is claimed now is a sum of money which, on taking accounts, would be payable to the plaintiff as her share. It was held in Omrita Nath Mitter v. Administrator General of Bengal (6) that unless the amount is settled the Act is not applicable. In London, Chatham and Dover Ry. Co., v. South Eastern Railway Company (7) a claim to payment under a building contract to be paid monthly on the certificate of the engineer was held not to be a debt or a sum certain if the amount was disputed. See also Hill v. South Staffordshire Ry. (8). In Ward v. Eyre (9) it was held that a balance of account is not a sum certain within 3 and 4 William IV, Chapter 42. The Calcutta High Court in Rutnessur Biswas v. Hurish Chunder Bose (10) acted on the same principle. Therefore the Interest Act has no application to the case before us, and consequently the decisions relied on by the learned Vakil for the appellant have no bearing on the matter we have to decide. On the other hand, the cases to which the learned Advocate-General drew our attention establish that the Act was not intended to affect payments of interest or compensation in matters not coming strictly within the letter of the law. In Miller v. Barlow (11) the Judicial Committee point out that Indian Courts are Courts both of law and of equity and that they can award as damages interest not covered by the Act. In Hurropersaud Roy v. Shamapersaud Roy (12) a similar principle was enunciated by the Judicial Committee. In Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (13), which was a case of dower, the Judicial Committee, after saying that the Interest Act was not applicable, allowed interest as damages. See also Ahmed Musaji Saleji v. Hashim Ebrahim Saleji (14), another decision of the Judicial Committee. There are decisions of the High Courts in which interest was allowed apart from the Act. Alagappa Chettiar v. Muthukumara Chettiar (15), Abdul Rahiman v. Rangiah Gounden (16), Khetra Mohan Poddar v. Aswini Kumar Saha (17), Mohamaya Prosad Singh v. Ram Khelawan Singh (18), Chaimal Das v. Brij Bhukan Lal (19) and Collector of Ahmedabad v. Lavji Mulji (20). Mr. Rangachariar contended that the above cases proceeded upon the principle that there was an established practice as to interest regarding the matter dealt with in them, and that the principle should not be extended to the case of a Mahomedan lady claiming interest on an unascertained sum of money due to her as her share of the trade. We fail to see any difference in principle between the cases to which we have referred and to the case now before us. The only decision which supports Mr. Rangachariar is Marian Beeviammal v. Madir Keera Sahib Taragan (4). In that case there has been no discussion on the question and the reference to the earning of interest shows that the decision should be confined to the facts of the case. The learned Vakil for the appellant relied very strongly upon the observations of the noble and learned Lords in London, Chatham and Dover Railway Company v. South Eastern Railway Company (5) for the proposition that in matters outside the Interest Act no interest is payable. The noble Lords who took part in the discussion, especially Lord Herschell, point out that there has been a course of decisions in England which tied the hands of Courts from awarding interest on equitable grounds; and they regretted that they were obliged on the principle of stare decisis to decline to re-open the question. There is no such course of decisions in this country. On the other hand, the Privy Council held very early that on principles of equity, justice and good conscience, which are specially referred to in the Civil Courts Act, the Courts in India are at liberty to award interest in cases not coming within the purview of the Interest Act. The Indian Courts have followed this rule for a long time. The Courts in this country, therefore, are not hampered in the exercise of their equity jurisdiction in the same way that English Courts have been.

It is not necessary, therefore, to refer to another argument of the learned Advocate General which rested the claim to interest upon the existence of a quasi-fiduciary relationship between the plaintiff and her brothers. We think the Subordinate Judge is right in allowing interest. But, in our opinion, he ought not to have allowed more than 6 per cent. The current rate of interest in this country is ordinarily that, and no special reason has been shown why it should be raised to 9 per cent. The analogy of the Trusts Act, section 23, to which the learned Advocate-General referred us, has no bearing on the present question and we are not prepared to allow compound interest at 6 per cent. The interest allowed will be reduced to 6 per cent. throughout. Subject to this modification we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 5—Court-fee payable on memorandum of appeal—Taxing Officer, decision by—Division Bench, whether can re-open question of valuation.

The terms of section 5 of the Court Fees Act are imperative and the decision of the Taxing Officer under that section as to the proper fee payable upon a memorandum of appeal is final, and before the appeal is admitted, a Division Bench of the High Court has no jurisdiction to re-open the valuation of the appeal. [p. 509, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Monghyr.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick, B. C. Mitter, Rai T. N. Sahai and N. N. Sen, for the Appellant.

The Government Advocate, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—This is a case which has been placed before this Division Bench for orders under Order XLI of the Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiff-appellant before this Court having failed to pay the Court-fees asked by the Registrar upon her memorandum of appeal. The plaint in the suit was rejected by the trial Court on the ground that it was insufficiently stamped and the appeal is directed against that order.

The Registrar of this Court, who has been empowered under the Court Fees Act to exercise the powers of Taxing Officer for the purposes of section 5 of the Act, has held that the valuation made by the trial Court is correct and that the appellant must pay an ad valorem fee calculated according to section 7, clause 4 of the Act.

It is contended by the learned Vakil for the appellant that the Taxing Officer's order is not final for the purpose of section 5, because the one and only question for decision in the appeal is the question of valuation. It is contended that in such a case the Taxing Officer has no jurisdiction to assess a fee higher than that paid in the Court below or to determine the class under which the suit falls, because by doing so he practically tries the appeal.

The terms of section 5, however, are imperative and contain no restrictions on the power of the Taxing Officer. On the contrary the Act seems to contemplate that the Taxing Officer is bound to determine what is the proper fee payable upon the memorandum of appeal and that the order shall be final, unless and until the Appeal Court makes an order of remand in which event the appellant will be entitled to a refund of the excess paid by him.

It has been held in this Court in the case of Lagan Bari Kuer v. Khakhan Singh (1) that when the Taxing Officer has made his order, the Division Bench has no jurisdiction to re open the valuation before the appeal is admitted.

As has been pointed out by the learned Government Advocate, the effect of our holding otherwise would be that in the present case the appellant could obtain a decision upon the merits of his appeal without ever paying the full Court fee if he was so minded.

The Court Fees Act being a fiscal enactment, its language must be construed in its popular sense and I think the valuation of the Taxing Officer is to be taken as final, whenever there is no express authority to the contrary. The appellant being unable to pay the Court-fee demanded, the memorandum of appeal is rejected under Order XLI, rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Code.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 are the appellants in this second appeal. The 4th defendant is the purchaser in Court-auction sale of the plaint property, which belonged to the plaintiff's father, who died before 1913. The decree in execution of which the sale took place, was a Small Cause decree passed in a suit of 1913 brought against the plaintiff's father's brother as 2nd defendant, he being impleaded as the legal representative of the plaintiff's father Seethayya, who was then dead. The 2nd defendant was divided from plaintiff's father and he was not the real legal representative of plaintiff's father, the minor plaintiff being such representative. The question is whether the Court auction sale is binding on the plaintiff.

In paragraph 6 of the plaint it is alleged that the 2nd defendant was not only not the heir of the plaintiff's father, but that the plaint property was never in the possession of the 2nd defendant after the plaintiff's father's death. These allegations in the plaint were not expressly denied in the appellants' written statements. The learned Vakil for the appellants relied, among other decisions, on the decision of Napier, J., and myself in Gnanambal Ammal v. Veerasami Chetty (1). There a decree had been passed against a person in possession of the property of the deceased debtor, though that person was not the heir of the debtor. We held that if the plaintiff in good faith obtained a decree against a person who was in possession of his debtor's property and whom the plaintiff believed to be the legal heir, execution proceedings taken in pursuance of that decree will bind the real heir. We held that the cases in General Manager of the Raj Durbhunga v. Maharajah Coomar Ramaput Sing (2) and Rimasawmi Chettiar v. Oppilamani Chetti (3) supported our view as also the new definition of "legal representative" found in section 2, clause 11 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908). I might also refer to Bissessur Lall Sahoo v. Luchmessur Singh (4) and Ishan Chunder Mitter v. Buksh Ali Soudagur (5). The case of a decree passed in a suit brought against a person in possession but who is not the heir of the deceased debtor's estate, must, of course, be treated as an exception to the general rule that proceedings in execution of a decree do not bind the interest of any person who was never brought on the record as a party to the proceedings in the suit. [see Kishen Chunder Ghose v. Musammat Ashoorun (6) as regards the general rule.] The decisions dealing with suits which had been instituted against a debtor before his death but were continued after his death till decree or after the decree in execution proceedings with the wrong person on record as legal representative are irrelevant for the consideration of the plaint before us, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Khiarajmal v. Daim (7). In the present case defendants Nos. 3 and 4 contested the plaintiff's claim, not on the ground that the 2nd defendant was in possession of the plaint property and hence might be taken as the plaintiff's father's legal representative in some sense, but on the ground that the decree was passed for a debt of the plaintiff's father and hence is binding on the plaintiff, the question who was sued as plaintiff's father's legal representative or against whom the decree was obtained as such being immaterial according to the contention put forward by the appellants. I think such a contention cannot be supported, having regard to the decision in Khiarajmal v. Daim (7). [See also Madhayarayudu v. Subbamma (8).]

I would, therefore, dismiss the second appeal with plaintiff's costs.

SPENCER, J.—I agree.

Appeal—Abatement—Joint decree—Death of one respondent—Failure to bring legal representatives of deceased on record, effect of.

Certain proprietors of a village obtained a decree declaratory of the right of all the proprietors to obtain a share in certain land. A second appeal was filed in the Chief Court, and it appeared that, before the filing of the appeal, one of the proprietor decree-holders had died, but, owing to the default of the appellants, no notice of the appeal was served on his representatives. It was contended that the appeal had abated in its entirety, while for the appellants it was urged that the appeal had abated only with respect to the share of deceased decree-holder:

Held, that the appeal had abated in its entirety, inasmuch as, even if it were accepted, the decree which was in favour of the proprietors jointly could not stand against only one of them.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 27th August 1917.

Mr. Kharak Singh, for the Appellants.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case, so far as it is necessary to detail them for the purposes of this appeal, are as follows: In the village of Dhakla there is a Pana known as Pana Ugam in which there are four Thullas, namely, Thullas Mughlan, Madhawan, Raghawan and Bhagwan. The land in suit measuring about $8\frac{1}{2}$ bighas pukhta, was claimed by the proprietors of Thullas Mughlan and Madhawan as belonging to the whole of the proprietors of Pana Ugam, whereas the proprietors of Thullas Raghawan and Bhagwan claimed that they alone were entitled to any interest in the said land. The proprietors of the Thullas Mughlan and Madhawan instituted a suit against the proprietors of the other two Thullas asking for a declaration that all the proprietors in Pana Ugam were entitled to a share in this land. The trial Court granted the plaintiffs a decree as prayed, and an appeal by the defendants was rejected by the learned District Judge. The defendants, who are the proprietors in Thullas Raghawan and Bhagwan, then preferred this second appeal through Sardar Kharak Singh which was admitted by me on the 4th of January 1918.

On the 10th June 1918 Sardar Kharak Singh filed an application under Order XXII, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code, in which he alleged that one Sheo Narain, one of the respondents, had died some five months previously and asked for his sons to be brought on to the record as his representatives in the appeal. The application was granted subject to all just exceptions and the case came up before me on the 30th July 1918, on which date it was discovered that notice to the sons of Sheo Narain had not issued owing to the fact that neither Sardar Kharak Singh nor his client had filed any process-fee. An adjournment was granted, but in my order adjourning the case I noted that Mr. Manohar Lal for the respondents stated that he had been informed that Sheo Narain had died some eight months before the application was made. Mr. Manohar Lal has to-day filed before me a certified copy of the death certificate of Sheo Narain, the correctness of which has not been challenged by Sardar Kharak Singh. According to this, Sheo Narain died on the 20th of October 1917, and his death was duly reported on the 28th of the same month. It will thus be seen that Sheo Narain had died before this second appeal was filed in this Court.

On behalf of the respondents Mr. Manohar Lal contended that the appeal abated in its entirety. Sardar Kharak Singh referred me to Gulsher Khan v. Mashuq Ali Khan (1) and Piyare Lal v. Chura Mani (2) and contended that the appeal had not abated at all, or that if it had abated, it had abated only as against Sheo Narain and his representatives. Neither of the cases cited by the learned Counsel afford him any assistance. It is obvious that the decree, so far as Sheo Narain's representatives were concerned, must stand. That decree is to the effect that the proprietors of the whole Pana Ugam are entitled to the land in suit and not only the proprietors of the defendants-appellants' Thullas. In these circumstances even if the appeal were accepted the decree, so far as Sheo Narain's sons are concerned, could not be set aside, and, therefore, I hold that the appeal has abated in its entirety.

Mr. Kharak Singh then contended that his clients did not know of the death of Sheo Narain. It has been held more than once that ignorance of the death of a respondent or a party is no excuse. As to this see Sayad Mir Nawab v. Hardeo (3) cited by Mr. Manohar Lal and Hadu v. Lala (4). I, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Mortgage—Redemption, partial, whether permissible—Mortgage, splitting up of, effect of.

A purchaser of a portion of the equity of redemption who has been left out of a mortgage action, is entitled to claim partial redemption, and may also be compelled to redeem that portion of the mortgaged property in which he may be interested. [p. 512, col. 2.]

The general rule that a person who has any right to redeem has a right to redeem the whole of the mortgaged property and not a part of it, unless there is a special bargain, is subject to the exception that he has a right to redeem his own share only, where a mortgagee has acquired, in whole or in part the share of the mortgagor. The rule would not apply where the integrity of the mortgage is broken up, as where the equity of redemption is with two different persons. [p. 512, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Officiating District Judge, Saran, dated the 28th March 1918, affirming that of the 3rd Munsif's Court, Chupra, dated the 8th August 1917.

Messrs. Lakshmi Narayan Singh and Nawal Kishore Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Rajendra Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 9th September 1908, plaintiff's father obtained a mortgage decree against one Mahabir. In that litigation the appellant, the purchaser of a portion of the mortgaged property in execution of a money decree in 1906, was not impleaded as a party defendant. On the 11th January 1917, the respondent commenced the action out of which this appeal arises against the appellant for possession of that portion of the mortgaged properties which had passed into the possession of the appellant by virtue of the execution sale held in pursuance of the money decree obtained in 1906. The appellant, in answer to the plaintiff's action, claims the right to redeem the whole of the mortgaged property, and not merely that part of it which is in his possession, and the substantial question which I have to determine in this appeal is whether a purchaser of a portion of the equity of redemption who has been left out of the mortgage action, can be compelled to redeem only that portion of the mortgaged properties which have passed into his possession by such purchase.

It may be conceded that a person, who has any right to redeem, has a right to redeem the whole of the mortgaged property, and not a part of it, unless there is a special bargain. Hall v. Heward (1). But an important exception has been engrafted on this general rule, namely, that a person has a right to redeem his own share only where a mortgagee has acquired, in whole or in part, the share of the mortgagor. The general rule is, of course, based on the principle that a mortgage is one and indivisible, and that the property comprised in it is in its entirety security for the entire debt and for every part of it; but the general rule cannot obviously apply when the integrity of the mortgage is broken up. In the case before me the plaintiff, who is the mortgagee, has acquired the entire share of the mortgagor, except such share which passed to the defendant by his purchase. The equity of redemption is now in two different persons, namely, the plaintiff and the defendant, with this result that the integrity of the mortgage security is broken up. In such circumstances, it is well settled that a purchaser of a portion of the equity of redemption is clearly entitled to claim partial redemption. See Hari Kissen Bhagat v. Veliat Hossein (2), Gangadas Bhattar v. Jogendra Nath Mitter (3) and Hamida Bibi v. Ahmad Hussain (4). In my opinion, whenever a person is entitled to claim partial redemption, he may also be compelled to redeem that portion of the mortgaged properties in which he may be interested. If this were not so, it would require two litigations to work out the equities between the parties. If the defendant were entitled to redeem the whole of the mortgaged property, he would have a charge on the share of his co-mortgagor (in this case, the plaintiff, in whom has vested the remaining interest of the mortgagor) as security for the amount which he has paid in excess of his own proportionate share of the mortgage debt The defendant, in this case, says: "I have a right to redeem the whole of the mortgaged property and I claim the right to redeem the whole of the mortgaged property." To this, the plaintiff has a right to reply as follows: "Very well, redeem the whole of the mortgaged property, but I claim the right to pay my proportionate share of the mortgage debt and retain the property which I have purchased, free from any charge." It was exactly to meet a case like this that the last paragraph of section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act was enacted. As the learned Judges in the case of Sobha Sah v. Inderjeet (5) said: "The whole estate, as to one portion of the property, has merged in the mortgagee, and the mortgagor, if compelled to redeem by payment of the whole debt, would have to sue the mortgagee for contribution afterwards, and thus by two suits between the same parties attain the result which under the law as above interpreted is now attained by one suit."

In my judgment, the lower Appellate Court has taken an entirely correct view of the law. I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 1st February 1918, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, Tahsil Mohanlalganj, dated the 21st August 1917.

Mr. St. C. Thompson, for the Appellant.

Mr. Rajeshri Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal in a suit for cancellation of a sale deed on the ground of fraud. The first Court dismissed the suit on merits. The plaintiff appealed to the lower Appellate Court, on the ground mainly that the appellant had not been given an adequate opportunity to produce his witnesses. The learned District Judge dismissed the appeal on the ground that after the filing of the suit the appellant had, by his conduct, elected to affirm the contract of sale in question and to act upon it and that he was, therefore, debarred from obtaining a decree for its cancellation. This position has not been controverted in argument before me. The learned Counsel for the appellant has confined his argument to suggesting that the facts relied on by the District Judge do not constitute an affirmation of the contract.

The present suit was filed on the 11th May 1917. The contract in suit was a sale of the equity of redemption in a 4 annas out of an 8-anna share held by the plaintiff Chauhan, in favour of the defendant Bihari Lal, in order to induce the latter to finance a suit for redemption of the property. The fraud alleged by the plaintiff was that the defendant had an interest in the mortgagee rights and had got a sale-deed from him with a deliberate design of not bringing the promised redemption suit but of allowing the right of redemption to become time barred. Six days later on 17th May 1917 before intimation of the filing of the present suit had been given to him the defendant filed his redemption suit, including the name of the present plaintiff Chauhan among the array of defendants. The plaintiff thereupon put in a petition stating that he also had a right in the equity of redemption and asking to be joined with Bihari Lal, a co-plaintiff. This application was allowed and the redemption suit was afterwards fought out by the two as co-plaintiffs.

A more unequivocal adoption of the contract could hardly be imagined. The appellant's Counsel suggests that because the plaintiff was made a defendant in the suit he was under some sort of compulsion to apply to be made plaintiff. This argument will not hold water for a moment. The defendant in suing for redemption was bound by the terms of Order XXXIV, rule 1, to make him a party as the equity of redemption in half the mortgaged share admittedly remained with him, but the appellant was under no sort of compulsion to recognise the defendant's title. He could perfectly well have said that the sale in favour of the defendant had been procured by fraud, that he had sued to rescind it and that the defendant was not entitled to bring the suit. He could then have asked to have the two suits tried together or the decision of the redemption suit postponed until the issue of fraud had been decided. Moreover, when once the redemption suit was filed, there was an end of the fraud which the defendant was supposed to have meditated. As soon as the plaintiff had joined him as co-plaintiff, the respondent was justified in going on with the suit in the full confidence that his title to do so would no longer be questioned and the respondent would be placed in a position of manifest disadvantage if the appellant were allowed to resile from that position now. The decision of the learned District Judge is clearly correct and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MISCELLANEOUS CIVIL APPEAL No. 259 OF 1918.

Sheikh ABDUL RAHIM—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

GUJESHAR MAHTO AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND JADU THAKUR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, r. 90—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 174, scope of—Rent-decree against two persons—Execution of decree against one judgment-debtor—Sale of holding—Application to set aside sale by other judgment-debtor, nature of.

Plaintiff and defendant A held a holding jointly. Defendant B, the landlord of the holding, obtained a rent-decree against plaintiff and defendant A and in execution of that decree against the latter alone brought the entire holding to sale. Defendant C purchased the holding at the sale. Plaintiff thereupon brought a suit to have the sale set aside. His plaint was treated as an application under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and the sale was set aside. Defendant C appealed, contending that plaintiff had no right to make an application under section 47 of the Code, as he was not a party to the execution proceedings, and that his remedy was to apply either under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act or under Order XXI, rule 90 of the Civil Procedure Code, to set aside the sale:

Held, that section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code does not require that a person making an application thereunder should be a party to the execution proceedings, but requires that he must be a party to the suit in which the decree is passed, and as plaintiff was a party to the suit he was competent to make the application. [p. 515, col. 2.]

Section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and Order XXI, rule 90 of the Civil Procedure Code, are of limited scope and application, and an application which raises questions as to the execution of a decree, clearly beyond their scope ought to be dealt with under section 47 of the Code. [p. 515, col. 2]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Mozaffarpur, dated the 28th May 1918.

Mr. Abani Bhusan Mukherji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gour Chandra Pal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—This is an appeal against the order of the District Judge of Mozaffarpur, dated the 28th of May 1918, confirming the order of the Munsif, dated the 28th of July 1917.

The plaintiff and the defendant 4th party held jointly a holding, which originally belonged to the former but by transfer a portion thereof came into the possession of the latter. The defendant 2nd party is the landlord of the holding and obtained a rent decree against the plaintiff and the defendant 4th party and in execution against the defendant 4th party only brought the entire holding to sale. Defendant 1st party, who is the appellant before us, purchased that holding at the auction-sale. The plaintiff thereupon brought a regular suit with the main object of having the sale set aside. The suit was decreed but on appeal to the District Judge it was held that the suit was barred by the provisions of section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and the case was remanded to the trying Court with a direction to treat the plaint as an application under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and to dispose of it. The parties agreed to this course. On remand, the Munsif set aside the sale, holding that the decree-holder had illegally omitted the plaintiff from the list of the judgment debtors in the execution proceeding, and that he had not served any of the processes required under the law for the attachment and the sale of property in execution of the decree. He also held that the processes were suppressed by the decree-holder in collusion with the Court peon.

Defendant No. 1 appealed to the District Judge. The aforesaid findings of fact were not challenged, but the mere contention in appeal was that the respondent had no right to make an application under section 47 of the Code, and that his remedy was to apply for setting aside the sale either under section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, or Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code. The learned District Judge overruled this contention and dismissed the appeal. The contention has been repeated before us in this second appeal The only question, therefore, before us for decision is whether the application of the respondent comes under section 47 or not.

The ground urged in support of the contention is that the respondent was not a party to the execution proceedings and, as section 47 relates only to execution proceedings, he has no right to apply under section 47. The learned Vakil for the appellant has obviously overlooked the provisions of section 47, which do not require that a person making an application under that section should be a party to the execution proceedings. All that the section requires is that he must be "a party to the suit in which the decree was passed" The plaintiff respondent was impleaded as defendant along with defendants 4th party in the rent suit in which the joint decree in question was passed. There is, therefore, no force in this contention, which is overruled.

The next ground urged has been that section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and Order XXI, rule 90, of the Code of Civil Procedure bar the present application of the respondent from being entertained under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. There does not appear to be much substance in this contention also. Both the aforesaid provisions of law have limited scope and application and afford speedy remedy to the judgment-debtor or any person affected by the sale to have the sale set aside either upon deposit made within a certain period from the date of the sale or on showing that there had been material "irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting the sale" and consequent substantial injury. The application in this case is certainly of a more far-reaching character and although some of the grounds upon which the sale is impugned are covered by the aforesaid provisions in section 174 and Order XXI, rule 90, still there are other grounds which clearly raise questions as to the execution of the decree and which are beyond the scope of the aforesaid sections. One of the principal grounds is that though the plaintiff-respondent was a judgment debtor and was interested in the holding, he was not made a party in the execution proceedings and the entire holding including his interest could not be sold in the execution of the decree against him and the defendant 4th party. Another important objection to the sale was that no notice was served on the plaintiff respondent as required by law, particularly, notice under Order XXI, rule 66, Civil Procedure Code These latter objections cannot possibly come under Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code, or section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I, therefore, agree with the view taken by the Courts below that the application was properly dealt with under section 47.

It has been also urged that the question raised by the application of the respondent is not between the parties to the suit, inasmuch as the appellant is an auction-purchaser and he was not a party to the suit. The application does not at all raise any question subsequent to the sale but the objections of the respondent as to the sale relate to the proceedings adopted by the decree-holder regarding the execution of the decree and the manner in which the property was brought to sale. The real dispute, therefore, is between the decree-holder and the respondent, both of whom were parties to the suit; and as the sale was being impugned, the auction purchaser who purchased the property at the sale was also made a party to the present proceedings. This contention also must, therefore, be overruled. The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Carriage of goods by railway—Risk Note, Form B—Liability of railway, extent of—Wilful neglect or theft by railway servants, proof of—Burden of proof—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 103.

Where goods are booked for conveyance by a railway under Risk Note, Form B, and, in consideration of a special reduced rate being charged, the consignor agrees to hold the Railway Administration harmless for any loss except for loss of a complete consignment or complete package due to the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration or to theft by or wilful neglect of its servants, it being provided that wilful neglect would not include robbery from a running train, then, in the absence of proof of wilful neglect or theft by the railway servants, the Administration is free from responsibility. If neglect or theft is proved, the Administration will escape liability for loss if proof is given of robbery from a running train, etc. [p. 516, col. 2.]

Where the plaintiff alleges wilful neglect or theft by railway servants, under section 103 of the Evidence Act it lies on him to give proof of the fact. [p. 516, col. 2.]

Application against the decision of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Ahmedabad, in Suit No. 419 of 1917.

Mr. Coltman, instructed by Messrs. Crawford, Bayley & Co, for the Applicant.

Mr. N. K Mehta, for the Opponents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs shipped on the Bombay, Baroda & Central India Railway some 23 bales of cloth under a Risk Note, Form B, from Ahmedabad to Calcutta. The cloth was loaded in a closed waggon which was sealed. It was the duty of the Guard to examine the seals at every station. He went round the train at Ankleshwar and gave a certificate that all was right. At Surat, the next station at which the train stopped, one of the doors of the waggon was found to be open and one of the plaintiffs' bales was missing. Some of the cloths from the bale were subsequently discovered to have been sold by an inhabitant of Mitali, four miles on the Surat side of Ankleshwar. He was convicted and sentenced, but at the trial there was no finding that any railway servant took any part in the theft of the cloths. Under the Risk Note, in consideration of a special reduced rate being charged, the consignor agreed to hold the Railway Administration harmless for any loss except for loss of a complete consignment or complete package due to the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration or to theft by or wilful neglect of its servants. Provided that wilful neglect was not to be held to include robbery from a running train.

The learned Judge, after recording evidence, observed that there was absolutely no evidence to prove that there was any theft from the train; but no doubt the bale was stolen and the goods must have found their way out but there was no evidence to prove that the bale was lost whilst the train was running. He, therefore, held the defendants had failed to prove the theft from the running train and passed a decree for the plaintiffs for the amount claimed.

This judgment shows confusion as to the terms of the Risk Note.

In the absence of proof of wilful neglect or theft by the railway servants the Administration is to be held free from responsibility If, however, neglect or theft by railway servants is proved, the Administration will escape liability for loss if proof is given of robbery from a running train, etc. The plaintiffs wish the Court to believe that there was wilful neglect or theft by railway servants, it, therefore, lies on the plaintiffs under section 103 of the Indian Evidence Act to give proof of the fact. This they have not done and no question is reached of robbery from a running train.

This conclusion accords with the decision of the Allahabad High Court in East Indian Railway Company v. Nathmall Behari Lal (1).

We set aside the decree and dismiss the suit with all costs on the plaintiffs.

The fact that an Appellate Court does not take notice of a question not raised in the memorandum of appeal, cannot be said to vitiate its decision by any error or defect in procedure within the meaning of section 100, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 518, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 618 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Mayavaram, in Original Suit No. 456 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. T. V. Venkatarama Aiyar and C. R. Subramania Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The defendant was entitled to compensation before eviction at least under section 2 of Act XI of 1855. The words 'other absolute estate' in the section include a permanent lessee.

The suit was bad for want of a notice to quit. Municipal Corporation of Bombay v. Secretary of State (1). Though the point was not taken in the lower Courts, it raises a question of law and can be urged in second appeal.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopala Chariar, for the Respondents.—Act XI of 1855 does not apply to cases tried in the Mofussil. No compensation can be claimed by the lessee. He is only entitled to remove the materials.

As to want of notice the point was not raised in the lower Courts. The High Court is not bound to consider it in second appeal.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant is the appellant. He obtained a permanent lease of a house site from the trustee of a religious trust in 1911. The successor in the trusteeship brought this suit in 1915 to eject him. That the permanent lease is invalid against the trust cannot be denied and though the 2nd ground in the appeal memorandum contends that it is valid against the trust, the point was not seriously argued [see Palaniappa Chetty v.

(1) 29 B. 580 at p. 588; 7 Bom. L. R. 27.

Sreemath Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (2)].

The next contention was that the defendant, who has built a house on the leased site, is entitled to compensation before his evictment and is not merely entitled to be allowed to remove the materials of the house (which he has been allowed to do by the decrees of the lower Courts). Mr. T. V. Venkatarama Aiyar conceded that he cannot rely on section 51 of Act IV of 1882 (Transfer of Property Act) in support of his claim to compensation [see on this point our judgment in Perumal Gramani v. Mahamad Kasim Sahib (3)].

He, however, relied on section 2 of Act XI of 1855 (Mesne Profits and Improvements Act). That Act applies only to cases tried on the Original Side of the High Courts to which English Law applies and even in such cases, we are not, as at present advised, prepared to agree with certain obiter dicta quoted by Mr. T. V. Venkatarama Aiyar that the words "other absolute estate" in section 2 of Act XI of 1855 include the estate of a lessee with permanent occupancy rights.

Lastly, it was contended that the plaint does not allege that the tenancy from year to year created by payment of rent [see Municipal Corporation of Bombay v. Secretary of State (1)] had been put an end to by a proper notice to quit and that, therefore, the suit should be dismissed as not disclosing a complete cause of action in ejectment.

It may be conceded that though this point was not taken in the lower Courts, this Court even in second appeal can allow the point to be taken and argued and can decide the case on that point [see Subba v. Nagappa (4) and Abdulla Rawutan v. Subbarayyar (5)]. But we do not think we are bound to consider it and to decide this second appeal on a point not taken in the lower Courts. In Subba v. Nagappa (4) the tenant had been in possession from 1869 and the case was finally decided against the tenant on the finding submitted after remand that reasonable notice had been given.

In Abdulla Rawutan v. Subbarayyar (5) also, the tenants had long been in possession and though the suit was remanded for a finding, the ultimate result of the case is not known.

We do not think that these cases decide that we are bound in second appeal to consider a ground of defence not taken in the lower Courts, unless perhaps it is a question of limitation arising out of proved or admitted facts.

Order XLI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, says: "The appellant shall not, except by leave of the Court, urge or be heard in support of any ground of objection not set forth in the memorandum of appeal but the Appellate Court...shall not be confined to the grounds set forth, etc."

Now no ground of objection was set forth in the appeal memorandum presented to the lower Appellate Court on the question of want of notice and it was not argued there. The lower Appellate Court, therefore, was not bound to take the point itself and its decision on the grounds argued before it is correct. The defendant in this case obtained his lease only 4 or 5 years before this suit was brought and though we are entitled to consider the question of want of notice and to remand the suit for getting findings on the facts relating to that question after, if necessary, allowing plaintiff to amend his plaint, we do not think we are bound in second appeal to do more than decide whether the lower Appellate Court's decision was wrong in having been contrary to law, etc., or failed to determine an issue of law, etc., or vitiated by substantial error or defect in procedure (section 100 of the Civil Procedure Code). If the lower Appellate Court was not bound to take notice of a question not raised in the appeal memorandum presented to it, it cannot be said that its decision was vitiated by any errors in procedure or defect in determination of points which it was bound to have considered.

We do not think that, on the facts found in this case, our discretion should be exercised in favour of the question of want of notice being allowed to be raised and argued before us.

In the result, the second appeal is dismissed with costs. Three months' time from Pakka adatia, position of - Suit by pakka adatia against principal—Contract, breach of—Damages—Interest, whether can be claimed.

A pakka adatia can at will become a principal to enforce any contract which has been entrusted to him as agent by his original principal against that principal, and, when he sues relying upon his character as principal, his claim differs in no respect from that upon an ordinary contract between two principals and he is entitled to demand interest upon the amount which he claims as ordinary damages for breach of contract.

Mr. J. D. Davar (with him Mr. Desai), for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Strangman, Advocate General (with him Mr. R. D. N. Wadia), for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—The only point in controversy here is whether the plaintiff is entitled to interest on the amount claimed. The answer to that depends upon what is claimed. Is this damages or is it money paid by an agent on account of his principal? Clearly it is damages. A pakka adatia, as settled by the law of this Court, can at will become a principal to enforce any contract which has been entrusted to him as agent by his original principal against that principal. I have frequently commented upon the legal anomalies involved in this entirely new and unique legal entity. But in this Presidency at any rate we must take it as we find it. When, then, a pakka adatia sues, as in the present case, relying upon his character not as agent but as principal and thereby deliberately protects himself against inquiries which ordinarily are made about the amounts he has actually expended as agent on behalf of his principal, it is, I think, too plain to admit of argument that the claim differs in no respect from that upon an ordinary contract between two principals. It cannot be said that the damages claimed are liquidated damages, because by the assertion of his privileged character as pakka adatia the Court cannot go behind the rate fixed by the original contract and the rate prevailing at date of breach. Viewed in any light, therefore, it ceases to be arguable that a pakka adatia suing in that legal character can demand interest upon the amount which is thus claimed as ordinary damages for breach of contract. This, I believe, is the first time that the point has been definitely raised, and that is the only reason why I have thought it necessary to state the simple, almost self-evident, reason for deciding it as I do.

There will, therefore, be a decree for the plaintiff for Rs. 1,06,102 and costs and interest on judgment at 6 per cent. per annum.

Suit decreed.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 36, 37—'Court,' 'void,' meanings of—Transfer by insolvent—Fraudulent preference—Sale by Official Receiver—Suit by alienee of insolvent impugning sale—Validity of transaction, whether open as defence—Annulment of transfer—Insolvency Court, exclusive jurisdiction of.

The expression 'the Court' in section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act signifies the Court exercising jurisdiction under that Act. [p. 520, col. 2.]

The word 'void' in section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act means 'voidable.' [p. 521, cols. 1 & 2.]

A special statutory provision whereby District Courts and other Courts are invested by notification of the Local Government under section 3 (1) of th

Provincial Insolvency Act with the power, among other powers, of invalidating certain defined transactions of insolvents, should not be extended to all Courts of original jurisdiction, whether notified under the Act or not. [p. 521, col. 1.]

No Court has the jurisdiction to annul, as such, a transfer amounting to a fraudulent preference or a voluntary transfer made within two years of an adjudication, except a Court exercising insolvency jurisdiction in proceedings which have been instituted to declare the debtor, who made the transfer, insolvent by a petition duly presented under the Act. [p. 520, col. 2; p. 521, col 1.]

It is only the Official Receiver who can set the Court in motion to annul a transfer under section 36 or section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. [p. 521, col. 1.]

T. 4 should not be extended so as to enable a defendant to raise an equitable defence, if the Court before which it is raised would not have jurisdiction to entertain a suit if brought by the defendant to obtain the relief of cancellation based on the right put forward as the basis of the equitable defence. Where the right to grant such a relief is, by Statute Law, vested in a Special Tribunal, the defence cannot be pleaded before another Tribunal not vested with such power. A transfer, therefore, falling under section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act remains valid till set aside by the Insolvent Court at the instance of the Receiver and the voidability of the transfer cannot be pleaded as a defence in any Court till it is set aside. JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—The plaintiff is the wife of the 2nd defendant. She purchased the suit property from him on 5th August 1912, the consideration for the sale being the debt to her which he had incurred for meeting the expenses of a certain litigation between himself and his father, for which he had pledged his wife's jewels. The 1st defendant was a creditor of the 2nd defendant and brought Original Suit No. 324 of 1913 in the Court of the District Munsif of Tinnevelly against him and got the suit property attached before judgment. The plaintiff put in a claim petition but it was dismissed on 2nd December 1913. On a debtor's petition presented in the District Court on 15th September 1913 the 2nd defendant was on 12th December 1913 declared insolvent. The Official Receiver sold the suit property by auction on 31st July 1914 and the 3rd defendant purchased it.

The plaintiff brought this suit to establish her title and has been successful in the lower Courts in obtaining a declaration of her title, both the Additional District Munsif and the District Judge finding that the sale by plaintiff's husband in her favour was a genuine one for good consideration. They also held that the sale by the Official Receiver was a nullity for want of a vesting order, citing the opinion of Moore, J., in Official Receiver of Trichinopoly v. Somasundaram Chettiar (1). The proceedings in which the 2nd defendant was adjudicated insolvent are not in the records of this second appeal. Assuming that those proceedings were regular and that under section 16 (2) (a) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the insolvent's property by the order of adjudication ipso facto became vested in the Official Receiver, there are other obstacles in the way of the 3rd defendant, who purchased the property from the Official Receiver and is the appellant in this second appeal. The defect in his title consists in the admitted fact that the transfer of the suit property by the insolvent to the plaintiff has not been annulled by the Court of Insolvency either under section 36 or section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. "The Court" in sections 36 and 37 signifies the Court exercising jurisdiction under that Act [see the definition in section 2 (g) of the Provincial Insolvency Act], which in the present case was the District Court. I am of opinion that no Court has the jurisdiction to annul, as such, a transfer amounting to a fraudulent preference or a voluntary transfer made within two years of the adjudication, except a Court exercising insolvency jurisdiction in proceedings which have been instituted to declare the debtor, who made the transfer, insolvent by a petition duly presented under the Act. In Gandla Veerama v. Ramaswamiah Garu (2) it was held by Phillips and Krishnan, JJ., that a Receiver appointed by a Court of Insolvency could bring a regular suit in another Court to set aside a transaction under section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, but with due respect, I feel doubt whether that decision was right. I do not think that a special statutory provision whereby District Courts and certain other Courts are invested by notification of the Local Government under section 3 (1) with the power, among other powers, of invalidating certain defined transactions of insolvents should be extended to all Courts of original jurisdiction whether notified under this Act or not. Otherwise conflicts might arise between the decision of a Court sitting in insolvency and the judgment of another Court exercising ordinary original jurisdiction. Transfers of this kind, if they do not fall under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, would, in the absence of any provision to the contrary, be valid transfers.

I further agree with the view taken in Hemraj Champa Lall v. Ramkishen Ram (3) and in Kauleshar Ram v. Bhawan Prasad (4) that it is the Official Receiver who must set the Court in motion to annul a transfer under section 36 or section 37. These sections speak of such transfers as being "void against the Receiver" not void against all the world. On the analogy of the English Bankruptcy Act it has been laid down in three decisions of this Court that "void" in section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act and in the corresponding section 55 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act means "voidable" [see Abdul Kadhar v. Official Assignee of Madras (5), Sankaranarayana Aiyar v. Alagiri Aiyar (6) and Official Receiver of Trichinopoly v. Somasundaram Chettiar (1)].

An additional reason was given by my learned brother in the latter case, viz, that the Act makes the intervention of the Court necessary, which would not be so if such a transfer was void ab initio. It has been held by another Bench of this Court in Ussam Kasim Sait v. Palat Mammad Koya (7) that even the word "void" in section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act only means "voidable", although that section leaves the Court no discretion in the matter, by declaring that every transfer of property which amounts to a fraudulent preference "shall be annulled by the Court," the words in section 36 being "may be annulled". It is enough for this appeal that "void" in section 36 means "voidable."

The appellant's Pleader, citing the Full Bench case of Lakshmi Doss v. Roop Laul (8), argues that he should be allowed to raise the voidability of the transaction in plaintiff's favour as an equitable defence in this suit, and further contends that the Official Receiver, when he sold the insolvent's property by auction, sufficiently indicated his intention of exercising his discretion towards the avoidance of the sale to the plaintiff.

But that is not enough. The transfer has not been annulled by the Insolvency Court. The appellant cannot be allowed, for the purposes of this suit, to stand in the shoes of the Official Receiver, an officer of Court, who has not been made a party, and to raise a defence involving the decision of a point which it is only within the jurisdiction of a Court dealing with the estate in insolvency to decide.

Moreover, the transfer to the plaintiff, looked at from the point of view of section 36, is not a voluntary transfer, as both Courts have found that there was consideration for it. For the application of section 37, it was not made within 3 months of the presentation of the petition on which the adjudication was made. Even regarded as a transfer in fraud of creditors it could, under the authority of Palaniandi Chetty v. Apparu Chettiar (9) and Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (10), only be avoided by a suit instituted for the purpose of having it set aside.

The appeal, therefore, fails from every point of view and is dismissed with costs.

VALLI MAHOMED ABU v. BERTHOLD REIF.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The Full Bench decision in Lakshmi Doss v. Roop Laul (8) (which is binding on me sitting in a Division Bench) should not, in my opinion, be extended so as to enable a defendant to raise an equitable defence, if the Court before which it is raised would not have jurisdiction to entertain a suit if brought by the defendant to obtain the relief of cancellation based on the right put forward as the basis of the equitable defence. Such an equitable defence may be successfully pleaded in some cases, even though a suit to obtain the relief based on the facts on which the defence is based may be barred by limitation, but I do not think that where the right to grant such a relief is, by Statute Law, vested in a Special Tribunal, the defence could be pleaded before another Tribunal not vested with such power. I, therefore, agree with my learned brother that a transfer falling under section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act remains valid till set aside by the Insolvent Court at the instance of the Receiver and that the voidability of the transfer could not be pleaded as a defence in any Court till it is so set aside. I might further add that in this case there is nothing to show that the Receiver Gopala Ayyar knew of the transfer and elected to avoid it. It is the Receiver alone that could so elect, and not a purchaser from him. Hence assuming that an order of annulment by the Court at the Receiver's instance is unnecessary and that the Receiver's unilateral declaration of intention to avoid will suffice, there is nothing to indicate that even such a declaration of intention existed in this case. The Receiver's act of selling the property to the 3rd defendant is no proof of such intention, in the absence of evidence that the Receiver had even knowledge of the alienation to the plaintiff. A man cannot intend to destroy a thing of whose existence he is unaware.

I do not wish to enter upon a consideration of the difficult question whether the Full Bench decision in Lakshmi Doss v. Roop Laul (8) can be reconciled with the principle of the recent Full Bench decision in Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (10), in which it was held that a defendant cannot set up the voidability under section 53, Transfer of Property Act, of an alienation made in the plaintiff's favour in fraud of creditors till such alienation is set aside actually by a decree passed in a regular suit, especially in view of even more recent decisions which held that even a single creditor could maintain such a suit brought in his own individual interest and not necessarily on behalf of all the creditors.

BERTHOLD REIF—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Alien enemy, debt due to—Interest, whether suspended during period between outbreak of war and grant of license.

Where a debtor is under an obligation to pay interest to an enemy firm, such obligation is not suspended between the date of the outbreak of war and the date when the firm is granted a license to conclude certain transactions. [p. 523, col. 2.]

Mr. Taraporevala (with him Mr. Desai), for the Appellant.

Mr. Coltman (with him Mr. R. D. N. Wadia), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question to be decided on the cross objection is whether the learned Judge in the lower Court was right in holding that the defendant was entitled in the account between the parties to a refund of any interest paid between the 10th of August 1914 and the 9th February 1915. The former date is taken as the date of the outbreak of war between England and Austria and the latter is the date when the first license was granted to the plaintiffs' representative in Bombay to conclude their indent transactions. These transactions were—so far as is indicated by the specimen indent put in—indents sent from Bombay to Bradford for goods from the plaintiffs' firm at that place. One of the plaintiffs, Reif, was a naturalised British subject. The partnership of the plaintiffs being between an Austrian and a naturalised Englishman was dissolved by the outbreak of war but the plaintiff Reif was granted a license under the Proclamation of the 9th September 1914 in England.

Whether any of the contracts to which the accounts between the parties relate were illegal having regard to the terms of this Proclamation, has not been established and the only question for consideration is as above stated, whether the obligation to pay interest was between certain dates suspended.

The learned Judge followed to a limited extent a previous judgment of Macleod, J., who thought the plaintiffs' Bombay firm was a branch of their Hamburg firm, and held there was a suspension of the obligation to pay interest; he was of opinion that if the defendant had paid money due to the firm in Bombay he would not have been doing anything which involved a penalty but was entitled to withhold it until satisfied that it would be retained in safe custody till the suspension of hostilities. In so holding he applied certain American cases of which Brown v. Hiatts (1), a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, is the weightiest. These decisions have, however, been questioned in Hugh Stevenson and Sons v. Aktiengesellschoft Fur Cartonnagen-Industrie (2) by several of the Law Lords: see pages 255, 259.

Moreover, in the Supreme Court of the United States it has been held that where the debtor resides in the same country as the creditor or his duly authorised agent, provided such agent was appointed before the war, interest on a debt is not suspended by the war: see United States v. Grossmayer (3) and Ward v. Smith (4). In the present case the branch firm of the plaintiffs to whose representative the defendant paid interest was established long before the war.

We think the safest course is in the circumstances to give effect to the opinion indicated by the Lord Chancellor in Hugh Stevenson and Sons' case (2) that it is difficult to see on what principle interest (particularly where, as here, it is stipulated for by the contract) is to be forfeited if private property is to be respected.

In the present case it may be that even according to the proposition laid down by Macleod, J., the money paid was not wrongly paid and, therefore, could not be recovered back.

We allow the cross-objection and delete the clause of the decree which varies the Commissioner's report.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs and the cross-objection is allowed with costs.

PATNA HIGH COURT.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No 618 OF 1918.
July 10, 1919.
Present:—Mr. Justice Das.
Babu HIRA SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
Lala KESHWAR LAL AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 60—Landlord and tenant—Rent, suit for, by registered proprietor—Tenant, whether can plead right of third person to receive rent.

Under section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is not open to a tenant to plead in defence to a suit brought by the registered proprietor that a third person is entitled to receive the rent, nor is it for him to decide to whom he must pay rent. [p. 524, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Chapra.

Mr. Jalgobind Prosad Singh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Har Nandan Sahay, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the proprietor in respect of the land of which the defendant is a tenant. Admittedly he has been recorded as the proprietor in the Land Registration Department. He brought a suit for recovery of arrears of rent from 1320 to 1323 and was met with the defence by the tenant that he had paid rent to the mortgagees in possession. This defence found favour with the Courts below, with the result that they have dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

In this Court the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the appellant urges that under section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the tenant was not entitled to plead any defence to a claim by the person registered as the proprietor under the Land Registration Act of 1876 that the rent is due to any other person. In my opinion this contention is well-founded and must prevail. The whole object of section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is to give to a registered proprietor facilities for recovering rent and to prevent tenants from setting up a false and fictitious defence by pleading that a third person not registered was entitled to receive rent. [See the case of Sakori Datta v. Ainuddy (1).] The defenceput forward in this case by the tenant is calculated, in my opinion, to perpetuate the mischief which it was the intention of section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to prevent. The case reported as Hem Chunder Misri v. Rajah Sir Sourindra Mohan Tagore (2) is in favour of the appellant.

The Court below, however, relied upon two cases. The first of that is reported as Durga Das Hazra v. Samash Akon (3). It seems to me that that case was decided upon the findings of facts arrived at by the final Court of facts dealing with that case. The learned Judges in that case say: "We think that on the findings of fact arrived at by the learned District Judge the provisions of section 60 are not applicable to the present case. The Judge finds that the plaintiffs ceased to be in possession of the land in respect of which they claim rent some four years prior to suit, that is to say, since the defendant in good faith attorned to the Poddars and commenced to pay them rent, and we are unable to see any error of law in this finding." It is clear, therefore, that so far as Durga Das Hazra v. Samash Akon (3) was concerned, that decision was given on the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court. The other case relied upon by the lower Appellate Court is the case of Girish Chandra Chongdar v. Satish Chandra Sarkar (4). It was held in that case that section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not preclude a tenant defendant from proving that the title under which the plaintiff claims to hold and in respect of which he has been registered under the Land Registration Act has been held by a Court properly constituted to be void and of no effect. The plaintiff in that case claimed to realise rent from the tenant. He was undoubtedly registered as the proprietor in the Land Registration Department. But in a case which was fought out between the plaintiff and another party it was established in a Court of competent jurisdiction that the plaintiff had no title to the land. It appears to me that that case is distinguishable from the present case. In this case no Court has held that the plaintiff has no title to the land. In other words, his title, as the proprietor of the land, is admitted but all that is urged before me is that although the plaintiff is undoubtedly the proprietor of the land, still as there is a mortgagee in possession it is the mortgagee in possession who is entitled to rent from the defendant. In my opinion it is not for the tenant to decide as to whom he must pay rent. Plaintiff is the registered proprietor and under section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the tenant must pay rent to the registered proprietor. Of course as between the registered proprietor and the mortgagee in possession the question remains an open one and the mortgagee in possession clearly, if he can prove his title, has a remedy against the registered proprietor. I hold, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled to rent from the defendant for 1320 to 1323. The learned Vakil on behalf of the respondent states before me that there is no dispute as to the amount of rent. I would, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the judgments and decrees of the Courts below and in lieu thereof give a decree to the plaintiff for the amount claimed by him in the suit. The plaintiff is entitled to his costs throughout.

SUBA—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

KUTBA AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Pre-emption—Occupancy rights, sale of—Occupancy tenant, whether can challenge or pre-empt sale.

An occupancy tenant cannot challenge a sale of occupancy rights by another occupancy tenant in favour of the landlord and cannot successfully maintain a suit to pre-empt on such a sale.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 3rd May 1915.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Fakir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Kutba, an occupancy tenant, has sold his occupancy rights in 54 kanals of land to his landlord, and the plaintiff, who is the nephew of the vendor, has brought this suit for a declaration that he is entitled to retain possession of the area sold as mortgagee, and failing to obtain that relief he asks for a declaration that as the sale is fictitious and without consideration, it shall not affect his reversionary rights, and as a final alternative he asks to be allowed to pre-empt the land sold.

Appellant's Counsel before us admits that in regard to the two latter reliefs the case is covered by authority and that the plaintiff, an occupancy tenant, cannot challenge the sale to the landlord and cannot successfully maintain a suit to pre-empt on such a sale. With regard to the first relief claimed, however, the District Judge has not come to any finding of fact, and on the material on the record before us we are unable to arrive at any conclusion on the facts involved in the case. The learned District Judge has disposed of this point by remarking that even if such a mortgage did exist it would be a nullity, and for this position he relies on sections 53 and 56 of the Tenancy Act. We are, however, unable to concur in this view, for if, as the plaintiff alleges, there was an old standing mortgage by himself, by Kutba, vendor, and by the vendor's father which the plaintiff alone redeemed, then we hold that in respect of the occupancy land included in the mortgage which belonged to Kutba and Kutba's father, the plaintiff stands in the shoes of the original mortgagee and that the vendee in purchasing from Kutba takes what Kutba has to sell subject to the mortgagee rights. From this it follows that it must be ascertained whether the plaintiff redeemed the share of Kutba and Kutba's father with his own moneys and what amount he paid. If it be found that he did redeem Kutba's and Kutba's father's share of the mortgaged area, he is entitled to possession of that area until his mortgagee rights have been satisfied. Had Kutba effected a recent mortgage in favour of the plaintiff, the landlord-vendee could have claimed to ignore it, but the case is not the same when one of the mortgagors redeems a mortgage to which the landlord must be taken to have given his acquiescence.

For these reasons whilst agreeing that the plaintiff is entitled to no relief regarding the invalidity of the sale or on the score of pre-emption, we accept the appeal on the remaining point and remand the case to the District Judge for a finding on the facts alleged regarding redemption of the mortgages by the plaintiff and a decision in the light of the above remarks according to the facts found. Costs to follow the event.

Appeal accepted;
Case remanded.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of Salem, in Appeal Suit No. 102 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif of Salem, in Original Suit No. 297 of 1915.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 10th and 17th January 1919, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance and the material papers in the suit, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Appellant, and of Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the 1st and 2nd Respondents, and the other respondent not appearing in person or by Pleader, and the case having stood over for consideration till 5th February 1919, the Court (Sadasiva Aiyar and Napier, JJ.) made the following ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The suit was brought to obtain a mortgage decree for sale on the mortgage document Exhibit H, dated 11th May 1903, executed by the 1st defendant to the plaintiff for Rs. 1,150. The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are the undivided sons of the 1st defendant. The 3rd defendant is still a minor, while the 2nd defendant was a minor on the date of the mortgage-bond Exhibit H.

According to the recital in Exhibit H the sum of Rs. 1,150 mentioned in it as consideration is made up as follows: (a) Rs. 833-8-0 being the sum due on the registered mortgage-bond Exhibit G of 1899; (b) Rs. 130-1-0 due on the simple debt bond of 1902 Exhibit K; (c) Rs. 42 received by the 1st defendant for excavating a well in the family garden; (d) Rs. 100 for discharging the debt of Nattukottai Karuppan Chettyar; (e) Rs. 43-7-0 received for excavating the well already mentioned and for family expenses; Total Rs. 1,150.

The 1st defendant (the father) as usual remained ex parte. His sons (the defendants Nos. 2 and 3) contended that their two-third share in the mortgaged properties cannot be affected by the mortgage because "the suit debt was not contracted either for family benefit or for any necessity binding on the family" (4th paragraph of the written statement).

It will be seen from the written statement that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 did not question the genuineness of the mortgage-deed Exhibit H or the existence of the debts, that is, the passing of consideration for Exhibit H, nor did they plead that the document was legally invalid as a mortgage for any reason. Their defence was confined to the contention that the mortgaged debt was not binding on their shares of the mortgaged property.

As the 1st defendant remained ex parte, the District Munsif had to raise the point for determination as to his execution of the document in order to give a decision against him. On 11th June 1915, a single consolidated issue was raised by the District Munsif as follows: "Whether the suit document is genuine and supported by consideration and binding on the 2nd and 3rd defendants' shares." In the judgment of the District Munsif, the issue has been split up into two as follows: (1) Whether the suit document is genuine and supported by consideration, and (2) whether the suit document is binding on the 2nd and 3rd defendants' shares. The Munsif notes in paragraph 6 of his judgment that issue II was the only one really contested by the contesting defendants Nos. 2 and 3, whose Vakil noted on Exhibit H that he admitted its genuineness. The Vakil also noted on the documents Exhibits A to G that he admitted their genuineness. The plaintiff, who was not even cross examined, proved the genuineness of Exhibits J and K. Clearly Mr. R. Srinivasa Rao, B. A., B. L., who appeared as Vakil for the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 before the District Munsif, did not deny the genuineness or validity as a mortgage document of the deed Exhibit H sued on or of the other documents Exhibits A to G. The Munsif found on the 1st issue (which was not contested by the contesting defendants) in the plaintiff's favour, and he found on the 2nd issue that the suit document is binding on the shares of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 to the extent of Rs. 1,106-9-0 out of the principal sum of Rs. 1,150 mentioned in Exhibit H, the sum of Rs. 43-7 0 received in cash on the date of Exhibit H not having been proved to have been borrowed for family necessity. The District Munsif held that the remaining Rs. 1,106-9-0 constituted antecedent debts and hence the mortgage was binding to that extent on the shares of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 also He gave a mortgage decree accordingly for that sum and interest.

On appeal, the same Vakil who had appeared for the appellants in the District Munsif's Court was allowed to contend that Exhibit H was not proved to be valid as a mortgage because it had not been proved by the evidence of an attesting witness under section 68 of the Evidence Act, and the other mortgage documents Exhibits B, C, E, F and G had also not been so proved by the evidence of an attesting witness for each of the documents or by proof that the attestation of one attesting witness was in his handwriting under section 69 of the Evidence Act I might add that in the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court, no express reference is made to the necessity of the proof of any of these documents by an attesting witness or to the necessity of the proof of an attesting witness's handwriting.

The District Judge accepted this contention and held that Exhibits B, C and E to H were inadmissible in evidence as not properly proved. Yet, he upheld, rather inconsistently, the decree of the District Munsif so far as it directed the sale of the 1st defendant's share in the mortgaged properties, that is, just as if Exhibit H had been properly proved as a mortgage document, so far as the 1st defendant's share was concerned.

I am clear that the contesting defendants Nos. 2 and 3 did not dispute either the genuineness or the legal validity as mortgage documents of the deeds Exhibits B, C and E to H before the District Munsif. So far as the suit document Exhibit H is concerned, I think that Order VIII, rules 3 to 5 (introduced into the new Civil Procedure Code), casting, as they do, the obligation on contesting defendants to make specific denials of facts alleged in the plaint and providing, as they do, that evasive denials are insufficient, precluded the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 from raising the question that Exhibit H did not create a valid mortgage or was not properly proved. Under section 58 of the Evidence Act, no fact need be proved which the parties have agreed to admit or which by any rule of pleading in force at the time, they are deemed to have admitted by their pleadings, though the Court may in its discretion require the facts admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admissions. The District Court is, no doubt, given a discretion under this section to require proof of these documents B, C and E to H, but, in my opinion, it would not have exercised its discretion properly if it called for such proof, notwithstanding what took place before the District Munsif. Assuming, however, that its discretion to call for proof would have been properly exercised, it did not call for such proof but decided at once that the documents had not been proved. The affidavits of three witnesses filed in this Court on behalf of the plaintiff establish that the District Munsif dispensed with the evidence, as the contesting defendants' Vakil did not require formal proof of the documents Exhibits B, C and E to H. I would, therefore, set aside the finding of the District Judge on the first issue and hold that the suit document, Exhibit H, is genuine and supported by consideration.

I now come to the 2nd issue, namely, whether the debt is binding on the 2nd and 3rd defendants, assuming that the documents B, C and E to H are valid mortgage documents supported by consideration.

The first document Exhibit B was executed by the 1st defendant to S. Koundan for Rs. 75 in 1891. Before the personal remedy under that document was barred, the 1st defendant executed Exhibit C (which superseded B) in 1895 for Rs. 115 to the same S. Koundan. Then Exhibit E is a mortgage-deed by the 1st defendant to Chinnu Mudali in 1896 for Rs. 50. Exhibit F is a mortgage deed executed in the year 1897 by the 1st defendant to Palaniandi Chettiar for Rs. 400 to discharge Exhibits C and E and for further sums borrowed. Exhibit G is dated 1899 for Rs. 700 to discharge Exhibit F and for monies borrowed in cash, and it was executed to the plaintiff Arumugam Chetty. Exhibits J and K are simple debt bonds for Rs. 50 and 120 respectively dated in 1900 and 1902, Exhibit K superseding Exhibit J. The plaint document, Exhibit H, was executed for Rs. 1,150 due to the plaintiff, partly under Exhibit G (Rs. 833 8 0) (within six years of Exhibit G), and partly under Exhibit K (Rs. 130-1-0) (within three years of Exhibit K) and partly under oral loans (Rs. 143) (Total Rs. 1,106-9-0), the remaining Rs. 43-7-0 borrowed in cash on the date of Exhibit H being disallowed by the District Munsif.

The District Judge has disallowed the plaintiff's claim against the shares of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in respect of almost the whole of this entire amount of Rs. 1,106 9-0. He has allowed only the amount of Rs. 130-1-0 (due under the simple debt bond Exhibit K) out of the above sum of Rs. 1,106-9-0. The District Judge's reason is that the term "antecedent debt", as explained in the Privy Council decision in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1), does not cover the debt due under Exhibit G (Rs. 833-8 0) and that the antecedent oral debts amounting to Rs. 143-1-0 are not proved. I have already held that the defendants Nos 2 and 3 did not deny and must be deemed to have admitted the existence of all the debts which made up the Rs. 1,106 9 0.

The learned District Judge does not explain why, according to the Privy Council decision in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1), the money due under the mortgage document Exhibit G would not constitute an antecedent debt. Mr. Sitarama Rao who appeared for the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 has, however, ably argued before us that according to that decision, no debt secured by a mortgage of the ancestral family property would constitute "antecedent debt" of the father and that such a debt could not, therefore, support an alienation by the father so as to bind his sons' interests. It seems to be rather a startling proposition that while an antecedent debt of a simple character, whether contracted orally or under a simple debt bond, can support a subsequent mortgage or sale of the sons' share also in the ancestral property, the fact that the antecedent creditor got the additional security of a mortgage deprives the subsequent alienee of the right given by the Hindu Law to rely upon the antecedent character of the debt discharged by the consideration paid for his alienation. The point directly decided in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) is that a loan, contemporaneous with or just previous to the date of a mortgage transaction, could not be treated as an antecedent debt, as was erroneously held by Boddam and Bashyam Aiyangar, JJ., in Chidambara Mudaliar v. Koothaperumal (2), a view which had already been overruled by this Court in Venkataramanaya Pantulu v. Venkataramana Doss Pantulu (3), Mr. Sitarama Rao relies, however, on the following passages found in their Lordships' judgment: "The law was thus stated by Lord Hobhouse in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (4): 'Destructive, as it may be, of the principle of independent co-parcenary rights in the sons, the decisions have, for sometime, established the principle that the sons cannot set up their rights against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt * * if not tainted with immorality.' In their Lordships' opinion, these expressions...do not give any countenance to the idea that the joint family estate can be effectively sold or charged in such a manner as to bind the issue of the father, except where the sale or charge has been made in order to discharge an obligation not only antecedently incurred, but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate." I think that having regard to the context, their Lordships only meant that if the so-called antecedent debt is so shortly before the execution of the mortgage, say two hours or two days, as to establish that it was incurred on the credit, or security available by the joint family immoveable assets, such a debt is not an antecedent debt and the mortgage-deed executed for such a so-called antecedent debt would not affect the sons' share. On the same page 447* their Lordships say: "to call a borrowing made on the occasion of the grant of a mortgage an antecedent debt is to extend unduly and improperly the whole scope of the exception on that topic." At page 448* their Lordships say: "It is said that the transaction substantially is that the father got the Rs. 200 into his hands and that when he granted the mortgage he was accordingly an 'antecedent debtor.' Their Lordships are of opinion that this contention cannot be upheld." Thus, their Lordships were only considering the question whether the debt incurred on the security of the mortgage was itself an antecedent debt so as to support that mortgage, and not whether a debt previously incurred which is really and substantially (and not in mere name and technically) a debt antecedent to the mortgage sued on could not be called an antecedent debt, when considering the validity of the later security deed. The antecedent mortgage debt may not be able to support itself as a mortgage security as regards the sons' share secured under it, but that it ceases to be an antecedent debt so as to support the later alienation by mortgage is, as I said before, not only a startling proposition but seems to be devoid of any support from the language of their Lordships.

In Peda Venkanna v. Sreenivasa Deekshatulu (5) my Lord the Chief Justice considered the above Privy Council decision in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) and remarked as follows in answer to the argument that no suit could be brought during the lifetime of the father against the sons on a debt incurred by the father and which was neither illegal nor immoral—"As to this, Lord Halsbury's well-known observations in Quinn v. Leathem (6), that a case is only an authority for what it decides, and not for every proposition that may seem to follow logically from it, appears to me to apply with special force. That the Indian Courts have interpreted the earlier decisions ending with Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (4), in which last case it is stated that the sons cannot set up their rights against his creditor's remedies for their debts if not tainted with immorality, as authorising suits for such debts against the son as well as the father may be seen, as regards Calcutta, from the Full Bench decision in Luchmun Dass v. Giridhur Chowdhry (7)," and then my Lord proceeds to refer to other cases and finally holds that the Privy Council could not have meant to overrule all those decisions. Though the case of Peda Venkanna v. Sreenivasa Deekshatulu (5) did not raise the particular point now in question, I have referred to it to show that the language of their Lordships relied on by Mr. Sitarama Rao before us, namely, "an obligation incurred wholly apart from the security afforded by the joint estate", refers to the obligation under the suit bond on which a particular suit is brought and which is sought to be treated as an antecedent debt and not a prior antecedent obligation of the father, though that prior obligation was accompanied by a charge on the joint estate. I might further add that as the father's personal liability under the prior obligation under Exhibit G had not been barred on the date of the suit document Exhibit H, there was in this case an obligation wholly apart from the security afforded by the joint estate which could form an antecedent debt and could be used as the foundation to support Exhibit H to that extent, against the shares of the sons, even if their Lordships of the Privy Council intended by their language that a secured debt as such could never constitute an antecedent debt. While, on principle, the fact of the debt being barred on the personal covenant should make no difference, I have raised this point for consideration because, even if one is ultimately constrained by the language of their Lordships of the Privy Council to treat a debt which is altogether a mortgage debt as not being an antecedent debt, that doctrine (which, as I said before, is to my mind a startling doctrine) may not be extended an inch beyond what is absolutely necessitated by their Lordships' language.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, however, relied upon the decision of Spencer and Krishnan, JJ., reported as Badagala Jogi Naidu v. Bendalam Papiah Naidu (8), where the learned Judges state that an antecedent debt which was also a mortgage debt could not be relied on as an antecedent debt to support the subsequent mortgage. I feel grave doubts as to whether the language of their Lordships of the Privy Council, when interpreted with reference to the facts of the Privy Council case, was intended to lay down such a proposition and as I have above tried to show, their Lordships were only dealing with the question whether a particular loan incurred on security of the joint estate and, therefore, not incurred wholly apart from the security afforded by the said joint estate would affect the sons' shares in the joint estate. Their Lordships were not considering at all the question whether if a really antecedent debt had also been accompanied by a mortgage security, it would or would not constitute as antecedent debt capable of supporting a subsequent alienation of the sons' shares by a mortgage bond executed for the discharge of that antecedent debt (and for fresh loans) so far as that antecedent debt was concerned.

As, however, the question is an important one which must frequently occur and as my view is opposed to the decision of the Division Bench in Badagala Jogi Naidu v. Bendalam Papiah Naidu (8), I would refer the following questions for the decision of a Full Bench:—

(1) Whether an independent debt, not immoral or illegal, contracted by the father on the security of the joint estate antecedent to the mortgage sued on can be treated as an antecedent debt so as to support the charge on the sons' shares also to the extent of the sums secured on the prior mortgage?

(2) In such a case, can the former debt be treated as an antecedent debt for the purpose referred to, if the personal liability of the father under the earlier mortgage is not barred on the date of the suit document?

NAPIER, J.—I entirely agree with my learned brother that it was not open to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 to take the point before the Appellate Court that the mortgages A to H had not been proved. Their Vakil did not deny the accuracy of the District Munsif's endorsement and his note as to the effect of the Vakil's admission, and I am quite unable to understand why the District Judge did not give full effect to that admission. I must express my disapproval of the conduct of the Vakil concerned in putting forward such a contention in the Appellate Court after having invited the plaintiff not to prove the documents by the witnesses whom he had in attendance.

On the question of law raised by Mr. Sitarama Rao, I agree with my learned brother that it should be referred to a Full Bench. We have been much pressed with the language used by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case reported as Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) and we have felt the same difficulty as was felt by the learned Chief Justice in Pedi Venkanna v. Sreenivasa Deekshatulu (5). In that case the learned Chief Justice, applying the observation of Lord Halsbury in Quinn v. Leathem (6), declined to apply their Lordships' judgment to any proposition beyond that which arose in the case. The point actually decided was that a mortgage transaction by a father would bind his sons' shares during his lifetime only when the debt forming the consideration for the document was antecedent. No question is raised in this case before us which is at variance with that ruling.

We are asked, however, to apply the words on page 447*: "The exception being allowed, it appears to their Lordships to apply, and to apply to the case where the father's debts have been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from immoveable assets that are joint family property," and to say that each prior mortgage in this case is wholly invalid as consideration for the later mortgage because its security depended on the joint family property. This proposition seems to me to entail a contradiction between their Lordships' decision and the supposed result of the dictum. Their Lordships clearly say that an existing antecedent debt not secured on a family property is good consideration for a mortgage of the family property. Clearly, therefore, if no further transaction was entered into, the mortgage would be binding on the family. It seems to me to be impossible to argue that, if subsequently the father finds it necessary to borrow another sum of money without security and then some time later creates a mortgage on the family property both for the old mortgage debt and the unsecured loan, that mortgage debt is not good consideration as against the sons on the ground that it was not incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate. I cannot understand how a debt that was once binding ceases to be binding by renewal.

(8) 48 Ind. Cas. 289; 35 M. L. J. 382.

My learned brother has raised the point that apart from the security, there is a personal liability in every mortgage and that, therefore, even though as a mortgage the antecedent debt might be bad, still as long as the personal remedy was not barred, the debt is a good antecedent debt apart from the mortgage security and can thus form consideration for the new mortgage binding on the sons. Speaking for myself, this distinction seems to me to be too artificial, but it has, if I may say so, the merit of meeting the difficulty raised on an extreme construction of their Lordships' language. I, therefore, agree with my learned brother that this do form part of our reference.

This second appeal came on for hearing on the 12th March 1919.

Mr. T. Narasimha Aiyangar, for the Appellant.—There are two exceptions to the rule against alienations as enunciated in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (4), viz, family necessity and antecedent debt. The latter exception must be kept within proper limits and not unduly extended [Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (9)]. So far as these two tests are satisfied, it is immaterial whether the alienation is an out-an-out sale or only a partial alienation by way of mortgage. In Hunnooman-persaud Panday v. Musammat Babooee Munraj (10) the prior debt was a mortgage-debt and it was held that a charge could be created for the father's debt.

What is an antecedent debt is considered in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1), Chidambara Mudaliar v. Koothaperumal (2) Venkataramanaya Pantulu v. Venkataramana Doss Pantulu (3) and Chandra Deo Singh v. Mata Prasad (11). Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad (12) considers Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1). Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) should not be extended beyond what it actually decides. The only question was whether the debt in that particular case was antecedent. The other observations were beside the point.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Respondents.

[WALLIS, C. J.—In Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) the only question was whether the debt was antecedent and it was decided. The rest is all obiter. Do you concede that?]

What the Privy Council say has to be followed see Muttayan Chetti v. Zamindar of Sivagiri (13)], even though decisions of the High Courts are overruled even without mention.

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—If as a mortgage-debt it is not binding, why should it bind as an ordinary debt, assuming the act of the father to be a breach of trust?]

On the basis of the pious duty of the sons which depends on joint status. Where there is a remedy by partition, this pious duty, which is a mere equity in the creditor's favour, would not arise. There is a distinction between a sale for a mere money debt and a sale for a secured debt of the father. In the one case, the equity in the creditor's favour arises. In the other case it does not The Privy Council have laid down the rules in order to protect third parties on the one hand and the sons on the other.

[WALLIS, C. J.—You cannot protect the sons and the alienee at the same time. To hold that an alienation by way of mortgage is a breach of trust would be including every such alienation.

The Privy Council say so. Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall (14). If the mortgage debt was incurred by the father for enabling him to sell the joint family property, the debt will not be binding.

ARUMUGHAM CHETTY v. MUTHU KOUNDAN.

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The pious obligation exists whether the father is alive or dead. I do not think that the Privy Council go to the extent of saying that a debt to which the pious obligation must attach is deprived of that equity, merely because it is made a charge on the joint family property.]

Where there is a personal remedy and it is barred, there is only the alienation and that will not be binding.

OPINION.

WALLIS, C. J.—This reference raises the question whether the rule as to the validity of a father's alienation for an antecedent debt is inapplicable where the antecedent debt itself has been contracted on the security of the family property, as held in Badagala Jogi Naidu v. Bendalam Papiah Naidu (8), on the authority of certain observations of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1). The question is of great importance owing to the far reaching consequences of our decision and has received our anxious consideration.

The appeal to the Privy Council was filed to challenge the decision of the majority of the Allahabad High Court in Chandra Deo Singh v. Mata Prasad (11), dissenting from the view taken in Khalil-ul-Rahman v. Gobind Pershad (15) and Chidambara Mudaliar v. Koothaperumal (2) and agreeing with the later Madras decision in Venkataramanaya Pantulu v. Venkataramana Doss Pantulu (3), that there must be an antecedent debt to support the father's alienation. In their judgment disposing of this most controverted question their Lordships frequently referred with approval to the exhaustive judgment of Sir John Stanley, C. J., in the case first mentioned, and, even as will be shown, adopted his enunciation of the true rule as to antecedency in terms which, it is to be noted, do not contain the further restriction now contended for.

We have next to consider the observations relied on in the judgment and the context in which they occur. Their Lordships in the course of their judgment had pointed out that the rule validating an alienation by the father for an antecedent debt of his own which was neither illegal nor immoral was an exception to the general rule of the Mitakshara which should not be extended, and, after referring to their earlier decisions and setting out the well known passage in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (4) in which it is laid down that the sons cannot set up their rights against the father's alienation for an antecedent debt, they proceeded to observe: "In their Lordships' opinion these expressions, which have been the subject of so much difference of legal opinion, do not give any countenance to the idea that the joint family estate can be effectively sold or charged in such a manner as to bind the issue of the father, except where the sale or charge has been made in order to discharge an obligation not only antecedently incurred, but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate. The exception being allowed, as in the state of the authorities it must be, it appears to their Lordships to apply, and to apply, to the case where the father's debts have been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from immoveable assets which do not personally belong to him but are joint family property. In their view of the rights of a father and his creditors, if the principle were extended further, then the exception would be made so wide as in effect to extinguish the sound and wholesome principle itself, namely, that no manager, guardian, or trustee can be entitled for his own purposes to dispose of the estate which is under his charge. In short, it may be said that the rule of this part of the Mitakshara Law is that the joint family estate is in this position: under his management he can neither obtain money for his own purposes for it, nor can he obtain money for his own purposes upon it. To permit him to do so would enable him to sacrifice those rights which he was bound to conserve. This would be equivalent to sanctioning a plain and, it might be, a deliberate breach of trust. The Mitakshara Law does not warrant or legalise any such transaction.

"The limits of the principle of the exception have been thus set forth because in their Lordships' opinion they form a guide to the settlement of the conflict of authority in India on the subject of antecedent debt."

(15) 20 C. 328; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 223.

It is very important to observe that their Lordships expressly say that they are only laying down the true principle for their guidance in the decision of the point before them, and this, I think, goes to show that they did not intend to decide anything else, as for instance, the application of that principle to cases which were not before them. If they intended to go further their observations were made obiter and are not binding on us as authority. In the rest of their judgment they strictly confined themselves to the decision of the question before them, the necessity that the debt should be antecedent, and in answering this question they adopted the language of Sir John Stanley in Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (11): "The true rule is that a son cannot impeach an alienation of ancestral joint family property made by the father, for which the consideration is an antecedent debt of the father not tainted with immorality or the object of which is to pay such a debt... .....the doctrine has no application to a case in which no antecedent debt of the father, that is, a debt antecedent to the alienation in question, is concerned as the consideration or object of the alienation." As already observed, there is no mention in this rule of the further restriction now contended for. Their Lordships went on to deal with the argument that the antecedency might be only of an hour or a day or a year, and observed that there must, to give true effect to the doctrine of antecedency in time, be also real dissociation in fact, and that the Courts would not be slow to deny effect to the mortgage where the antecedency was found to be unreal and to be merely a cover for what was essentially a breach of trust. These observations were strictly germane to the question as to the necessity of a real antecedency in fact, but they do not cover the further proposition that the antecedent debt must be one which was not incurred on the security of the joint family property.

In the passage already cited their Lordships did, in my opinion, lay down that in principle there should be such a further restriction, and they proceeded to decide the only question before them in accordance with the principle so laid down. They do not refer to any earlier case in which this further restriction had been laid down or even suggested, and possibly they were led to state the principle in these terms for the purpose in hand with reference to the considerations urged by Sir John Stanley in contesting the opinion expressed by Boddam and Bhashyam Aiyangar, JJ., in Chidambara Mudaliar v. Koothaperumal (2), that to insist on the debt being antecedent would not really afford any protection to the son.

Those learned Judges observed in Chidambara Mudaliar v. Koothaperumal (2): "On principle it is difficult to make any distinction between a mortgage given for an antecedent debt and a mortgage given for a debt then incurred, for in either case the debt is binding upon the son, and the enforcement of the security exonerates the son from the burden of the father's debt. Such a distinction does not really afford any protection to the son, for his share in the mortgaged property can, as a general rule, be seized and brought to sale, even in the latter case, for the recovery of the debt as a personal debt due by the father (though also secured by a mortgage), unless such share has been validly alienated in favour of a third party, since the date of the mortgage but prior to its attachment."

The learned Judges who overruled this decision in Venkataramanaya Pantulu v. Venkataramana Doss Pantulu (3) did not apparently differ in principle from this statement but considered themselves bound by authority to hold that the debt must in fact be antecedent. It was, however, contested by Sir John Stanley in Chandra Deo Singh v. Mata Prasad (11) in the judgment already mentioned, at page 202*:— "This observation is plausible, but it is capable, I think, of ready refutation. The remedy of the creditor on the basis of the son's pious duty is not so extensive with his remedy on foot of a binding security. In principle the statement is opposed to the rule of the Mitakshara. In practice it would not be correct, inasmuch as the observance of the rule of the Mitakshara does afford some protection to the interests of sons. The greed which exists for the acquisition of landed property in this province is well known. Money lenders are ever ready to advance money to thriftless or extravagant land-owners on the security of their landed property with a view to the ultimate acquisition of the property. Interest is allowed to accumulate until the mortgage-debt has reached such dimensions that it is unlikely that the owner can redeem. Then a suit for sale is instituted on foot of the security, the mortgagee gets leave to bid and buys and the family loses its ancestral property. Money-lenders are chary of making large advances to land-owners on personal security. Now if in negotiations for a loan on a mortgage, lenders are obliged to make enquiry and satisfy themselves that the loan is required to meet a legal necessity, this will afford some protection to the other members of the co-parcenary body. If a father in a joint Mitakshara family can borrow money on the security of the joint ancestral estate to satisfy any extravagant whim or fancy he may form, it is obvious that the rule of the Mitakshara is a dead letter and that the other members of the family are robbed of all protection." Their Lordships, I cannot help thinking, were influenced by these forcible observations in laying down the principle in the way they did. It is, however, clear, I think, that Sir John Stanley did not intend to lay down that there was any necessity to show that the debt was not only antecedent but also not incurred on the security of the family property, because he does not lay down any such restriction in formulating the rule, and because he refers with approval to the decision of the Full Court in Badri Prasad v. Madan Lal (16). In that case the mortgage in question was executed in satisfaction of a prior mortgage debt incurred by the father to the same mortgagee. It was contended the alienation was bad because the mortgage was effected in discharge of the mortgagee's own prior debt and was, therefore, not an antecedent debt within the meaning of the rule. Sir John Edge, C. J., with whom the other Judges concurred, rejected this contention, and, after citing a Calcutta ruling that the purchase money itself which was the consideration for a conveyance could not be said to be an antecedent debt—the point now decided by their Lordships—added: "I know of no other restriction of the term antecedent debt." This statement is equally true of the other Courts and of the legal profession and the public in India. The doctrine of the father's power of alienation for his own debt having been repeatedly enunciated for over sixty years, ever since its recognition by the Privy Council in Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammat Babooee Munraj (10), without any such restriction having been suggested, it has been assumed not to exist. The only question was whether it was necessary that there should be any antecedent debt at all, and numberless transactions have taken place on that footing which, as has been represented to us, it would involve great hardship to disturb. Observations in judgments must be read with reference to the context and to the pre-existing law, and the very recent decision in Nachiyappa Goundan v. Rangasami Goundan, as yet unreported, contains an express warning against deducing from particular expressions in their Lordships' judgments novel propositions unsupported either by principle or authority, and against construing decisions putting an end to a conflict of authority on a particular question as unsettling what till then had been treated as settled. However sound in principle, and however applicable to this Presidency with reference to the son's shares, if not to the father's, the suggested restriction might be if the matter were res integra, it would certainly be a novel proposition unsupported by any previous authority to lay down at the present time that an alienation for an antecedent debt not otherwise open to objection was invalid because the antecedent debt was incurred on the security of the joint family property. Having regard to their Lordships' express statement that the enunciation of the principle in these terms was intended as a guide to the decision of the controverted question before them, I do not think we should be warranted in extending its application to a case which was not before them and involves considerations which are not referred to in their judgment, especially when such an application of the principle would have the effect of disturbing what has long been regarded as settled law, and would give rise to great uncertainty as to existing titles.

I would answer the first question in the affirmative. It is unnecessary to answer the second question.

OLDFIELD, J.—I entirely agree.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—In the reference to the Full Bench I said that their Lordships of the Privy Council in some passages of their judgment in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) used language which, if widely interpreted, would make a mortgage debt which was genuinely antecedent to the alienation in suit not an antecedent debt capable of supporting such an alienation by the father as against the son's share. Having regard, however, (a) to the context, (b) to the particular question which their Lordships had and intended to decide and (c) the language used by them in several passages both before and after the widely worded passages, I was inclined to hold that their Lordships were considering even in these passages only the case where the so called antecedent debt was really and substantially the mortgage debt sued on. For instance, in the passage "the exception * * * appears to their Lordships to apply only to the case where the father's debts have been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from immoveable assets which are joint family property", their Lordships were approving of the exception which allows a decree for sale to be passed in the suit brought for a mortgage-debt of the father if incurred for discharging the father's antecedent debts, and they disapproved its extension to a case where the mortgage-deed sued on was executed for a so-called antecedent personal debt which was really incurred on the "credit obtainable" from the family lands and which antecedent debt was, therefore, at once or soon afterwards merged in the mortgage alienation sued upon. The question whether genuinely antecedent debts might be or might not be themselves mortgage debts and whether they ought to be only simple debts was not, in my opinion, decided or intended to be decided by their Lordships. I did not and do not think that their Lordships intended to adopt all the reasoning given in Chief Justice Sir John Stanley's judgment in Chandra Deo Singh v. Mata Prasad (11). They, no doubt, fully approved of the dicta of the learned Chief Justice quoted at pages 446 and 449,* but those dicta do not deal with the question whether a really antecedent mortgage debt was one which could support a later alienation against the sons.

Having heard full arguments again sitting in the Full Bench and having had the advantage of studying the judgment of my Lord the Chief Justice just now pronounced and concurred in by Oldfield, J., I must frankly admit that I have felt much diffidence as to the soundness of my view as to the real meaning of their Lordships' language in the disputed passages. While I had to respectfully differ in my referring order from the opinions of two learned Judges of this Court [Spencer and Krishnan, JJ., in Badagala Jogi Naidu v. Bendalam Papiah Naidu (8)] as to the interpretation of those passages, I now find that my opinion is also opposed to the opinions of my Lord and Oldfield, J., besides the opinions of two learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court (Tudball and Rafique, JJ.) in Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad (12). However, after the best consideration I have been able to give to the question, I shall adhere to the view I have already expressed. I have fortified my mind to arrive at this conclusion by the following further considerations: (a) The opinion of Sir John Edge, C. J. [who took part in the Privy Council decision in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1)], as found in the judgment in Badri Prasad v. Madan Lal (16) referred to in my Lord's judgment supports my view of the law: (b) since Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammat Babooee Munraj (10), the uniform course of decisions, so far as I know in all the High Courts, has been to treat a really antecedent mortgage debt on the same level with a really antecedent simple debt for the purpose of supporting a subsequent alienation against the son's share: (c) their Lordships have omitted in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) to expressly refer to and overrule this settled law: (d) the unsettlement of numerous titles to large estates and the great uncertainty in the law which would result if we decide the question (1) referred to the Full Bench in the negative is also a matter for serious thought: (e) the old Hindu Law enacted (see Yagnavalkaya II 50, and Colebrook's Digest, Volume I, page 190, which quotes Katyayana's text) that it was the pious duty of the sons to pay their father's debt, (e-1) even with interest (but the interest amount should not exceed the principal amount), (e-2) even if it was barred by limitation according to modern Statutes (e 3) and even if no ancestral assets were inherited by the sons, provided the sons were capable of bearing the burden: [The obligation was restricted afterwards as regards (e-2) and (e-3) by statutory enactment and judicial decisions, but judicial decisions have explained and expanded the nature and legal results of the obligation as regards (e-1) (1) by not restricting the amount of interest allowable to the creditor to the amount of the principal, (2) by making the future pious duty a present legal liability, and (3) by making a voluntary alienation by the father for such antecedent debt binding on the sons' shares under the Mitakshara Law, (under the older Hindu Law of Manu the sons had no interests or shares at all during their father's lifetime) and (4) by making involuntary alienations by Court sales in execution of a decree against the father alone to affect the sons' shares also]: and (f) in the old Hindu Law texts relating to the son's pious obligation which form the foundation on which the present law has been broadened from precedent to precedent, there is no distinction made between a mortgage debt and a personal debt of the father.

In the result I concur in answering the first question referred to this Full Bench in the affirmative.

COUTTS TROTTER, J.—I have had the advantage of perusing the opinion just pronounced by my Lord, and I entirely concur in it.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—My answer to the first question is in the affirmative. No cases have been quoted before us in which it has been directly held that a debt secured by a mortgage could not constitute an antecedent debt. Mr. Sitarama Rao naturally relied upon the observations of Lord Shaw at page 447* in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) which is as follows: "Except where the sale or charge has been made in order to discharge an obligation not only antecedently incurred, but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate." With reference to this sentence, it was contended that there was a distinct pronouncement that if a debt was advanced on the security of the property in the possession or control of the manager of a Hindu family, such a debt would have been incurred in breach of trust and that consequently it cannot constitute an antecedent debt. It was further argued that there was an essential difference between a simple loan and a loan charging the family property. The sentence in the judgment, "under his management he can neither obtain money for his own purposes for it, nor can he obtain money for his own purposes upon it," was relied on for this argument. I cannot say that these contentions are entirely unfounded.

Before dealing with these sentences, I think it expedient to consider the judgment as a whole. The case before the Board was one in which a suit was brought upon a mortgage document. This deed was not a renewal of an old document. The question for consideration before the Board was whether the loan advanced was contemporaneous with or was antecedent to the mortgage sued on. In considering this question their Lordships of the Judicial Committee had before them the rulings of the various High Courts in which they point out "there was a conflict which occurs, not merely between the Courts of one district in India and another, but also between decisions pronounced in Calcutta itself, in Allahabad itself, and in Madras itself." This conflict they wanted to put an end to. If we examine the cases which were cited before them as typical of the conflict, it would be seen that in not one of them was the question, whether a subsequent mortgage superseding an earlier mortgage could constitute an antecedent debt, ever raised or decided. The point at issue in them was whether there should not be a debt really antecedent to the one on which the suit was brought, or whether it was enough if a short time had elapsed between the execution of the document and the granting of the loan. Nor do I find any reference in the argument of the learned Counsel before the Judicial Committee to this point. Under these circumstances I do not think that the language relied on should be regarded as a considered pronouncement upon the matter we have to decide,

Further, if we analyse the judgment of Lord Shaw it is clear that the proposition contended for by the learned Vakil would be to some extent inconsistent with the general principles enunciated by the noble Lord. The judgment first traces the rights of interdiction of the subordinate members of a Hindu family to the well-known text of Mitakshara (Chapter I, section 1, pl. 27). Then it proceeds to point out that the Mitakshara has enunciated a rule in favour of the managing co-parceners. The reason of the rule is stated to be that wherever there is a family necessity it is "one binding upon the co parceners as a whole and that consequently the consent of all of them can be implied even though they may not be consulted individually." The judgment then considers the exception to the general rule, which is stated to have "arisen from the necessity of protecting the rights of third persons, say, the purchasers of the property who have taken their title for onerous consideration and in good faith." Although in the previous sentence it was stated that "the exception should be very carefully guarded and should not be extended," it is clear that the aim of the exception, in the opinion of the Board, was to safeguard the rights of bona fide lenders, and not of the subordinate members of the Hindu family. Then we have a discussion as to how this exception should be worked. The observations of Lord Justice Knight Bruce in Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Musammat Babooee Munraj (10) are quoted as showing that if "the fact of the advance is proved, the presumption of law is prima facie to support the charge and the onus of disproving it rests on the heir." Up to this point there is no discussion as to whether the debt should be a simple debt or a debt secured upon the charge on property. After this, the particular facts of the case are examined and the rules deduced by Sir James Colvile in Suraj Bursi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (9) and Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall (14) are stated. Then follows an approval of the comment by Sir John Stanley in Chandra Deo Singh v. Mata Prasad (11) on the above two decisions. If we turn to the judgment of the learned Chief Justice of the Allahabad High Court which has secured the approval of the Judicial Committee, it would be clear that there was no intention in that case to differentiate between simple debts and mortgage debts. On the other hand the sentence at the bottom of page 207* is in favour of holding that a mortgage is as much within the competency of the manager as a simple debt. Then the judgment of the Judicial Committee proceeds to define what an antecedent debt is. It is in this part of the judgment that the observation relied on by Mr. Sitarama Rao occurs. But the quotation from Lord Hobhouse's judgment in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (4), on which the rule is based, does not make any distinction between mortgage debts and money debts; and the final deduction of the Board does not warrant any such distinction being drawn between the two classes of debts. The sentences relied on, namely, "In short, it may be said that the rule of this part of the Mitakshara Law is that the joint family estate is in this position: under his management he can neither obtain money for his own purposes for it nor can he obtain money for his own purposes upon it. To permit him to do so would enable him to sacrifice those rights which he was bound to conserve", should be read as referring to the creation of the first obligation and not to the merger of the first debt in a subsequent mortgage debt. That was the only matter which was directly discussed, and this and the other observations must be taken to have been made with reference to the enforcibility of a debt which starts with a mortgage and is not subsequently absorbed in any other transaction of a similar or a different kind. The rule finally laid down, namely that "there must be antecedency in time" and "real dissociation in fact", would equally apply to a simple and to a mortgage debt. I have very closely read the judgment of the Board, and in my opinion the particular passage on which so much stress was laid should not be construed in the way in which the learned Vakil asked us to construe. In this connection I may be permitted to draw attention to what Lord Haldane said in Cornelius v. Phillips (17): "Dicta by Judges, however eminent, ought not to be cited as establishing authoritatively propositions of law unless these dicta really form integral parts of the train of reasoning directed to the real question decided. They may, if they occur merely at large, be valuable for edification, but they are not binding." Mr. Sitarama Rao contended that the Judicial Committee have set to themselves the task of laying down the law and it is not open to us to minimise its effect by saying that the sentences relied on are mere obiter dicta. The answer is that their Lordships had not before them this aspect of the case at all. Ever since Huncomonpersaud Panday v. Musammat Babooee Munraj (10) in which the rule as to antecedent debt was outlined, numerous cases have been decided in this Presidency and elsewhere, where it was assumed as unquestionable that there is no distinction between a simple and a mortgage debt. It would unsettle vested rights and throw open the flood gates of litigation, if their Lordships are to be understood as laying down the law as contended for by the learned Vakil. There must be some semblance of discussion in the judgment appealed against, in the argument of Counsel or in the cases quoted at the Bar to warrant us in imputing such an unexpected departure from accepted notions on the subject to their Lordships. The Judicial Committee are in the habit of cautioning Courts in India to apply the old decisions to transactions founded on an exploded view of law and to suggesting that as and from a particular date the new pronouncement should be accepted as regulating similar transactions In Pattabiramier's case and Thambuswami Pillai's case relating to the construction of mortgages by conditional sale, this hint was given. Again in dealing with rights of alienation which a co parcener has in respect of his own share, the Board, while saying that the Madras view was not right, refused to interfere with it on the principle of stare decisis. There is no indication of such an attitude in the present case. The truth is that their Lordships did not intend to overrule the principle which had gained uncontested currency all these years. I cannot, therefore, but regard the view taken in Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad (12) and by Spencer and Krishnan, JJ., in this Court as attempts to be meticulously literal at the expense of the spirit of the pronouncement,

I may draw attention to the fact that the Judicial Committee have held in Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall (14) that where family property has been sold away under a mortgage decree, the sons can recover it back only on showing that the debt was illegal or immoral. The same conclusion has been stated in cases where the property passed out of the family by sale under a money decree. No distinction is drawn regarding the rights of the sons in these two classes of cases. If it was breach of trust on the part of the manager to have mortgaged the property, why should the suing co-parcener show that there was immorality or illegality ? If the property passed out of the family in violation of a trust, the son should, on pleading without more that the decree under which the sale was held was founded on a mortgage, be decreed possession of at least his share. There is a consideration which is especially applicable to Madras and which would also lead to the same result. In the judgment under consideration, the Board had to consider the rule of Mitakshara as administered in Allahabad. They had not before them the doctrine which has been uniformly accepted in this Presidency that for a debt of the father which is neither illegal nor immoral, his share in the family property would be liable. This view has obtained the sanction of the Judicial Committee on the principle of stare decisis. It would follow from this that if a father mortgages property for a debt which is not tainted with illegality or immorality, although not binding on the sons as not being for family benefit or necessity, it would be enforcible against the sons on the doctrine of their pious obligation to discharge their father's debt. This would furnish an additional ground for holding that a mortgage debt, instead of being in a worse position than a simple debt, is in some respects in a more favourable position.

There is one observation in the judgment which I have so largely quoted from, which lends support to my view. Almost the last sentence in the judgment is : " Wherever such antecedency is found to be unreal and is merely a cover for what is essentially a breach of trust, the Courts will not be slow to deny effect to a mortgage so brought into existence." There is no qualification here that the illusory character would only affect a simple debt. What the Courts in India are asked to do is to find out whether the previous loan was real or illusory, and not whether it is a simple debt or a mortgage debt. For all these reasons I am of opinion that Badagala Jogi Naidu v. Bendalam Paniah Naidu (8) was wrongly decided. It is not necessary to express any opinion upon the second question referred to us.

Answered in the affirmative.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No 2127 OF 1915.

February 14, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Shadi Lal and Mr Justice Martineau.

MIRZA AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

KAHAN SINGH—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Abandonment of land—Proprietor giving up holding and leaving village, effect of—Shamilat, share in, abandonment of.

The fact of a person giving up the whole of his holding and quitting the village for good shows that he has abandoned all the rights he had in the village, including rights in the shamilat, and on such abandonment his share in the shamilat passes into the possession of the co-sharers, and he and his descendants lose their right to it. [p. 539, col. 2; p. 540, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 26th May 1915.

Mr. Badr ud-Din Kureshi, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Sahibzada, a landowner of Mianwai, left his village a few years before 1884, when he died, and the defendant's adoptive father got possession of his proprietary holding. A suit brought by Sahibzada's sons Khanu and Jallu in 1903 to recover the land was dismissed for default, and a suit brought after their deaths by the present plaintiffs, the heirs of Khanu and Jallu, in 1912 was also dismissed, the defendant being found to have acquired a title to the land by adverse possession.

In the present case the plaintiffs sue for a declaration of their right to the share which Khanu and Jallu would have had in the shamilat deh amounting to 63 kanals.

The Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiffs had not lost their rights in the shamilat, and that the claim was within time, and gave them a decree, but the District Judge on appeal has dismissed the suit being of opinion that Khanu and Jallu, having abandoned their proprietary holding, had no rights in the shamilat. The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

There is, as the learned District Judge observes, no reported case exactly on all fours with the present one. In Jalal v. Beli Ram (1), to which he has referred, the original owner of the holding had been deprived of it in pre British times, when rights in shamilat were practically non-existent, whereas in the present case Sahibzada abandoned his land in 1881 or thereabouts.

The question is whether Sahibzada or his sons abandoned their rights in the shamilat. There is no explicit finding of the learned District Judge on this point, but we think that it is only reasonable to conclude that there was such an abandonment, otherwise Sahibzada and his sons would have retained at least a portion of their proprietary holding. Their giving up the whole of that holding and quitting the village for good shows that they abandoned all the rights they had in the village, including rights in the shamilat.

Having once abandoned their rights in the shamilat, can they or their heirs, the plaintiffs, now assert their claim to them? The trial Court has been at pains to show that that portion of the shamilat which is in the defendant's possession and for which he pays the revenue is not identical with that which was held by Khanu and Jallu but this fact is not material. The case relates not to property of which Khanu and Jallu were the sole owners, but to their undivided share in land which belonged jointly to the proprietors of the village. On the abandonment by Khanu and Jallu or their father of their share in the shamilat that share must be deemed to have passed into the possession of the co-sharers and that being so, the plaintiffs have lost their right to it. The claim, therefore, fails and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 115, 151—Appeal, dismissal of, without notice to appellant—Irregularity—Remedy of appellant—Inherent powers, exercise of—Revision—High Court power of interference of.

Where a Court dismisses an appeal, of the hearing of which the appellant has no notice whatever, the Court, though in ignorance of the true facts, must be held to have acted with material irregularity and in such a way as to induce a miscarriage of justice, and the High Court would be justified in using not only its inherent powers referred to in section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, but also its powers under section 115, to set aside the order of dismissal. [p. 541, col. 2.]

Appeal against, and petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908 praying the High Court to revise, the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bezwada, in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 1790 of 1916, for review of the order of dismissal for default of Appeal Suit No. 11 of 1913, on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam.

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, J.—The circumstances of the case out of which these petitions arise are somewhat extraordinary, and as the course we propose to take is one which we should be sorry to see misquoted as a precedent, I deem it best to set them out in detail. The appellants in Appeal against Order No. 228 of 1917 and petitioners in Civil Revision Petition No. 553 of 1917 (whom we shall henceforward refer to as appellants) were appellants in Appeal Suit No. 11 of 1903 on the file of the Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam. They succeeded, the decree of the Original Court being reversed. The other side preferred a second appeal to this Court (Second Appeal No. 1983 of 1913). This Court set aside the decree of the Sub-Court and remanded the appeal to the Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam for disposal according to law. This was on 5th January 1916. Meantime certain changes had taken place in the Courts of the Kistna District. The Sub-Court of Masulipatam, which had disposed of this appeal, was directed to hold its sittings at Bezwada and its designation altered to the Sub Court of Bezwada. A new Court has been constituted under the title of the Temporary Sub-Court of Masulipatam and was working at Masulipatam when the order of this Court in second appeal was passed.

It is beyond dispute that the effect of this Court's order was to direct restoration of the appeal to the file of the Court sitting at Bezwada which was identical with the Court which originally heard it, although its designation and place of sitting had been altered. The parties, however, fell into the not unnatural error of thinking that the appeal would be heard by the Court of Masulipatam. As far as appellants are concerned, this error is testified to in the affidavits filed which have been accepted by the lower Appellate Court, and which we accept as true in this respect. How natural the error was may be gauged by the fact that it was shared by the office of this Court which sent the records in the first instance to the Temporary Sub-Court of Masulipatam. The latter Court transmitted them to the Bezwada Court.

The Bezwada Court, on receipt of the records, posted the appeal for hearing on 6th March 1916. No notice was sent to the parties, but under rule 16, Civil Rules of Practice, notice of the hearing was affixed on the Court Notice Board. On the 6th March 1916 neither party appeared. The Court took time till 14th March 1916: and then dismissed the appeal for default of appellants' appearance under Order XLI, rule 17 (1).

The lower Appellate Court says: "There can be no doubt that neither party knew anything about the appeal having been sent to this Court for disposal." In this I entirely agree; though it is only the appellants whose ignorance is material. On 28th November 1916 the appellants, having somehow come to know of this order of dismissal, filed a petition to set it aside. The petition was put in under order XLVII, rule 1, as a review petition since a petition under Order XLI, rule 19, would have been time-barred. There is no reason to suppose that the appellants were guilty of undue delay in preferring this application after they came to know of what had happened.

At the time this petition was filed, Mr. Jivaji Rao, the Sub-Judge who dismissed the appeal for default, was still in charge of the Court. He, however, passed no orders upon it up to the time of his departure on transfer, in the following month. The petition, therefore, came for disposal before his successor, Mr. Raghava Ayyangar. The latter, while finding the facts above set forth in appellants' favour, felt himself constrained to dismiss the petition on the ground that under Order XLVII, rule 2, he had no power to review his predecessor's order, the latter not having directed notice to issue to the other side.

It is against this order of Mr. Raghava Ayyangar that appellants invoke our aid both in appeal and revision: and Mr. Ramadoss, who appears for respondents to oppose them, does so on the ground that, however inequitably things may have worked out, the order of Mr. Raghava Ayyangar is absolutely correct from a legal point of view and that we have no power to interfere.

It is unnecessary to discuss this because, in my opinion, the error goes further back, and has resulted in such a flagrant denial of justice that we are not only justified, but called upon to use the inherent powers referred to in section 151, Civil Procedure Code.

The result of the orders passed subsequent to the remand of the appeal by this Court has been that appellants, though for no fault of their own, have been practically deprived of the right of appeal which they possessed. Their appeal has been dismissed without their having any opportunity of arguing it. The affixing of notice of hearing on the Board of the Bezwada Court might be sufficient notice where the parties were aware of the pendency of the appeal in that Court, and might be expected to watch the Board either by themselves, or by their Pleaders. It could not be in the present case, where, through a natural error (as shown above), they expected the appeal to be heard in another Court, 50 miles away.

It is impossible to conceive that, in these circumstances, Mr. Jivaji Rao would have declined to re-admit the appeal, if the true facts had been brought to his notice in time by a petition under Order XLI, rule 19. That this was not done was also due simply to appellants' ignorance of what was going on. The same officer's failure to pass orders on the review petition before his departure may be explicable on the ground of pressure of work, or inadvertance; but is much to be regretted.

In my opinion the case comes within the spirit of the remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Habib Shah (1). In dismissing an appeal, of the hearing of which the appellants had no notice whatever, the Sub-Court, though in ignorance of the true facts, must be held to have acted with material irregularity and in such a way as to induce miscarriage of justice; and, under sections 115 and 151, Civil Procedure Code, I would set aside the order of dismissal and direct the Sub Judge of Bezwada to restore Appeal No. 11 of 1913 to his file and to dispose of it according to law. Costs in these proceedings should be costs in the cause.

KRISHNAN, J.—The Subordinate Judge is clearly right in holding that the appellants' application, viewed as one under Order XLI rule 19, of the Code of Civil Procedure, is barred by limitation under Article 163 and as one for review of judgment, it could not be granted by him as notice had not been ordered by the Judge who originally passed the order of dismissal. But I agree with my learned brother that in the special circumstances of this case described by him the Subordinate Judge should have acted under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure and used his inherent powers to set aside the order.

(1) 19 Ind. Cas. 526; 35 A. 331; 17 C. W. N. 839; 11 A. L. J. 625; 18 C. L. J. 9; 15 Bom. L. R. 640; 25 M. L. T. 143; 14 M. L. T. 33; (1913) M. W. N. 566, 16 O. C. 194; 40 I. A. 150 (P. C.).

There can be no doubt that, if the order is allowed to stand, the appellants' right of appeal in the main suit will be taken away from them for no default committed by them. It was, therefore, clearly necessary for the ends of justice and to prevent abuse of process of Court to set it aside. I agree with my learned brother that the principle of the decision of the Privy Council in Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Habib Shah (1) applies to this case, though the facts of that case were somewhat different.

It was contended that section 151 could not be used for extending periods of limitation and overruling legislative provisions, and reliance was placed on the observations in Vannisami Thevar v. Periayaswami Thevar (2) and Kanai Lal Ghose v. Jatindra Nath Chandra (3). That, of course, is so; for no inherent power will exist against an express provision of law. But in this case there does not seem to be any such provision against applying section 151. Order XLI, rules 17 and 19, of the Code of Civil Procedure do not properly apply to a case like the present, where the Court in which the appeal was to be heard was changed without the parties being informed or knowing anything about it. Though the appellants could have applied under rule 19 if they had known of the dismissal in time, they were not bound to do so and it cannot be said that that was their only remedy. As for the review filed by them, it is doubtful if that was a proper remedy at all. If it was, the appellants did apply and their failure to get relief was not due to their fault at all. But they were clearly not bound to apply for review. It cannot, therefore, be said that there was any rule of law requiring the appellants to adopt any particular procedure such as that under rule 19 or that by way of review. I think that it was open to them to ask the Court to use its inherent powers and that, I think, was their proper remedy in the circumstances.

That being so, it is open to us under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure to revise the order of the Sub Judge, as he failed to exercise the jurisdiction vested in him under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure as he might have done.

I agree to the order proposed by my learned brother.

Where a mortgage-deed provides that redemption shall not take place before the expiry of a term of years, the fact that the terms of the deed are unconscionable will not entitle the mortgagor to avoid the contract and sue for redemption before the expiry of that period, unless he is able to prove that the contract was entered into under undue influence. Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jhang at Sargodha, dated the 10th May 1915.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Appellants.

Mehta Bahadur Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs have sued for redemption of land which was mortgaged for Rs. 2,500 to Bawa Shamsher Nath, of whom the defendant is a chela, in 1831. The deed recites that the mortgage is for a period of 40 years, and that on Rs. 1,000 out of the mortgage money interest will be payable at the rate of two per cent. per mensem. The plaintiffs alleged that the terms of the mortgage had been entered in the deed in consequence of undue influence exercised by the mortgagee. Their suit has been dismissed, the Courts below concurring in holding that undue influence has not been proved and that the suit is premature. The plaintiffs have filed a second appeal in this Court, and it is contended on their behalf that the terms of the mortgage-deed are unconscionable and that the stipulation that the land could not be redeemed for 40 years should not be held binding.

Assuming, however, that the terms are unconscionable, this fact alone will not entitle the plaintiffs to avoid the contract and sue for redemption before the expiry of the period entered in the deed. Equitable considerations will not avail them, as is clear from the recent ruling of the Privy Council reported as Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (1), but in order to succeed they have to prove that the contract was entered into under undue influence. As this has not been proved their case fails, the suit being clearly premature.

We express no opinion as to whether in a suit for redemption brought after the expiry of the period of 40 years, the plaintiffs would be entitled to a reduction in the amount of interest on the ground that the equity of redemption has been clogged.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.—These analogous appeals arise out of a suit in ejectment brought by the appellants against defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The appellants are the proprietors of Tauzi No. 3142. Defendant No. 3 is the proprietor of Tauzi No. 3143. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have a house on plot No. 342 which admittedly lies in Tauzi No. 3143. They have erected a wall and a chabutra on 7 dhurs of land in plot No. 341 which adjoins plot No. 342, and it is in respect of this trespass on plot No. 341 that the plaintiffs complain.

The lower Appellate Court has found that plot No. 341 is joint between the plaintiff and defendant No. 3 and that there has undoubtedly been an encroachment by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on 7 dhurs of land in plot No. 341, but that such encroachment has taken place by the leave and license of defendant No. 3. It has also found that the land encroached upon falls far short of the area which defendant No. 3 would be entitled to on partition and that the plaintiffs have not suffered any substantial injury by reason of such encroachment. On these findings the Courts below have given the plaintiffs a decree for joint possession with the defendants but have refused to eject defendants Nos. 1 and 2 from the land.

I am of opinion that the Courts below have taken an entirely correct view of the law on the subject. The authorities, I think, establish the proposition that, before a Court will, in the case of co-sharers, make an order directing that a portion of the joint property alleged to have been dealt with by one of the co-owners without the consent of the other should be restored to its former condition, a plaintiff must show that he has sustained, by the act he complains of, some injury which materially affects his position. See Nocury Lall Chuckerbutty v. Bindabun Chendur Chuckerbutty (1), Shamnugger Jute Factory Co., Ltd. v. Ram Narain Chatterjee (2), Joy Chendar Rukhit v. Bippro Churn Rukhit (3), Brahmamoyee Chaudhurani v. Gopi Mohan Rai Chowdhury (4) and Paras Ram v. Sherjit (5). It was contended by Mr. Kulwant Sahay on behalf of the appellants that the last mentioned case was virtually overruled by the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Shadi v. Anup Singh (6). In that case it was found by the final Court of facts that the defendant was building upon land which was in excess of the share that would come to him on partition, and that on partition the plaintiff could not be adequately compensated. Therefore the plaintiff succeeded in establishing that, by the act complained of, he did sustain an injury which materially affected his position. The actual decision, therefore, is consistent with the rule which I have deduced from the cases, and falls within the ambit of that rule, but there are certain observations in the leading judgment of Edge, C. J., which support the arguments put forward on behalf of the appellants. So far as these observations are concerned, all that I say is that they were not necessary for the decision of the case and that, with great respect, I am unable to adopt them for the purposes of this decision. The next case relied upon by Mr. Kulwant Sahay is that of Shibba Mal v. Naurang Mal (7). That was a suit by the plaintiff for the removal of a balcony which the defendant had built projecting over a considerable width of a passage which was the joint property of the plaintiff and the defendant. Walsh, J., thought that as the plaintiff had failed to show that he had sustained any injury by the act of the defendant, there could not be a mandatory injunction compelling the defendant to remove the balcony. Richards, C. J., and Bannerji, J., took a different view on appeal. In view of the long series of decisions both of the Calcutta High Court and Allahabad High Court, not one of which was considered or even referred to in the judgment delivered by Richards, C. J., I am unable to follow that decision. I am of opinion, therefore, that if the case had arisen between the plaintiffs and defendant No. 3, the plaintiffs could not have asked for a mandatory injunction compelling defendant No. 3 to pull down the erections on 7 dhurs of land. In my judgment, it makes no difference that the wall and the chabutra have been erected, not by defendant No. 3, but by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 by leave and license of defendant No. 3; for it is well settled that one joint owner "might license the doing of whatever he might do himself—" See Wilkinson v. Haygarth (8), Job v. Potton (9), Jacobs v. Sewards (10), and Sat Narayan

Singh v. Anant Prosad (11).

It is suggested, however, by Mr. Kulwant Sahay that, as there is a denial of the plaintiff's title to plot No. 341, not only by defendants Nos. 1 and 2, but also by defendant No. 3, there is some sort of equity in favour of the plaintiffs which would entitle them to the mandatory injunction asked for. There is, in my judgment, neither principle nor authority in support of this proposition. All that the cases lay down is that where there is a denial of the title of one co-owner by the other co owners there is in law an ouster, and where there is an ouster, the co-owner ousted is entitled to a decree for joint possession. In this case the plaintiffs have got a decree for joint possession. But they go further and the point that has been argued on their behalf is that where a co-owner A in denial of the title of co owner B allows a stranger C to erect a building on the land jointly held by A and B, B is entitled, by reason of the denial of his title, to a mandatory injunction, compelling C to demolish the building so erected. In my judgment, the solution of the problem must still depend on whether any substantial injury has been sustained by B and the Court will proceed to solve the problem unhampered by any consideration of the denial of the plaintiff's title. In this case, the Courts have concurrently come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs have sustained no injury whatever by the erection of a wall and chabutra on 7 dhurs of land. On this finding, the plaintiffs' suit for demolition of the wall and chabutra must fail.

The only other question that has been argued before me is that the lower Appellate Court erred in setting aside the finding of the Court of first instance on the question of the shares held by the plaintiffs and defendant No. 3 respectively in plot No. 341. For the reasons which have been given by the learned Judge on appeal, I am of opinion that it was not necessary for the Court of first instance to record any finding on that point.

The result is that these analogous appeals fail and must be dismissed with costs.

*Appeal—Death of parties—Personal action—Right to sue, whether survives—Abatement of appeal—*Res judicata, doctrine of, applicability of—Court which tried former suit not competent to try subsequent suit—Judgment binding on party in representative capacity, effect of.

Where both parties to a suit die during the pendency of an appeal by one of them, and the action is a purely personal one, as for instance, a declaration that the defendant is not the lawful wife of the plaintiff, the right to continue the appeal does not survive to the representatives of the deceased parties. [p. 546, col. 1.]

In order to apply the rule of res judicata, the Court which decided the former suit must be competent to decide the subsequent suit, and the judgment in the previous suit must be binding on the parties. Where the Court which tried the previous suit was, by reason of the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction, incompetent to try the subsequent suit, and the judgment in the former suit was binding on the defendant only in a representative capacity, there would be no question of res judicata. [p. 546, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Lahore, dated the 28th February 1915.

Mr. Fazal Din and Lala Hukam Chand, for the Appellant.

Dewan Mehr Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant Prem Kaur having obtained a maintenance order from a Magistrate against the plaintiff Tegh Bahadur, the latter sued for a declaration that the defendant was not his lawful wife. The Courts below gave judgment against him, and he then filed the present appeal in this Court. During the pendency of the appeal both parties died. The plaintiff's son Anand Bahadur has been impleaded as appellant in place of his father, and the defendant's son Hardil Aziz as respondent, as representative of his mother. It is, however, contended for the respondent that having regard to the nature of the case, as the original parties are dead, there is nothing to be gained by proceeding with the appeal, which should be dismissed, and reliance is placed on Musamma

Sat Bharai v. Musammat Sat Bharai (1).

The case cited is not exactly in point as the claim was one of a different nature from the claim in the present case, but we agree that in the circumstances it would be useless to go on with the appeal. In fact it appears to us that the plaintiff and the defendant having both died, the right to appeal does not survive, as the action was a purely personal one.

Counsel for the appellant informs us that a suit by Hardil Aziz to establish his right to the "gaddi" of which the deceased Tegh Bahadur was mahant, on the ground of his being the deceased's son, is pending in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and that the proceedings have been stayed on account of this appeal. But it is clear that our decision could not operate as res judicata in that case. In the first place, the Munsif who tried the suit in the present case would not have been competent to try the suit now pending before the Subordinate Judge, which is said to be of a value of Rs. 15,000 or more. In the second place, our judgment would not be binding on Hardil Aziz except in his capacity as a representative of his mother, in whose place he has been impleaded.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

SHRINIVASDAS LAKSHMINARAYAN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

RAMCHANDRA RAMRATTANDAS—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Public policy—Speculative dealing in gold currency, whether opposed to public policy.

Plaintiff was employed as a commission agent by the defendant for the purchase and sale of sovereigns. He entered into several contracts on behalf of the defendant for this purpose, and the defendant became liable to him for a specific sum. The defendant paid a portion of this and refused to pay the balance, whereupon the plaintiff brought the present suit to recover that balance. The defendant contended, inter alia, that the transactions were against law and public policy and that the plaintiff was not entitled to sue in respect thereof. The trial Court dismissed the suit, on the ground that the contracts were opposed to public policy as tending to defeat the whole scheme of the Government finance. The plaintiff appealed, and the main contention for the defence was that the contracts were contrary to public policy:

Held, that the contracts did not offend against any clear general head of public policy to warrant the conclusion that, on that ground, they were unlawful; and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the amount claimed by him. [p 554, col. 2.]

Appeal against the following judgment of

BEAMAN, J.—The single question of importance I have to answer in this suit is whether speculative forward dealings in the gold currency of the country are opposed to public policy. It is a question the answer to which may have very far reaching, even disturbing, consequences, and if the war is likely to be protracted it would be of the first importance that it should be decided once and for all at the earliest possible moment. Probably other considerations will come into play after the war, which will considerably diminish the practical importance of the point now in issue. It has been pointed out by the Hon'ble and learned Advocate General this morning, admittedly a consideration rather outside the strict province of the law, that if I decide this suit against his clients, it may cause a very widespread disturbance of the money market and entail a great deal of confusion and inconvenience upon many Banks and other money distributing agencies. I do not anticipate quite such appalling consequences, but even if I did, I should feel myself still bound to decide according to the law as I understand it. In saying that, I am, of course, keenly alive to the peculiar character of the question I have to answer. That has been very fully and very ably argued by the Advocate-General in all its strictly legal connections. Everybody knows who has any practical acquaintance with this subject that "public policy" is very elastic. I should certainly be the last to desire to see it made the plaything of sentiment or prejudice. And did the matter here go no further than that, if the definitions suggested by the Advocate-General really exhausted the whole subject, I should have had very little difficulty in disposing of this defence. But I am by no means satisfied that the analogies, for they are little better, imported from the English Courts are strictly in point, while I am quite certain that the conditions, under which this branch of the law has grown up organically so to speak with the growth of the people in a country like England, do not exist at all in India. Many of the dicta, therefore, of our greatest English Judges, while very informing and appropriate in England, have to be regarded with some caution before they can be adopted in a case of this kind in India. I have felt from the first, and I have said so more than once during the conduct of the trial in order to obtain the utmost assistance I could from the Hon'ble and learned Advocate-General on the other side, that this trafficking in one branch of the currency, while the great war was in progress, was in its very essence opposed to public policy and I am still of the same opinion. It may not be easy to give a convincing, logical and theoretical reason which will put that conclusion beyond dispute. But when we turn to the decisions of the English Judges, it is very easy to distinguish the grounds of those decisions from any ground that can be taken and felt to be equally secure in this country. For example, the principle is summed up, and no doubt very correctly summed up, by Lord Halsbury when he says that while the rule is permanent, its application fluctuates and depends upon the principles from time to time guiding public opinion; and again there is a dictum of Baron Alderson confined to a rather narrower aspect of the point under consideration that contracts against public policy do not mean contracts to do that which may legally be possible to be done but which in the opinion of sensible men it is inexpedient to do. A mere consideration of these two dicta will, I think, open up many of the difficulties with which I have been oppressed during this trial. In the first place, in a country whose history has been like that of England in which party politics have developed to such an extent that the whole machinery of the Government is practically regulated by the interplay of parties constantly changing place with each other and only that for the time being in power representing public opinion, is a history to which no parallel whatever can be found in India from the time of our connection with it. For all practical purposes, and taking India as a whole, it is no exaggeration, I think, to say that there is no public opinion at all in the mass and most certainly there is no public opinion one way or the other, about the morality or expediency of such a transaction as that I am considering. Moreover, I do not agree that the definition of "public policy" is exhausted by saying that only that can be said in the eye of the law to be against public policy which is either penal or unrecognized by the Statute or Common Law. No doubt that would cover the vast majority of ordinary contracts. But "public policy" is a much wider term and in its turn capable of sudden extensions under abnormal and temporary conditions. I suppose it will not seriously be denied that that which might pass well enough as not being contrary or opposed to public policy in times of peace might be as plainly against public policy in times of war. It is very true that exceptional cases of that kind are either of so obvious a character as hardly to give rise to discussion at all, or if more ambiguous are likely to be provided for by special war legislation. Nevertheless, a consideration of all these nice distinctions has forced me to the conclusion that the question I have to answer cannot be answered upon the very simple lines to be found in some of the English judgments. In almost all those it seems to me that the learned Judges responsible for them had an eye principally to the actual facts of the case before them, and it is plain that trafficking in coinage could hardly have come within the purview of the Courts in this connection in England. It is doubtful whether such a situation as that created by wild gambling on the part of a very small body of purely selfish speculators in Bombay could possibly exist except under a bimetallic system. In India at present it appears that we have a silver and a gold currency between which the Government has endeavoured to fix a definite ratio. But the effect of this gambling in the gold coinage admittedly has been to disturb that ratio and give gold a very much higher relative value to silver than merely as one branch of the currency it ought to have. Again, it seems to me that trafficking in coinage is a question apart from all general contracts of the kind which are usually discussed when they are said to be opposed to public policy. Certainly it would be ridiculous to say that a contract was against public policy if it was both legal and possibly moral because in the opinion of a sensible man it was inexpedient. For if so absurd and lax a proposition was admitted for a moment, it would very soon come to the sensible man being reduced to a single Judge, and any Judge might give rein to his religious or moral fads and whims in interfering with the frequent contractual relations of the public as a whole. No one, I say, could possibly be more reluctant than I to impose any moral view of my own under such conditions upon the moral views of the public so long as they kept within the letter of the law. Nor indeed, as it seems to me, is this a question of morality at all. I have already said that in dealing with contracts void as being against public policy the Courts in England have condemned a large majority of them on the ground that they contravene public sentiments of religion, morality or social propriety. That can hardly apply to a case where the decisive factor is one relating to the maintenance at a very critical moment of the efficiency of the Government. If it be conceded that finance is one of the most vitally important factors of an efficient Government in this country during this crisis, and this indeed will be conceded, I think, by every one, then the conduct of private individuals, if again it can be shown that that conduct tends to defeat and embarrass the whole scheme of the Government finance, will have to be admitted to be fundamentally opposed to public policy. This, again, could hardly be denied as an abstract proposition. The Advocate-General, arguing the case for the plaintiffs, put it at first upon the most general legal grounds, pointing out that money was only moveable property, but there was nothing either in the Indian Contract Act or the Indian Coinage Act to take it out of that common category, and, therefore, speculating in money could not possibly be any more opposed to public policy than making a corner in the sale of much needed goods. Now, in the first place, I think that argument is defective, because it is very clear that money, apart from the metal of which it is made, is never intended for the purpose of sale. Ordinarily, then, it ought not to be a medium of gambling speculations. I use the word 'gambling' here in the widest possible sense, for all commercial forward transactions on a large scale have an element of gambling in them. In England, we know money is expressly excluded from the category of goods. The precious metal from which coins are made is as much a commodity as piece goods or dyes or any other staple commodity. But once it has been converted into coins and put in circulation, it has a peculiar public function to discharge, and where there is a double coinage of gold and silver with a fixed ratio governing the relation of one of these coins to the other, that function cannot be properly discharged if speculating in one or the other of the branches of the currency materially alters the ratio which the financial operations of the Government require to be made and to continue permanent. It was also urged that no one could possibly say that there was anything illegal, in the sense of being either punishable by law or unrecognized by law, in buying sovereigns before the Government Notification of August 1918. Again, I merely point to the abnormal conditions which exist during the progress of a great war. In a country like India particularly, the Government of which is carried on under conditions without a parallel, as far as I know, in the world's history, its responsibilities have been enormous, and not the least amongst them has been financing great war operations as well as the internal administration of the country. In order to do this, rightly or wrongly, a point with which I have no concern and upon which I am not competent to speak, a very considerable mass of gold currency was thrown into circulation. What immediately happened showed that the insatiable desire of the people of this country to obtain gold, not for currency purposes at all but for adornment or hoarding, was withdrawing the whole of this gold currency from circulation and so defeating the Government's object. Now, in ordinary times, possibly in view of what was then happening, probably what will always happen in a country like India, habituated to silver currency and probably the masses of the whole country regarding that as the only real currency, the attempt to maintain a bimetallic currency would have been abandoned. It will probably be found, no matter what penalties are imposed, no matter what impediments are thrown in the way of purchasing gold for other than currency uses, that this country will absorb any amount of gold currency set in circulation much as a sponge absorbs water. But at any rate in periods of emergency and crisis, the Government has a right to expect that the mere greed and selfishness of gamblers in money shall not be given free play so as to disorganise its carefully conceived financial policy. Now, it is very clear that keeping our eye upon the transaction with which I am dealing, there is no real question of public policy in the sense of widespread public opinion one way or the other. Speculators in the gold currency are for the most part, I suppose, that small body of extremely wealthy men who are gathered together in our great cities and have no other than their own selfish interests of making money in any and every way they can. It would be absurd to suppose that the millions and millions of people, many of whom have never seen a gold coin in their lives, could possibly have any opinion one way or the other on the policy of such conduct as this and even if it really affected them most injuriously, as doubtless by frustrating pro tanto the Government's intentions and defeating its financial scheme it would do, they would still be quite ignorant of the true cause. The plain truth is that in India public policy at any rate for the present is defined by and coincides with the measures of the Government, which we must assume, and which I do most cheerfully assume, are conceived in the broadest and most enlightened spirit and desire to carry on the Government as efficiently and beneficially as possible in the interest of the entire population. So probably in a very peculiar case of this kind it would be difficult to get a clearer indication of what is or what is not opposed to public policy than the Government declaration on the subject. Policy might, of course, be mistaken, policy might be unwise, but it being common ground that no ascription of improper motives is within the scope of the argument, that which is undertaken by a responsible Government as part of its policy and which cannot be criticised by the vast majority of those directly or indirectly affected by it must, I suppose, in all our Municipal Courts, be regarded as for the time being public policy, and acts declared by the Government as likely to frustrate the beneficial maintenance or operations of that policy would ordinarily be taken to fall with the general category of acts contrary to public policy.

Now, in 1917 we get a very clear indication of the dangers which the Government apprehended if the gold currency were left wholly unprotected. That notification prohibited breaking up gold coin, melting it down or using it for any other purposes than currency, but that, of course, would not extend to contracts for buying or selling gold coins regardless of what was going to be done with them after they had been bought or sold. Thus between the issue of that notification at the end of June 1917 and the notification of August 1918 there was an enormous amount of speculation forward in gold sovereigns, and the particular transactions with which I am dealing ended before the peremptory prohibitions of August 1918. It was frankly conceded that after that notification no transactions of this kind could possibly be recognised in any Municipal Court. But it was said that that was because they were made contrary to public policy, made indeed actually penal for the first time in August 1918. I think that this is not quite a correct statement. If what the Government finds it necessary to penalise because it was contrary to public policy in August 1918 was from that moment contrary to public policy, it is difficult to see how it could have been other than contrary to public policy a month or two earlier. The truth is that such notifications do not make a thing to be contrary to public policy. They merely declare what was long felt that it was contrary to public policy, and if it was contrary to public policy in August 1918 it is difficult to see how it could help having been so in June. Nothing had occurred in the meantime to give it an entirely new character and complexion, and the general tenor of the notification showed clearly that in the opinion of the Government any trafficking in gold coinage, any use whatever of gold coin for any other purposes than currency, was opposed to the general interests of the country. So that the speculators in gold in the intervening period may very well have known that although they were within the letter of the notification of 1917 they were running counter to its spirit. But what is the result of all this? We find a small ring of Bombay speculators greedily bulling and bearing the gold market, some selling and some buying with no other object than either to depress or raise the value of the sovereign relatively to the rupee. The bulls appear to have had it all their own way with the result that the sovereign rose in value to something over Rs. 19. Some three or four million sovereigns at least appear to have been nominally bought and sold between these bulls and bears. Of course there are many cases in which buying a large quantity of sovereigns may be perfectly legitimate and even necessary in the interests of trade, but dealings of the kind I have before me certainly had no other object in view than changing the relative values of the rupee and sovereign either to the appreciation or depreciation of the sovereign according as the bulls or the bears proved successful. Obviously then, gold sovereigns, whose relative value had been forced up from Rs. 15 to over Rs. 19, would, to all intents and purposes, be put out of circulation altogether. And that is precisely what the financial policy of the Government felt to be the danger against which the Government had endeavoured to protect itself. How then can it be said that this kind of transaction, a transaction for which there is no conceivable need, the only motive for which is pure greed of selfish speculators, the result of which must inevitably be a complete dislocation of the coinage, is not against public policy in the only sense in which that term can have practical meaning to-day in this country?

It seems to me that this question can only be answered in one way. No one pretends that these buyers wanted these sovereigns for currency. No one pretends that if they were bought at all they would be put into ordinary circulation at the Mint rate one sovereign for Rs. 15. What then is the true underlying meaning of all this reckless speculation and what have been its consequences? I think the answers are obvious, so obvious that I need not give them. And it appears to me that for the reasons I have endeavoured to set forth, no sentimental reasons at all, involving as far as I can see no question of morality in the ordinary sense but referable only to one criterion, whether Government have a right to insist upon its financial policy being left undisturbed, thereby maintaining that policy for its contemplated purposes at a height of efficiency, these transactions do stand self condemned as opposed to public policy. In my opinion they must clearly do so, and it is upon that ground alone that I propose to dismiss the plaintiff's suit.

I need only add that if my view is wrong and if these transactions were not against public policy, there is no other substantial defence. The plaintiffs would, if the first question were answered in their favour, in my judgment, be entitled at once to a decree for the full amount they claim. As it is, however, holding so strongly the opinion I do, I must declare the transactions void on the ground of being opposed to public policy and so dismiss the plaintiffs' suit.

Each party must bear his own costs.

JUDGMENT.

SCOTT, C. J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Beaman dismissing the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff sues for damages occasioned by his upcountry constituent failing to perform contracts for the purchase of sovereigns entered into for him by the plaintiff for the Vaishakh and Jeth Vaidas of 1 18.

The damages claimed were assessed as of the 1st of July 1918 and no objection is taken to this date.

On the 22nd of August 1918 a notification under the Defence of India Act (IV of 1915) was issued as follows:—

"No person shall sell or purchase or offer to sell or purchase any coin for an amount exceeding the face value of such coin or shall accept or offer to accept any such coin in payment of a debt or otherwise for an amount exceeding its face value."

By the same notification 'coin' was defined as coin which is legal tender under any enactment for the time being in force in British India.

Under the Indian Coinage Act, 1906, a sovereign is legal tender for Rs. 15. The explanation to the notification says that for the purposes of the rule the face value of the sovereign shall be deemed to be Rs. 15.

The contract having come to an end by the defendant's breach which is not disputed, the subsequent notification does not operate so as to make it an illegal contract under the rule stated in Brewster v. Kitchell (1) "that if H covenants to do a thing which is lawful and an Act of Parliament comes in and hinders him from doing it, the covenant is repealed."

It is, however, contended that the contracts were illegal in their inception under a previous notification of 9th July 1917 in the following terms:—"No person shall melt, break up or use otherwise than as currency any current gold or silver coin." But a contract to purchase sovereigns is not in itself a user of the coins to be purchased, nor is there any evidence to establish that the ultimate buyer would use the sovereigns purchased otherwise than as a store of currency to be available in the event of the silver or paper token currency losing its purchasing power.

There remains, therefore, for the defence the main contention on which the lower Court held against the plaintiff, viz., that the contracts for breach of which damages are claimed were contrary to public policy.

It is no doubt open to the Court to hold that the consideration or object of an agreement is unlawful on the ground that it is opposed to what the Court regards as public policy. This is laid down in section 23 of the Indian Contract Act and in India, therefore, it cannot be affirmed as a matter of law, as was affirmed by Lord Halsbury in Janson v. Driefontein Consolidated Mines, Limited (2), that no Court can invent a new head of public policy, but the dictum of Lord Davey in the same case that "public policy is always an unsafe and treacherous ground for legal decision" may be accepted as a sound cautionary maxim in considering the reasons assigned by the learned Judge for his decision.

The following is, I think, a fair analysis of the reasons given by the learned Judge in the form of numbered propositions.

1. The definition of "public policy" is not exhausted by saying that only that can be said in the eye of the law to be against public policy which is either penal or unrecognised by Statute or Common Law.

2. Public policy is a much wider term and in its turn capable of sudden extensions under abnormal and temporary conditions.

3. It is doubtful whether such a situation as that created by wild gambling on the part of a very small body of purely selfish speculators in Bombay could possibly exist except under a bimetallic system.

4. In India we have a silver and a gold currency between which the Government has endeavoured to fix a definite ratio.

5. The effect of gambling in the gold coinage has been to disturb that ratio and give gold a very much higher relative value to silver than merely as one branch of the currency it ought to have.

6. It is not a question of morality as have been the majority of cases where in England public policy has been the ratio decidendi.

7. Morality cannot apply to a case where the decisive factor is the maintenance at a very critical moment of the efficiency of the Government.

8. Conduct of private individuals tending to defeat and embarrass the whole scheme of Government finance must be opposed to public policy.

9. Money, apart from the metal of which it is made, is never intended for purposes of sale.

10. Therefore it ought not to be a medium of gambling speculation.

11. Under a bimetallic system its public function cannot be properly discharged if speculating in one or other of the branches of the currency materially alters the ratio which the financial operations of the Government require to be made permanent.

12. In order to finance great war operations and for internal administration a very considerable mass of gold currency was thrown into circulation.

13. What immediately happened showed that the desire for gold not for currency but for adornment or hoarding was withdrawing the whole of this gold currency from circulation and so defeating the Government's object.

14. In periods of emergency and crisis Government has the right to expect that the greed of gamblers shall not be given free play so as to disorganise financial policy.

15. In India public policy is at present defined by and coincides with the measures of Government.

16. Therefore in a peculiar case like this it would be difficult to get a clearer indication of what is opposed to public policy than the Government notification on the subject.

17. It is not correct to say that transactions in sovereigns at a price above the face value were made contrary to public policy in August 1918.

18. They must have been contrary to public policy already. The notification merely declares what was long felt, that it was contrary to public policy.

19. If contrary in August it must have been so in June.

20. The general tenor of the notification of June 1917 showed that in the opinion of Government any trafficking in gold coinage was opposed to the general interest of the country. So the speculators may very well have known that though within the letter of the 1917 notification they were running counter to its spirit.

21. In many cases buying a large quantity of sovereigns may be legitimate and even necessary, but dealings of the kind in suit certainly had no other object in view than changing the relative values of rupee or sovereign as the bulls or bears proved successful.

Substantially the judgment comes to this:

A. Courts in India are not to be limited by English decisions in deciding what is and what is not contrary to public policy, for public policy is capable of sudden extensions under abnormal and temporary conditions.

B. The question of the maintenance of a bimetallic currency system is one which does not arise in England. Speculators are able to disturb the equilibrium of such a system and this is contrary to the public interest here in times of crisis such as the recent war.

C. In India public policy is defined by and coincides with the measures of Government. The notification of July 1917 showed Government wished to prohibit the use of gold coins except for the purpose of currency. The notification of August 1918 shows that trafficking in such coins had for sometime theretofore been contrary to public policy and speculators should have known that though not transgressing the letter of the notification of 1917, they were running contrary to its spirit in offering for sovereigns a price higher than the face value as fixed by Indian enactments.

The objection to accepting such a proposition as A is forcibly stated in the passage from Marshall on Insurance cited by Lord Halsbury in Janson v. Driefontein Consolidated Mines, Limited (2), at p. 491:

"To avow or insinuate that it might, in any case, be proper for a Judge to prevent a party from availing himself of an indisputable principle of law, in a Court of Justice, upon the ground of some notion of fancied policy or expedience is a new doctrine in Westminster Hall, and has a direct tendency to render all law vague and uncertain. A rule of law, once established, ought to remain the same till it be annulled by the Legislature, which alone has the power to decide on the policy or expedience of repealing laws or suffering them to remain in force. What politicians call expedience often depends on momentary conjunctures, and is frequently nothing more than the fine-spun speculations of visionary theorists, or the suggestions of party and faction. If expedience, therefore, should ever be set up as a foundation for the judgments of Westminster Hall, the necessary consequence must be that a Judge would be at full liberty to depart to-morrow from the precedent he has himself established to-day; or to apply the same decisions to different, or different decisions to the same circumstances, as his notions of expedience might dictate."

The remarks which I have grouped together under the head B are general observations on a technical and very intricate matter which has been considered in 1913-1914 by the Royal Commission on Indian Finance and Currency. In their Report, dated the 24th of February 1914, the Commissioners say:

"The system actually in operation has ...never been deliberately adopted as a consistent whole, nor do the authorities themselves appear always to have had a clear idea of the final object to be attained. To a great extent this system is the result of a series of experiments."

In paragraphs 67 and 68 the Commissioners express the following opinion:

67. "With the argument that India should be encouraged to absorb gold for the benefit of the world in general we do not propose to deal. The extent to which India should use gold must, in our opinion, be decided solely in accordance with India's own needs and wishes and it appears to us to be as unjust to force gold coins into circulation in India on the ground that such action will benefit the gold using countries of the rest of the world as it would be to attempt to refuse to India facilities for obtaining gold in order to prevent what adherents of the opposite school have called the drain of gold to India. In any case these arguments (which it will be noted are mutually destructive) are irrelevant to the enquiry which we were directed to make and to the terms of reference, which confine us to a report on what is 'conductive to the interests of India.' They raise vast controversies upon subjects which are beyond our scope, while giving no reason for the adoption of either policy in India's own interest.

68. "We conclude, therefore, that it would not be to India's advantage to encourage an increased use of gold in the internal circulation."

So much for general considerations connected with the currency system. They did not apparently demand before the outbreak of the war the continuance of sovereigns as part of the Indian currency.

The learned Judge refers (paragraph 1 supra) to a very considerable mass of gold currency being thrown into circulation during the war. I can find no reference to this in the recorded evidence. The learned Judge probably refers to the issue of gold for the financing of wheat stated by the Finance Minister to have been

	Rs.
1918—1919	18,385,740

(see proceedings of the Legislative Council of the Governor-General of the 26th February 1919). It is referred to in the narrative of the Finance Minister introducing the financial statement for 1919—1920 (clause 15) in connection with the silver crisis of 1918 in these words: "Our thin line of rupees had been precariously supplemented by an issue of sovereigns in parts of India where gold is freely taken in payment for the crops; but the benefit of this expedient was transient and its continuance unjustifiable"; also in clause 14 it is said: "To coin and issue our relatively small stock of gold would have been wasteful to a degree; the premium upon the metal would have driven, and did in fact drive, any coined gold out of circulation immediately; it was an emergency ration rather than a currency medium" (see Proceedings of the Legislative Council of the Governor-General for 1st March 1919). This narrative introducing the financial statement was referred to in the argument of this appeal, and I propose to refer to it again as a public document containing an authoritative statement of the financial position of the Government in 1918 when the notification of August was issued from which inferences may be drawn as to the policy of the Government in issuing it.

In clause 21 I find that from the beginning of 1916 silver rose greatly in value and the rupee slowly followed it: "It was impossible to face a position in which Government would be turning out rupees at a loss and placing a permanent premium on the export of its silver currency. It thus became necessary to fix a sterling exchange value for the rupee which would ensure that our coinage would not be liable to be smuggled out of India in indefinite quantities, Accordingly, with effect from the 12th April, the rate for Council drafts was fixed on a basis of 1*s.* 6*d.* per rupee for immediate telegraphic transfers...There was believed to be a considerable accumulation of funds (in India) seeking temporary investment in India for various reasons—taxation was heavier in England than here: hopes had been entertained of a further right in exchange: money was being kept handy for post bellum developments: and there was always the uncertainty about being able to recall spare money from England with the same promptitude as in former years."

I think it is fairly obvious that with exchange rising substantially above 1*s.* 4*d.* per rupee it was to one's advantage, other things being equal, to buy sovereigns, for the holder of sovereigns could still convert each sovereign for Rs. 15 which would be worth for foreign remittances much more than 1*s.* 4*d.* each. Other things, however, were not equal, for the prohibition of the import of gold, for which there is always a strong demand in India, had driven that metal to a premium and drove coined gold out of circulation immediately. One effect of the notification of August 1918, if it was effective, would be to practically prohibit the sale of sovereigns and give their possessors the benefit of the rise of the rupee only upon exchange of sovereigns for rupees at the treasuries: thus the gold which disappeared from circulation after the wheat purchases of 1917-1918 might be brought back to the treasuries. This seems to me a possible explanation of the notification.

The evidence in the case, in my judgment, throws no light on the question of public policy raised for the defence.

There is evidence of a number of contracts for the sale of sovereigns held by Banks in China and Japan in 1916 and 1917, not of sovereigns in circulation in India. Such contracts were anterior to the prohibition of gold imports.

The proved contracts of 1918 were for small amounts which were all closed by cross-contracts before the Vaida days.

In the judgment of the lower Court it is said; "We find a small ring of Bombay speculators greedily bulling and bearing the gold market, some selling and some buying with no other object than either to depress or raise the value of the sovereign relatively to the rupee—some three or four million sovereigns at least appear to have been nominally bought and sold between these bulls and bears. Of course there are many cases in which buying a large quantity of sovereigns may be perfectly legitimate and even necessary in the interests of trade, but dealings of the kind I have before me certainly had no other object in view than changing the relative values of the rupee and sovereign according as the bulls or bears proved successful." I do not find anything to support these conclusions in the recorded evidence. Out of four witnesses examined Ramdas the plaintiff, in answer to the question "Instead of buying gold people used to buy sovereigns and melt them down into ornaments?" said "I don't know, I can't say. They certainly hoarded sovereigns just like gold and other precious stones and metals. The piecegoods merchants made large profits as they bought sovereigns and stored them."

Chhotalal, when asked "What did your master want all these sovereigns for?" (i.e., those imported from China and Japan) said: "The people in the bazaar wanted them, so we bought and sold to them. How can I say for what the people in the bazaar wanted them? I have never seen any sovereigns broken up and melted."

Narandas, to the question "People buy them, break them up or melt them?" said: "How can I possibly know that?"

P. M. Dalal, while admitting that some sovereigns were broken up and melted, said purchased sovereigns were also used for hoarding. They needed gold after the prohibition of import and got it by buying sovereigns. The premium on gold did not affect the purchasing value of the rupee or any note. The exchange value of the rupee had in fact gone up considerably.

The conclusion must, I think, be that no clear general head of public policy can be evolved which would justify the Court in holding the contracts in suit unlawful on that ground.

This is apparently the conclusion to which the learned Judge himself is driven when he falls back in the last part of his judgment on the notifications of June 1917 and August 1918 as indicia of what is contrary to public policy in connection with the gold currency.

But if the case is to be decided on the notifications, the contracts must be shown to be forbidden by law and would then fall under the first head of section 23 of the Indian Contract Act and any reference to public policy would be irrelevant.

I have already stated why, in my opinion, the contracts are not obnoxious to the notification of June 1917 and why they are untouched by the notification of August 1918.

These notifications were, so far as I can judge, emergency measures: the first aimed at the prevention of melting or other misuse of current gold coins; the second was perhaps devised to tempt back hoarded gold coins to the treasuries.

We set aside the decree and pass a decree for the plaintiffs for Rs. 6,755-13-0 with interest from the 1st July 1918 to this date. Costs and interest on judgment at six per cent.

HAYWARD, J.—I concur, but desire to add some remarks on the general proposition.

The Coinage Act III of 1906 made gold coins legal tender at the rate of Rs. 15 to the sovereign. But it did not prohibit their use otherwise than as currency. The Defence of India Act Notification of the 29th June 1917 prohibited their use otherwise than as currency. The parties to these proceedings entered into transactions for the sale and purchase of gold sovereigns not at currency but at bullion rates for deliveries in May and June 1918. The Defence of India Act Notification of the 22nd August 1918 prohibited sales and purchases of sovereigns at mere bullion rates. The substantial dispute between the parties was whether their transactions were thus void as contrary to law and public policy within the meaning of section 23 of the Indian Contract Act.

It was conceded by the learned Judge at the trial that the transactions were not void as contrary to law, as the evidence did not establish any intention to use the sovereigns otherwise than as currency contrary to the notification of the 29th June 1917 and as they took place before the notification of the 22nd August 1918 making the sales and purchases of sovereigns at mere bullion rates unlawful. But it was held that the transactions were void as contrary to public policy as deducible from the subsequent notification of the 22nd August 1918, which, it was held, rendered unlawful "this trafficking in one branch of the currency during the great war." It was conceded by the learned Judge that the transactions would not have been void as contrary to public policy in the sense of the principles guiding public opinion as understood by English Judges and that it would be difficult "to give a convincing, logical and theoretical reason" for holding them opposed to public policy; but he did nevertheless so hold them and observed, "that keeping our eye on the transactions with which I am dealing, there is no question of real public policy in the sense of widespread public opinion one way or the other...It would be absurd to suppose that the millions and millions of people, many of whom have never seen a gold coin in their lives, could possibly have any opinion one way or the other as to the policy of such conduct...so probably in a very peculiar case of this kind it would be difficult to get a clearer indication of what is or what is not opposed to public policy than the Government declaration on the subject. Policy might, of course, be mistaken, policy might be unwise, but... that which is undertaken by a responsible Government as part of its policy and which cannot be criticised by the vast majority of those directly or indirectly affected by it must...be regarded as for the time being public policy, and acts declared by the Government as likely to frustrate the beneficial maintenance or operations of that policy would ordinarily be taken to fall within the general category of acts contrary to public policy...The plain truth is that in India public policy, at any rate for the present, is defined by and coincides with the measures of Government." It has been urged before us on this appeal that the learned Judge ought to have been guided by the dicta of the English Judges, and not to have extended the law of public policy under section 23 of the Indian Contract Act so as to comprehend all the political policies from time to time of the Government in India.

It behoves us, therefore, to examine in some detail the dicta of the English Judges. It is true that assertions of the wide discretion vested in the judiciary to determine public policy were made by Pollock, C. B., in the leading case of Egerton v. Earl Brownlow (3). But distinctions between the public good and political policies were drawn by Alderson and Parke, BB., who expressed the preference for leaving extensions of the law in the matter of public policy to the Legislature. This case has been considered in detail by Sir Frederick Pollock at pages 315 to 318 of the Seventh Edition of his Principles of Contract and he came to the conclusion that the final decision of the House of Lords depended not upon any extension of the law but upon the ground that the particular limitations in the will of the Earl of Bridgewater had a manifest tendency to the prejudice f good government and the administration of public affairs and that this tendency had already been perfectly well recognised as contrary to public policy as understood by the Courts. It was said by Sir James Colvile in the case of Evanturel v. Evanturel (4) "that the determination of what is contrary to the so-called 'policy of the law' necessarily varies from time to time...that the rule remains, but its application varies with the principles which for the time being guide public opinion," but Jessel, M R., observed in the case of Printing and Numerical Registering Company v. Sampson (5) that "you are not to extend arbitrarily those rules which say that a given contract is void as being against public policy, because if there is one thing which more than another public policy requires it is that...contracts, when entered into freely and voluntarily, shall be held sacred and shall be enforced by Courts of Justice." It was also said by Lord Bramwell that "Judges are more to be trusted as interpreters of the law than as expounders of what is called public policy" in his remarks against the extension of this branch of the law in Mogul Steamship Company v. McGregor, Gow & Co. (6); and Lord Halsbury stated that "it is inevitable that the particular case must be decided by a Judge; he must find the facts, and he must decide whether the facts so found do or do not come within the principles ... that is, a principle of public policy recognised by the law", when denying that a new head of public policy could be invented by a Court in the case of Janson v. Driefontein Consolidated Mines, Limited (2). There is finally the dictum of Farwell, L. J., in the case of Hyams v. Stuart King (7) that "the doctrine of public policy is regarded now-a-days as one rather for the Legislature than the Courts." It seems to me that those dicta apply with peculiar force here. The present transactions were not immoral and were not manifestly opposed to the public good or to good government. They were not proscribed by public opinion for there was no public opinion. They were at the time permitted by the Government. It was indeed impossible to give any "convincing, logical or theoretical reason" for holding them opposed to public policy. It was, however, felt that they amounted to "trafficking in one branch of the currency during the great war" and that they, therefore, must have been opposed to the public financial policy, which "might be mistaken or might be unwise" and wherein experts notoriously differ, because that trafficking was subsequently prohibited by the Government. These were surely strong reasons for applying the dicta of the English Judges and for leaving the exposition and protection of the public financial policy to the Executive Government and the Legislature. There was, in my opinion, no substantial justification for holding that those dicta should be disregarded by Judges in India and that public policy should be interpreted under section 23 of the Indian Contract Act as comprehending all the political policies from time to time of the Government of India.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1708 OF 1918.

January 28, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Scott Smith.

HIRA AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

BANSI LAL AND ANOHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Pre-emption—Vendee, co-sharer in land purchased by virtue of previous sale—Previous sale set aside, effect of—Priority.

The question of priority as between a pre-emptor and the vendee must be decided with relation to the state of things existing at the time of the sale, and not at any later period. Thus, where a vendee at the time of a sale is a co-sharer in the land purchased by him by virtue of a previous sale and has, therefore, a right of pre-emption, that right cannot be affected by the fact that the sons of the vendor in the previous sale subsequently sue and avoid that sale. [p. 558, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 5th March 1918.

Mr. R. Obbard, for the Appellants.

Messrs. H. A. Herbert and Anant Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This suit by the plaintiffs appellants for pre-emption has been dismissed by the lower Courts on the ground that their right to pre-empt the land in suit is not superior to that of the vendee, the latter being a co-sharer in the land in suit at the time of the sale. The plaintiffs have filed a second appeal to this Court, on the ground that at the time when they brought their suit the share owned by the vendee in the joint holding, in virtue of which he had a right of pre-emption, had passed out of his hands owing to a decree of Court.

The facts briefly are as follows:—

Bansi Lal, vendee-defendant-respondent, bought some land on 4th July 1913 from Musammat Bakhtawari in her capacity as guardian of her minor sons. The land in suit, which is in the same holding as that bought by Bansi Lal, was sold to him on the 23th May 1916. On the 16th July 1917, the minor sons of Musammat Bakhtawari brought a suit for possession of the land sold to Bansi Lal on the 4th July 1913, on the ground that their mother had no right to make the sale and that it was not for their benefit. On the 21st March 1917, they were given a decree to the effect that they should get possession of the land on payment of Rs. 175, which was held to be a valid charge thereon. The plaintiffs brought the present suit on the 26th March 1917, i.e., after it had been held that the sale to Bansi Lal of the 4th July 19.3 was not a valid one. Mr. Obbard on behalf of the appellants relies on Kehr Singh v. Mahaman Singh (1), in which it was held that the vendee, who by reason of a prior purchase had become a landholder in the village, and as such was competent to resist the claim of a pre-emptor with respect to a subsequent purchase, cannot, if in a pre-emption suit he loses the first bargain, retain the subject-matter of the second bargain. Mr. Obbard argues that the same principle should be applied here. The vendee having lost the land which he obtained by the first bargain cannot, it is alleged, retain the subject-matter of the second bargain. Mr. Herbert on behalf of the respondent contends that that case is distinguishable. He points out that the decision in Kehr Singh v. Mahman Singh (1) was based upon a ruling, Bhupa v. Kori Mal (2), from which a quotation will be found at page 143 of the Punjab Record of 1908 [Kehr Singh v. Mahman Singh (1)]. At the bottom of this page the following passage occurs:—

"I think the effect of a pre emption decree is to vest the proprietary right in the pre-emptor from the date of the sale, which was a transaction voidable at the option of the pre-emptor. When the option is exercised, the sale as regards the original purchaser becomes void ab initio."

Mr. Herbert argues that the sale by Musammat Bakhtawari to Bansi Lal was not void ab initio, but was only voidable at the instance of her minor sons and that it was a good sale until it was set aside by them, i.e., until the date of the decree, viz., 21st March 1917. Mr. Herbert also referred to numerous passages in Sanwal Das v. Gur Parshad (3) and Dhanna Singh v. Gurbakhsh Singh (4), in which it was laid down that the question of priority as between the pre-emptor and the vendee must be decided in advertence to the state of things existing at the time of sale and not at any later period - see Sanwal Das v. Gur Parshad (3) page 431* penultimate paragraph, see also page 447* where the following passage occurs:—"We have a perfectly clear position if we look to the date of sale, and to that alone, as determining the rights of the parties." See also page 453* where the following passage occurs:—"Under the Punjab Pre-emption Act, a pre-emptor's cause of action arises when a sale is made in violation of his rights, and it appears to me that in all cases in which a cause of action is well founded under the Act, with reference to the state of things which existed at the time of sale, that cause of action, viewed as a valid ground of claim, cannot be lost or affected by reason of a new circumstance coming into existence after the sale." There are other similar passages in this ruling, but it is unnecessary to quote any more of them. It is, therefore, well established that the question of priority as between the pre-emptor and the vendee must be decided with relation to the state of things existing at the time of sale and not at any later period. Applying the principle to the present case we find that the vendee at the time of the sale in dispute was a co-sharer in the land sold, and, therefore, had a right of pre-emption. This right of his cannot be affected by the fact that subsequently the minors sued and avoided the sale in virtue of which he had a right of pre-emption. The case reported as Kehr Singh v. Mahman Singh (1) is certainly distinguishable, in which the vendee lost the land, under which he claimed, by reason of a pre emption suit by which the pre-emptor was substituted for him as from the date of the original sale. Even if this decision be considered as opposed to the principle subsequently enunciated in Sanwal Das v. Gur Parshad (3), I am not prepared to hold that the ratio decidendi should be applied in the present case. As pointed out by Robertson, J., at page 375 of P. R. 1909 [Sanwal Das v. Gur Parshad (3)], "A right of pre-emption is not one which is to be held sacrosanct and if we are to lean one way or the other—other things being equal—we should lean rather against the interference with the general rights of free contract by a vendor than in favour of such interference on a claim set up by a plaintiff." I am, therefore, of opinion that the decision of the Courts below is correct and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 54, 58—Mortgage, usufructuary—Sale of portion of equity of redemption in favour of mortgagee, effect of—Registration, whether necessary—Unregistered deed, admissibility of.

J., the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs, mortgaged two plots of land to the defendant, the arrangement being that the defendant should hold possession of both the plots for a certain period in full satisfaction of the debt and interest. Before the expiry of the term, the parties came to an arrangement whereby J., by an unregistered conveyance, sold one of the plots to the defendant-mortgagee and took back the other plot, the mortgage being thus paid off. The plaintiffs then brought this suit for recovery of possession of the plot sold to the defendant:

Held, (1) that the thing sold was merely a right in the immoveable property, the property being in the actual possession of the mortgagee, and that the sale, being thus of an intangible thing, could be made only by a registered instrument as provided in section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act; [p. 559, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.

CHITTY, J.—In this case the plaintiffs seek to recover from the defendant possession of a plot of land measuring 10 cottas under the following circumstances. In 1304 Jaru, the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs, borrowed Rs. 100 from the defendant and by way of security mortgaged two plots of land measuring 6 cottas and 10 cottas respectively. The arrangement was that the defendant should hold possession of both plots for 8 years, i.e., until 1313 in full satisfaction of the debt and interest. The defendant's case was that in 1306 the parties came to an arrangement, whereby Jaru sold to the defendant the 10 cotta plot for Rs. 98 and took back the 6 cotta plot, the mortgage being thus paid off. The conveyance of the 10 cotta plot to the defendant was by an unregistered kobala. The Munsif declined to regard this document as evidence and decreed the plaintiffs' suit, which was filed on the 8th January 1914 (1320) within 12 years from 1312, the original date fixed for the termination of the mortgage. This decision has been reversed by the Subordinate Judge who finds the kobala to be a genuine document, and while holding it to be inadmissible to prove the sale, has accepted it as evidence of the satisfaction of the mortgage debt. He accordingly held that the mortgage came to an end in 1306 by the sale and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The plaintiffs have appealed. In my opinion the judgment of the lower Appellate Court cannot stand. The alleged sale in 1306 was of the equity of redemption in the 10 cotta plot, the consideration being the balance of the mortgage-money then due plus Rs. 35-8-0 in cash. The thing sold was merely a right in immoveable property, the property being in the actual possession of the mortgagee. The sale, thus being of an intangible thing, could be made only by a registered instrument [see section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act and Ramasami Pattar v. Chinnan Asari (1)] and as the document was unregistered, no sale was effected. I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge when he held the document to be inadmissible to prove the sale. He was, however, in my opinion, in error in holding that it was admissible to show when and how the mortgage was satisfied by Jaru. This would be to make it evidence of a transaction affecting the property, an use expressly forbidden by section 49 of the Registration Act.

If there was no sale or no such sale as could be proved, the mortgage must be deemed to have continued until 1312 when, by the agreement of the parties, it was satisfied automatically.

The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to recover back so much of the mortgaged property as has not been returned to them, that is to say, the 10 cotta plot now in suit.

It was urged on behalf of the defendant that it would be a hardship upon him, as he would lose the Rs. 35-8-0 paid by him in cash in 1306. As he has retained possession of this plot for some 12 years after he should have given it up under the original agreement, there can be no question of hardship.

I would allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restore that of the Munsif with costs to the plaintiffs in both Courts.

WALMSLEY, J.—The plaintiffs, who prefer this appeal, sued to recover possession of of a piece of land measuring 10 cottas, on a declaration of their title. Their case was that their predecessor Jaru borrowed Rs. 100 from the defendant in 1304 B. S. and put him in possession of two plots of land, namely, the plot in suit and another plot measuring 6 cottas, on the understanding that the two plots should be restored at the end of 8 years with the debt, principal and interest, wiped out by the profits accruing from the occupation of the two plots. They say that the smaller plot was restored to them in 1312 B. S, but not the plot in suit. They filed their suit on 8th January 1914, i.e., in 1320 B. S.

(1) 24 M. 449 at p. 463.

The defendant's case is that two years after the loan, the smaller plot was restored to Jaru, while the larger plot, the one now in suit, was sold by him to the defendant.

The first Court found that the evidence of the sale alleged by the defendant was very unsatisfactory, and refused to accept an unregistered kobala. The suit was decreed and the defendant preferred an appeal.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the kobala was inadmissible as evidence of sale, but that it could be admitted and used as evidence to show how and when Jaru satisfied the mortgage. Using the document to that extent he found that the mortgage came to an end in the manner described by defendant. He also referred to a measurement made by the landlord somewhere about 1312, and the kabuliyats executed by the defendant and the 1st plaintiff in 1312 and pointed out that the plaintiff's kabuliyat did not cover the land in suit, while the defendant's did. The result was that he decreed the appeal.

For the plaintiffs it is now urged that the kobala of 1306 is not admissible at all, and reliance is placed upon section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. The argument is that what was sold was the equity of redemption and that that right is an "intangible thing" within the meaning of the second clause of section 54.

Now if the document was a conveyance of the land, it did not need registration, for the purchase money is mentioned as Rs. 98 only. The first question, therefore, is whether the transaction is to be regarded as a sale of the land or as a sale of the equity of redemption. The document recites that Jaru was in need of money, that he agreed to sell the land for Rs. 98, that by reason of the defendant's possession for nearly three years out of the eight years, the mortgage-debt had been reduced to Rs. 62-8-0 and that Jaru, therefore, accepted Rs. 35-8-0 in cash as full payment for the sale. It is true that the document does not say that the mortgage was extinguished or mention anything about the other plot, but I think the meaning of the parties is plain from the way in which the amount to be paid in cash was calculated. The reckoning is unintelligible unless they intended that the mortgage should be extinguished, for credit is given for the proportionate profits of both plots, and the whole of the balance is deducted from the purchase money, with the result that nothing is left due under the mortgage of 1304 B. S.

This view, that the sale was not of the equity of redemption, hardly puts the defendant in a better position, however, because under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act delivery of possession is essential where the document is not registered, and he was already in possession. It does not appear to be necessary to decide whether his possession was that of a mortgagee or of a lessee, for in either case it was a possession that was to come to an end in a definite period when the plaintiffs' predecessor would have a right to resume possession. In the case of Sibendrapada Banerjee v. Secretary of State (2) it was said that the essence of a transfer by delivery is that possession is changed. In another case, Appeal from Order No. 48 of 1899, of which a brief report is given in Fatik Karikar v. Rajendra Nath Chaudhuri (3), Banerji, J., held that in circumstances similar to those of this suit, it would not be necessary for the parties to go through the form of restoring the property to the mortgagor-vendor and then again delivering to the mortgagee-purchaser, but that it would be enough if the mortgagee took the property as purchaser and the mortgagor admitted that from that moment the purchaser held the property as purchaser and not as mortgagee.

At first sight it seems that there ought to be a remand for the lower Court to determine whether there was such a transfer as is suggested by Banerji, J. But I do not think this is necessary. The fate of the second plot affords the best test on the question whether there was a delivery of possession. If the defendant had restored possession of that plot and retained possession of the other, then I think it might fairly be said that there was delivery of possession in regard to the larger plot but the evidence to show that this was done is wanting, in fact such evidence as there is shows that defendant continued to hold

(2) 34 C. 207; 5 C. L. J. 390.
(3) 4 C. W. N. cxlii (142).

it. No useful purpose would be served by a remand.

It is suggested that, at any rate, the defendant should have a decree for the re-payment of the cash payment mentioned in the kobala, but as it appears that he did not give up possession of the smaller plot for several years he is not entitled to such an order.

I think the appeal should be allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside, and the decree of the first Court restored.

Appeal allowed.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

CIVIL REVISION No. 218 OF 1917.

January 21, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Scott Smith.

NAZIM KHAN—DEFENDANT—PETITIONER

versus

ALAM KHAN—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 14—Extension of time—Plaintiff in subsequent suit who was defendant in previous suit, whether can claim extension.

An extension of time, under section 14 of the Limitation Act, can only be claimed if the plaintiff in the subsequent suit was the plaintiff in the previous suit; if he was the defendant, it cannot be said that he had prosecuted with due diligence another civil proceeding within the meaning of the section. [p. 561, col. 2; p. 562, col. 1.]

Revision from the order of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 3rd February 1917.

Mr. Badri Nath Kapur, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Raghunath Rai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 11th of August 1915 Nazim Khan, defendant petitioner, brought a complaint against Alam Khan, plaintiff-respondent, and another under section 406, Indian Penal Code. This complaint was dismissed and complainant was referred to a civil suit on the 28th September 1915. Prior to that on the 22nd September the parties had referred their dispute to arbitration and on the 23rd September an award was given in favour of Alam Khan. On the 3rd January 1916 Nazim Khan brought a suit against Alam Khan for Rs. 817 on the basis of a receipt which he held, altogether ignoring the award. Alam Khan objected, putting forward the award as a bar to the suit. On the 6th of April 1916 the Court disallowed the defendant's objections and said that if he wished to get the award carried into effect, he should make an application to have it made a rule of Court. Upon this Alam Khan instituted the present proceedings, applying that the award should be filed in Court. The first Court rejected the application, holding that it was barred by time and also on the ground that the award was invalid, as it had the effect of compounding a non-compoundable criminal offence. The lower Appellate Court accepted the appeal and gave the plaintiff a declaratory decree to the effect that the award was a good one and should be acted upon.

Defendant has filed an application for revision to this Court, and it is contended on his behalf that the application for filing the award was barred by time, having been made after the expiration of the statutory period of six months. The lower Appellate Court held that though the application had been filed in Court after the statutory period, yet the plaintiff was entitled to the benefit of section 14 of the Limitation Act. In Kalu v. Mehru Mal (1) it was held that a person claiming under section 14 of the Limitation Act an exclusion of time during which a former proceeding was pending must prove two things—first, that he had prosecuted the former proceeding with due diligence, and secondly, that the former Court had been unable to entertain it from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature. Now it cannot be said that the plaintiff in the present case had prosecuted with due diligence another civil proceeding within the meaning of section 14 of the Limitation Act. The previous case was brought by the present defendant and the present plaintiff as the defendant in that case merely defended the suit. It was held in Rajah Barodakant Roy v. Sookmoy Mookerjee Dabee (2) that the previous suit ought to have been brought by the plaintiff in the second suit or some person through whom he claims. Moreover, it cannot be said that the Court in which the previous suit was instituted was unable for defective jurisdiction or other cause of the like nature to entertain it. The Court was certainly able to entertain that suit. All that was held was that the defendant could not put forward a particular defence and that he should establish that defence by bringing a separate suit. Counsel for the petitioner also cites Ooday Monee Dabee v. Bishonath Dutt (3) and Ram Ugrah v. Achraj Nath (4), which support his contention. Maharajah Jugutendur v. Din Dyal Chatterjee (5) is distinguishable, because in that case the defendant in the suit claimed a set off on a full Court fee. Lakhan Chunder v. Madhusudan (6), which is cited by respondent's Pleader, is also obviously distinguishable. I hold that section 14 of the Limitation Act in terms does not apply to the present case and that the plaintiff is not entitled to any deduction of time thereunder. His application is clearly barred by time.

I, therefore, allow the revision and setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court restore that of the first Court; but as the proceedings were instituted in accordance with the Court's mistaken view of the law, I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Revision allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXIII, r. 1, O. XXXIII, rr. 5, 7, 15—Application or leave to sue as pauper—Application to withdraw application, dismissal of—Subsequent application for leave, maintainability of—Revision—High Court, power of interference of.

Where, upon the dismissal of an application to withdraw an application for leave to sue as a pauper, the applicant declines to proceed, and his application is, in consequence, dismissed, such dismissal operates to bar a subsequent application for leave to sue as a pauper, though it is open to the applicant to file a suit in the usual way on payment of fees. [p. 563, cols. 1 & 2.]

Quære.—Whether an order of dismissal such as the foregoing is open to revision by the High Court, under section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

Rule against the order of the Sub-Judge, Midnapore, in Pauper Case Suit No. 2 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sarada Charan Maity, for the Petitioner, contended that the Court below acted without jurisdiction in refusing to the petitioner leave to sue as a pauper. The Subordinate Judge has erred in holding that the dismissal of the previous application for leave to sue as a pauper operated as a bar to any fresh application. Order XXXIII, rule 15, Civil Procedure Code, could apply when the application was dismissed on the merits and, therefore, rule 15 could have no application to this case. The provisions of Order IX, rule 1, and of Order XXIII, rule 1, could have no application to the facts of this case because there was no suit before the Court. Order XXXIII, rule 15, provided that an order refusing the applicant permission to sue as a pauper would operate as bar to any subsequent application of a like nature by him in respect of the same right to sue. The case of Ranchod Morar v. Bezanji Edulji (1) relied on by the lower Court was not correctly decided. Unless the application was refused on the merits a fresh application could be maintained. Even if it was held that the application for leave to sue as a pauper was not maintainable, it could be treated as one under Order IX, rule 9, of the Civil Procedure Code.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra, for the Opposite Party, urged that the order of the lower Court could not be revised under section 115 because there was no question of jurisdiction involved in the case. The lower Court had jurisdiction to decide whether or not the application was competent, and rightly or wrongly it had come to a decision, which, therefore, could not be interfered with under section 115.

The lower Court has rightly found that having regard to the provisions of Order XXXIII, rules 5, 7 and 15, the present application was barred. If that were not so, there would be no end of such applications.

Babu Sarada Charan Maity briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.

CHITTY, J.—This is a Rule issued at the instance of Baroda Dasi, whose application to sue in forma pauperis has been refused by the Subordinate Judge. I feel some doubt whether the case comes within the provisions of section 115, Civil Procedure Code, but, apart from that difficulty, I do not think that the application should be granted. It appears that on 17th September 1917 the petitioner made a similar application before the Subordinate Judge which was registered, and notices were issued to the Collector and the opposite party. The case was adjourned on several occasions. On the 15th December 1917 the Government Pleader submitted a report after enquiry to the effect that the petitioner was not a pauper. The case was then further adjourned and ultimately came on for hearing on 23rd February 1918. On that occasion the petitioner applied for permission to withdraw from her application. The learned Judge thought that Order XXIII, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, relating to withdrawal of suits did not apply to this application and declined to allow her to withdraw. The petitioner thereupon refused to prosecute her application further and it was accordingly dismissed with costs to the opposite party. On 27th February 1918 she filed the present application, which is similar to the previous application, namely, to be allowed to sue in forma pauperis. The learned Subordinate Judge has thrown out her application, holding that her previous application having been rejected she could not present another one. The question turns on the interpretation to be put on Order XXXIII, rules 5, 7 and 15. Rule 15 is clear that an order refusing to allow the applicant to sue as a pauper shall be a bar to any subsequent application of a like nature by him in respect of the same right to sue, but, of course, the applicant may file a suit in the usual way on payment of fees. This is not a case of an application being dismissed for want of appearance. The petitioner was in Court with her Pleader, but under the circumstances, declined to proceed. It is now suggested that we might allow her to withdraw this and the previous application and to begin again with a third application. That we cannot possibly do. This appears to be an order refusing to allow her to sue as a pauper, and the fact that no evidence was taken was due to the refusal of the petitioner herself to proceed. In the circumstances we are not disposed to exercise our revisional powers, even if the matter comes within section 115, Civil Procedure Code. The Rule must, therefore, be discharged. We make no order as to costs.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

Rule discharged.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (II of 1905), s. 3 (1), (2)—Tea factory, whether agricultural land or village immoveable property—Forest, whether agricultural land—Tea garden, whether agricultural land—Government notification, whether has retrospective effect—Waiver of right, proof of—Omission to include fixtures in claim, effect of—Pre-emption, right of, limitations on—Plaintiff, duty of.

A tea factory built outside the limits of a village site is not liable to pre-emption either as agricultural land or as village immoveable property. [p. 565, col. 2.]

A stretch of natural forest which does not lie within the village site is also exempt from pre-emption, as it is not agricultural land nor land used for purposes subservient to agriculture. [p. 566, col. 1.

KAJU MAL v. SALIG RAM.

A garden is a plot of land devoted to the production of herbs, fruits, flowers and vegetables, and as tea does not fall under any of these heads, a tea garden is not a garden but is agricultural land and is liable to pre-emption. [p. 566, col. 1.]

Where a person, having a right of pre-emption, congratulates a vendee upon his purchase and joins in an entertainment given by the vendee on that occasion, such conduct does not amount to a waiver by that person of his right. [p. 566, col. 2.]

A notification of the Government restricting the right of pre-emption in a certain area cannot be regarded as having retrospective effect, so as to deprive a person of the right to pre-empt which he possessed prior to the issue of the notification but which from the date of the notification is taken away. [p. 566, col. 2.]

Where a plaintiff claims to assert a right to pre-empt a building used as a factory, he is not at liberty to omit to sue for the machinery therein as these are fixtures and form an integral part of the factory. A deliberate exclusion of the machinery fixtures would involve a dismissal of the suit. [p. 568, col. 2.]

The right of pre-emption is a very invidious right which constitutes an invasion of the principle of free contract, and the party who comes into Court to enforce that right must be careful to observe all the restrictions within which that right is hedged. [p. 568, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Kangra, dated the 26th February 1915.

Messrs. Peechey and Santanam, the Hon'ble Bakhshi Sohan Lal and Bhagat Govind Das, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, Bakhshi Tek Chand, Mr. Brij Lal and Diwan Mehr Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The property with which this pre-emption suit is concerned is a part of the Gopalpur Tea Estate, which was formerly owned by the Kangra Valley Tea Company. In 1912 after some dispute between Kaju Mal and Diwan Daya Kishen Kaul, who were rival purchasers, the Gopalpur Tea Estate was sold to Kaju Mal, defendant, for Rs. 97,000 and on the 1st October of that year the plaintiff, who is a Brahmin agriculturist of Jia, instituted the present suit for pre-emption of a portion of the estate sold, namely, an area of 10,524 kanals 8 marlas situate in Mauzas Gopalpur, Jia and Dadh Uparla as well as buildings situate in Mauza Gopalpur on payment of Rs. 50,000 or any other price that might be fixed by the Court. The residue of the area included in the sale was not included in the suit, inasmuch as plaintiff had no right of pre-emption in respect of those areas but in order to meet any objection on the part of the vendee that the residue of the tea areas by themselves would be of no value, the plaintiff offered to take over the whole of the area sold—an offer which was not accepted by the vendee. The Senior Subordinate Judge granted the plaintiff a decree for possession of the area in suit on payment of Rs. 75,000, holding that the property in suit was either agricultural land or village immoveable property within the meaning of section 3 of the Pre-emption Act II of 1905, that the plaintiff had not acquiesced in the sale to the vendee to a degree that amounted to waiver of his right to pre-empt and finally that the plaintiff had from the first included in his claim the fixed machinery of the tea factory.

The defendant vendee has appealed to this Court and on his behalf the points urged before us have been:—

Firstly, that the suit could not proceed, inasmuch as the plaintiff excluded from his claim the working machinery of the factory which must be regarded as a fixture;

Secondly, that a tea garden is not agricultural land;

Thirdly, that a portion of the area included in the sale was a natural forest, namely, the Ban Jia forest, which cannot be classed as agricultural land;

Fourthly, that the factory buildings are not village immoveable property inasmuch as they do not stand on the village site.

Fifthly, that the plaintiff had waived his right to pre-empt;

Sixthly, that by the Punjab Government Notification No. 4662, dated the 6th March 1916, the right to pre-empt in the Kangra District had been confined to the lineal heirs and collateral heirs of the vendor and, therefore, plaintiff had no right to pre-empt; and Finally, that the Senior Subordinate Judge had made a serious mistake in calculating the value of the area in suit and that if a decree in favour of plaintiff was to be maintained, the price to be paid by him should be not less than Rs. 85,000.

We shall deal first with the argument that the property in suit is not liable to pre-emption, and in this connection it must be borne in mind that the law applicable to the case is not the present Pre-emption Act of 1913 but the Punjab Act II o

1905, which was the law in force at the time of the sale to the vandee defendant. Prior to 1905 the law of pre-emption was contained in Act IV of 1872 and under that Act the right of pre-emption extended, if the property concerned lay within a village, to the village site, to the houses built upon the village site and to all lands within the village boundary. It is not clear that the right of pre emption under that Act extended to buildings erected upon lands within the village boundary but not on the village site, although no doubt the sites of such buildings would have been liable to pre-emption. In the Act of 1905 it was laid down that the right of pre emption should mean the right to acquire agricultural land or village immoveable property in cases affecting sales in a village, and definitions were given in the Act of the terms "agricultural land" 'and village immoveable property." Agricultural land was defined to be "land" as defined in the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, 1900, whilst village immoveable property was defined as immoveable property within the limits of the village site other than agricultural land. Now, the definition of land in the Panjab Alienation of Land Act, 1900, is as follows:—"'Land' means land which is not occupied as the site of any buildings in a town or village and is occupied or let for agricultural purposes or for purposes subservient to agriculture or for pasture, and includes the sites of buildings and other structures on such land." The framers of the Act of 1905 appear to have been under the impression that the categories "agricultural land" and "village immoveable property" exhausted all possible forms of property in a village, i.e, that there could be in a village only village immoveable property and agricultural land, but they failed apparently to perceive that buildings erected outside the limits of a village site on land not occupied for agricultural purposes would not fall within either definition. Consequently on behalf of the appellant it has been urged that the factory buildings are admittedly not within the village site. They are not erected on agricultural land or on land occupied for purposes subservient to agriculture or for pasture and, therefore, they are not liable to be pre empted. For the respondent-plaintiff it has been argued that the meaning of "village site" in the Pre emption Act of 1905 is not the village abadi but the superficial area of the whole village including its lands. In other words, the contention is that in section 3, sub section (2), of the Punjab Pre-emption Act of 1905 the expression "within the limits of village site" has been employed as synonymous with "within the village boundary." If that were true, it would be strange that the Legislature in 1905 should have used the term "the village site" in a sense different from that in which it is used in the Act of 1872 which was at that time under revision, and that they should have discarded the term "village boundary" which already existed in the Punjab Laws Act of 1872 and was ready to their hands. The term "village site" in the Punjab is a very well known expression of frequent occurrence denoting that portion of the village area which is not used for agricultural purposes but on which the habitations of the villagers are placed. In the Punjab there are as a rule no homesteads as in European countries, but from time immemorial, no doubt, for purposes of protection, villagers have congregated on one central spot within the village boundary and have there constructed a compact village generally of a rectangular or roughly circular shape, the doors of the houses of which rarely, if ever, open upon the outside wall. The Legislature in 1905 in defining the property in a village which was pre-emptible may have made a mistake, but with the intention of the Legislature we are not concerned. We have to administer the law as we find it and in the present case we hold that the factory, whether it constitutes a casus omissus or whether such property was deliberately excepted from the operations of the Act, is not liable to pre emption as village immoveable property.

The next point is whether the land under the factory can be said to be employed for purposes subservient to agriculture. Although fields planted with tea bushes are, we have no doubt, fields used for agricultural purposes, we cannot hold that a factory in which the produce of those fields is subjected to certain processes which fit it for human consumption and the markets of the world can be said to be subservient to agriculture. The building or land can be correctly said to be subservient to agriculture when it directly promotes agriculture, e. g., a building in which agricultural cattle or agricultural implements or stores are sheltered is directly subservient to agriculture because the property it shelters is used in the actual operations of agriculture; but a tea factory merely deals with the product of agriculture and is no more subservient to the production of tea than a whisky distillery in Aberdeen is subservient to agriculture, say, in Canada which produces the barley from which the whisky is distilled. From this it follows that the factory we are now dealing with is not pre-emptible either as agricultural land or as village immoveable property. It is true that intermingled with the other factory buildings there must be some huts used by the labourers who actually work in the tea fields or garden ; but the point has not been urged before us, nor is there anything on the record to indicate which of the buildings included in the suit are factory buildings proper and which are the buildings inhabited by the workers on the land, and we are unable to discriminate between the two categories.

Included in the area in suit is a stretch of natural forest land known as Ban Jia. That area also we hold to be exempt from pre-emption, for it does not lie within the village site and it is not agricultural land nor land used for purposes subservient to agriculture or for pasture. It is forest land and the wood derived from it, it is admitted before us, has been used by ths factory for fuel and for the manufacture of tea chests, whilst a small portion of its area consists of a slate quarry. With regard to the fields in suit in which tea is grown, it has been argued on behalf of the appellants that they are not agricultural land inasmuch as tea is grown not in fields but in a garden, but we do not think that because in general parlance a tea plantation is generally spoken of as a tea garden, it is not, therefore, agricultural land. A tea garden is, strictly speaking, not a garden, for a garden is a plot of land devoted to the production of herbs, flowers, fruits and vegetables, and tea falls under none of these heads. The term "agricultural land" is used in the Act of 1905 in its widest sense to denote all land which is tilled. Consequently if the plaintiff is to succeed, from his decree we must excise the factory buildings and the land under them and also the Ban Jia forest.

The appellant's contention that the plaintiff had waived his right to pre empt was dealt with before us very briefly and lukewarmly and the arguments adduced amounted at most to this that the plaintiff had congratulated the vendee upon his purchase and had joined in the entertainment which the vendee gave on that occasion, and we have no difficulty in agreeing with the Court below that this conduct on the part of the plaintiff does not amount to waiver.

The next point was with reference to the Punjab Government Notification No. 4662, dated the 6th of March 1916, which, it was urged, had a retrospective effect.

In support of this Counsel referred to Bishan Singh v. Ganda Singh (1). That ruling was to the effect that a notification modifying the law of pre-emption, published after the date of the sale on which the right of pre-emptor accrued, annihilated that right. With all deference we are unable to follow that ruling, which not only attributes to a notification greater force than to a repealing Act, but proceeds upon the principle that in the absence of a provision to the contrary a notification has retroactivity.

The next point taken was that in calculating the value of the property decreed, the learned Senior Subordinate Judge committed a serious mistake by failing to observe that the Lahla and Chachian lands for which the plaintiff did not sue are very inferior lands, further, that in making his calculations the Senior Subordinate Judge had compared the tea lands in suit with the whole of the land excluded from the suit which comprised a large area of banjar qadim or waste land. The Senior Subordinate Judge appears to have had considerable difficulty in deciding this question, for we note that his decision is based mainly on conjecture and we are surprised that he did not adopt the method of comparing the revenue assessed on the areas included in the suit and that on the areas excluded from it. In this respect this

Court has received very little aid from Counsel; the respondent, however, expressed his indifference if the price to be paid by the plaintiff were enhanced from Rs. 75,000 to Rs. 77,000, whilst the appellant pressed for Rs. 85,000.

After exclusion of the Ban Jia forest we find that the land in suit is as nearly as possible $\frac{2}{3}$rds of the whole area sold whilst the residue is of course $\frac{1}{3}$rd, but it will be observed that whilst the waste in the area in suit is only 1,180 kanals, in the area not in suit it amounts to 1,860 kanals.

It is unfortunate that we do not know the assessment of the areas not comprised in the suit, but we do not think we should remand on that account only.

The appraisement of buildings and machinery at Rs. 17,000 and of the Ban Jia forest at Rs. 14,000 has not been challenged in this Court, so that Rs. 66,000 as decided by the trial Court may be taken as the price of the lands sold and if the $\frac{2}{3}$rd and $\frac{1}{3}$rd proportion be applied, the price payable by plaintiff will be Rs. 44,000 but whilst retaining that proportion as a rough guide, we think that there should be some enhancement in view of the unrebutted evidence that the Lahla and Chachian tea lands are inferior, of the fact that the waste in the excluded area instead of being in the proportion of 1 to 2, is in the proportion of about $1\frac{1}{2}$ to 1, and of the principle that nothing should be presumed in favour of the pre-emptor, and we hold that Rs. 49,000 is a fair price for the lands in suit.

The last point in the case is whether the plaintiff's suit deserves to fail because he refused to sue for the pieces of machinery which were fixtures in the factory, although he asserted a right to pre-empt the factory and therefore failed to claim the whole bargain up to the limit of his right to pre-empt. In this connection it will be necessary to refer to the plaint and pleadings in the case. The plaint opens with a table giving the areas of the lands in suit and under items Nos. 13 and 14 are shown two engine houses and the question for decision is, whether in suing for those engine houses the plaintiff intended to sue for the engines and machinery set up in them. In clause 2 (a) of the plaint the property in suit is described as situated in certain villages and its detail is said to be given in certain lists. In clause 2 (b) of the plaint it was alleged that the above property mentioned in clause 2 (a) as also machinery, implements and other moveable articles were the property of the vendor. In clause 2 (g) of the plaint the plaintiff alleges that he has no right of pre-emption in respect of the whole property, but that he has such a right in respect of the property mentioned in clause (a) which he valued at Rs. 50,000. The plaint then proceeds:—"The remaining property of the villages Chachian and Lahla, as also machinery, implements, goods tea and other moveable articles at villages Gopalpur, Jia and Dadh Uparla, in respect of which the plaintiff has not got a right of pre-emption, are worth Rs. 47,000." From the plaint then it is clear that the plaintiff excepted from his claim machinery and implements on the ground that he had no right of pre-emption in respect of them. This plaint was presented to the Court on the 1st of October 1912. At page 236 of the paper-book will be found the preliminary objections filed by the vendee dated the 4th of January 1913. On that date in the presence of the plaintiff the vendee protested that as the plaintiff did not claim the machinery which was set up in the houses, his suit for a part of the property sold could not proceed. Neither on that date nor on the 6th of January did the plaintiff take any steps to meet his objection. Again on the 22nd of January 1913 the vendee defendant filed full pleas, in which he urged that the machinery fixtures had not been included in the suit. Again on the 8th of February other defendants in the case put in the same objection in the presence of the plaintiff's agent and Pleaders, and on that date issues were struck by the Court and from those issues it appears that even on that date the parties were still at issue on the point whether machinery should be included in the value of the houses, for an issue in that sense was struck and the onus placed on the defendant. Not only that, but another issue, No. 7, was struck as to the market-value of the houses in suit. The 15th of March was fixed for evidence on these issues, but nothing was done on that day and the 28th of April was the date to which the hearing was adjourned. On that adjourned date, however, nothing was done except that the words "with machinery" were interpolated in issue No. 7, so that the issue then ran:—"what is the market-value of the houses with machinery in suit?" Even at that stage, however, the plaintiff was anxious to avoid the decision of the issue whether the machinery should be included in the value of the houses and on the 1st of May 1913 he presented an application to the Court requesting that issue No. 8 should be struck out, inasmuch as it was alleged to be unnecessary. It was obviously not unnecessary, for even though the Court knew the value of the houses with machinery in suit, it would still have to determine whether the value of the machinery was to be excluded in determining the price to be paid by plaintiff. On the 30th of May no evidence was taken, but on the 25th of June another protest had been put in on behalf of minor defendants with regard to the omission of plaintiff to sue for the machinery which was a fixture. The 12th of July was then fixed for evidence, whereupon on behalf of the plaintiff his Counsel asserted that the machinery and implements which were excluded from the suit were a heap of old machinery lying near the godown and it was further stated that the fixture machinery had been from the first included in the plaint, but even if the Court held that the plaint did not include the working machinery, the suit was still pressed for the land and houses without machinery. No application on behalf of the plaintiff was made to amend the plaint and the suit proceeded on the original plaint.

Now, the question which we have to decide is whether the plaintiff from the outset was suing for the fixture machinery and even if he was not, whether that circumstance should be held fatal to his claim. On behalf of the appellant vendee it is urged that the omission to sue for the machinery was deliberate because the plaintiff was not anxious to purchase second-hand machinery and because he hoped, if successful, to purchase it for a song, knowing that the defendant would find it more profitable to part with it at a loss rather than to take it down and remove it. For the respondent-plaintiff it is urged that the value of the machinery was so small an item (it has been valued at Rs. 5,000) that it is incredible that the plaintiff would have deliberately omitted it; that if he did omit through inadvertence or mistake of law, he had declared his intentions in time and his original mistake had been cured. With regard to the explanation given by plaintiff's Counsel on the 12th of July 1913, we are of the opinion that the statement that the machinery excluded from the suit was a heap of old rubbish was quite incorrect. It is true that there was some discarded machinery lying outside the factory, but that machinery was not mentioned in the deed of sale and it is obvious from the whole wording of the plaint that that discarded machinery was not the machinery referred to in clauses 2 (b) and 2 (g) of the plaint. Now the right of pre-empti n is a very invidious right which constitutes an invasion of the principle of free contract, and the party who comes into Court to enforce that right must be careful to observe all the restrictions within which that right is hedged. We need not go to the length of assuming that the plot ascribed by the appellant's Counsel to the plaintiff is true, but it seems to us that plaintiff's Counsel in drawing up the plaint made a mistake of law in supposing that his client was entitled to sue for the factory and at the same time exclude the machinery fixtures. It is sufficient for us to say that the machinery fixed in the houses was deliberately excluded from the plaint probably under the mistaken notion that it was no integral part of the factory and as the plaint was never subsequently amended, it was defective.

Had the plaintiff honestly recognized his mistake, and admitted that he had omitted to sue for the machinery and had he prayed to amend, this concession might well have been granted to him, but we do not think he should have been allowed to succeed on a plaint which excludes the machinery, on a false allegation that the machinery was included ab initio in the claim.

Had then the first Court dismissed the suit on the preliminary ground that plaintiff alleged in his plaint a right to sue for the factory but refused to include the machinery in his suit, that order of dismissal would have been justified. As, however, we hold that the plaintiff had no right at all to sue for the factory, we do not think it would be right to dismiss the suit on that ground at this stage, though the matter is one to be borne in mind when costs are being allotted.

In view of the foregoing we accept the appeal and modify the lower Court's decree by decreeing to plaintiff the properties in suit, less the factory buildings and compound and the Ban Jia forest, on payment into Court within two months of Rs. 49,000.

If Rs. 49,000 are paid as above provided, parties shall bear their own costs through out, if not, the suit shall stand dismissed with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted in part.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

APPEAL AGAINST ORDER No. 325 OF 1917.

November 27, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Spencer.

CHENGALRAYA CHETTI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 TO 3 AND 5—APPELLANTS

RAGHAVA RAMANUJA DOSS AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANTS NOS. 4, 9 AND 10—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, Sch. II, para. 16—Arbitration—Court, reference to, as arbitrator—Reference by some only of parties, validity of—Award as against all parties—Appeal, whether lies—Appeal by ex parte defendants, effect of—Award passed on local inspection without recording evidence and without allowing time for objections—Remand, whether re-opens whole case or only in respect of party appealing—Revision—Irregularity—High Court, power of interference of.

A consent given by the parties to a suit to abide by the decision of a Court is not such a reference to arbitration as is contemplated by the provisions of Schedule II to the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 570, col. 2.]

Where a Court itself acts as arbitrator on a question of fact and gives an award, there is no appeal against its decision, not because the provisions of Schedule II to the Civil Procedure Code apply to the award made by the Court, but because a party cannot go back on his consent to abide by the decision of an arbitrator after the award is given. [p. 571, col. 1; p. 573, col. 2.]

A judgment on an award, if it is pronounced in contravention of the provisions of Schedule II, paragraph 16, clause (1), does not fall under paragraph 16 (2) and, consequently, there is no prohibition of an appeal from such a judgment. [p. 571, col. 2.]

Where, therefore, a Court, which is asked to arbitrate, pronounces an award on a mere local inspection and on no legal evidence and without pronouncing on the evidence already adduced and without giving time to the parties to prefer their objections to it, the award is illegal and an appeal lies against it. Even if no appeal were competent in such a case, the High Court would have power to interfere in revision on the ground of material irregularity. [p. 573, col. 1.]

An award by a Court, which is appointed as arbitrator by some only of the parties, will bind those who join in the reference, but in respect of those who do not, the Court should give its decision on the materials placed before it as a Court. It is illegal for a Court to accept the position of arbitrator when all the parties interested do not join in consenting to such appointment. [p. 572, col. 2.]

Where an Appellate Court remands a case for re-trial on the appeal of those defendants who did not join in a reference to arbitration on the ground that the award was not binding on them, the whole case is re-opened even in respect of those parties who did not appeal. [p. 572, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order, dated the 26th March 1917, of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Vellore, in Appeal Suit No. 34 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Arni, in Original Suit No. 67 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastri, for the Appellants.—The District Munsif's judgment was on a reference by the parties to him to act as arbitrator. It is an award and no appeal lay from it to the Subordinate Judge. Even if the award is illegal, an appeal is prohibited.

Mr. A. Viswanatha Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The order of remand is justified under the circumstances. All the parties did not constitute the Court as an arbitrator and it should not have assumed the functions of an arbitrator. The award should have been restricted to the parties who actually made the reference. An independent judgment should have been pronounced in respect of the ex parte defendants on the materials placed before the Court. The ex parte defendants were certainly entitled to appeal.

No time was given to the parties for filing objections. Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, does not apply.

No evidence was recorded and the District Munsif erred in pronouncing judgment on a mere inspection of the locality.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and 5 to 8 are the appellants. The defendants Nos. 1 to 3 alone and the plaintiff agreed to abide by the decision of the District Munsif passed as an arbitrator. The defendants Nos. 4 and 5, who are majors and who are interested in the litigation, remained ex parte as also the guardian of the minor defendants Nos. 9 and 10. The defendants Nos. 6 to 8 are minors represented by their guardians, defendants Nos. 1 and 2. So far as the defendants Nos. 6 to 8 are concerned, it might be taken (though the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 do not expressly say so in the statement given to the District Munsif) that their guardians, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, agreed to abide by the District Munsif's decision on behalf of these minors also.

The District Munsif, as such arbitrator, dismissed the plaintiff's suit on a mere inspection of the disputed house sites without referring to the evidence of the plaintiff's witness already examined and apparently without allowing an opportunity to the plaintiff to prove his case further against the ex parte defendants Nos. 4, 5, 9 and 10.

On appeal by the plaintiff, the Subordinate Judge set aside the District Munsif's decision on the following grounds:—

(1) There was no valid reference to arbitration under Schedule II, paragraph 1, to the Civil Procedure Code, as the defendants Nos. 4 to 10 did not join in the reference.

(2) The judgment of the District Munsif (which was also the award) was passed on the date of the award itself, without giving to the plaintiff 10 days' time to apply to set aside the award under Schedule II, paragraph 16 (1).

(3) The reference to arbitration on behalf of the minors (the defendants Nos. 6 to 8) not having been made with sanction of the Court, the reference was invalid under Order XXXII, rule 7.

The Subordinate Judge accordingly remanded the suit to the District Munsif for fresh disposal according to law. In this appeal against the Subordinate Judge's order of remand it was contended as follows:—

3rd ground.—The decision of the District Munsif was in the nature of an award and no appeal lay.

5th ground.—The lower Court erred in assuming that the provision in paragraph 1 of the 2nd Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code would in terms apply to this case.

7th ground.—No appeal would lie from the decree passed on an award even if it is illegal (evidently Schedule II, paragraph 16, clause (2) is relied on in this ground).

Two other points not clearly raised in the grounds of appeal were also argued, namely, (1) that the defendants Nos. 6 to 8 (though their guardians did not expressly state that they gave their consent on the minors' behalf) were bound by the consent given by their guardians, (2) that in any event, the decision was voidable by the minors under Order XXXII, rule 7 (2), and not at the instance of the plaintiff (who appealed to the Sub-Court).

I think that a consent given by the parties to abide by the decision of a Court is not such a reference to arbitration as is contemplated by the provisions of Schedule II to the Civil Procedure Code,

In Nimmagadda Peda Nagamma, In re (1) I made the following observations: "An agreement not to appeal is binding on the parties, the consideration being their mutual consent to refer the matter in dispute to the Court as an arbitrator.

"The application to the Court itself to act as arbitrator is not an application coming under the Civil Procedure Code, Schedule II, paragraphs 1 and 2, which paragraphs clearly contemplate the passing of an order of reference under Schedule II, paragraph 3, the fixing of a time by the Court in that order for the making of the award by the arbitrator (other than the Court) and the Court's not acting further in the matter till the time expires. They all clearly contemplate a reference to a third person (or third persons other than the Court) as arbitrator or arbitrators.

"When an award is made by the Court itself acting as arbitrator, there is no separate judgment to be passed as distinguished from the award itself. As said in Nidamarthi Mukkanti v. Thammana Ramayya (2), the decision of the Court 'must be looked on as an award.' The Code nowhere contemplates that when the Court itself is the arbitrator, it must first give a separate award, then wait for objections to the award made by itself, hear such objections as a Court to its own award as arbitrator and lastly pronounce judgment on the award if it does not set it aside. The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, which are naturally applicable and were clearly intended by the Legislature to apply only to awards made by an arbitrator other than the Court and which are clearly inapplicable and would be almost grotesque when applied to an award made by the Court itself acting as an arbitrator, cannot be invoked in the latter class of awards."

(1) 26 Ind. Cas. 355.
(2) 26 M. 76 at p. 77.

I adhere to my above view and hold that where the Court itself acts as an arbitrator on a question of fact, the reason why an appeal does not lie is, not because the provisions of Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, (including the provisions in paragraph 16, clause 2, which forbids an appeal in certain cases) apply to the award made by the Court, but because on general principles of jurisprudence a party cannot go back on his consent to abide by the decision of an arbitrator after the award is given, just as he cannot resile from the obligations arising from an executed contract. I am aware that in Nidamarthi Mukkanti v. Thammana Ramayya (2) (Bhashyam Aiyangar and Moore, JJ.) the award by the Court is treated on the footing of an award under Chapter XXXVII of the old Civil Procedure Code, corresponding to the present Schedule II, and that sections 521 and 522, corresponding to paragraphs 15 and 16 of the new Code, are referred to in the short judgment delivered by the learned Judges. While the decision itself is, if I may say so with respect, correct, I venture to doubt if the reason based on the assumed applicability of sections 521 and 522 can be supported. In Sayad Zain v. Kalabhai Lallubhai (3) the learned Judges say at page 755, "here the parties agreed that they would abide by the decision of the Subordinate Judge. The fact that the express provisions of Chapter XXXVIII of the Civil Procedure Code were knowingly disregarded, shows that the proceedings were extra cursum curiæ and thus the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was in the nature of an arbitrator's award against which an appeal cannot be entertained, if the competency of the Appellate Court is objected to by the party holding the judgment. See Burgess v. Morton (4)." The learned Judges in this case clearly held that it is not by reason of the provisions of Chapter XXXVIII that the appeal does not lie, but on general principles of jurisprudence. Turning to Burgess v. Morton (4), Lord Halsbury says at page 138: "My Lords, it has been held in this House that where, with the acquiescence of both parties, a Judge departs from the ordinary course of procedure and, as in this case, decides upon a question of fact, it is incompetent for the parties afterwards to assume that they have then an alternative mode of proceeding and to treat the matter as if it had been heard in due course * * * * * * They are precluded from treating the matter as subject to appeal. The Court of Appeal had no jurisdiction to entertain the question." As Lord Westbury put it in Bickett v. Morris (5), the decisions in these cases proceeded upon the personal incompetency of the parties to raise an objection to the correctness of the Court's award as arbitrator by way of an appeal, and not on any statutory or other provision.

The reasons, therefore, given by the learned Subordinate Judge and the contentions of the appellant's Vakil based on the provisions of Schedule II cannot, in my opinion, be supported.

I might, however, state that, assuming that the provisions of Schedule II do apply to a submission to the Court, the decision in Najm-ud-din Ahmad v. Albert Puech (6) lays down that the judgment on an award, if the judgment is pronounced in contravention of the provisions of Schedule II, paragraph 16 (1), does not fall under paragraph 16 (2) and hence there is no prohibition of an appeal from such a judgment.

Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (7) does not affect this particular question. There the provisions of the first three paragraphs of section 522, corresponding to Schedule II, paragraph 16, clause 1, had been complied with and so the judgment given was a judgment according to those provisions and hence the fourth paragraph of section 522, corresponding to Schedule II, paragraph 16, clause 2, did apply and their Lordships of the Privy Council, therefore, held that no appeal lay.

In the present case, the judgment on the award was pronounced without allowing any opportunity for an application to be made to set it aside and hence without hearing and deciding any objection. The decision in Najm-ud-din Ahmad v. Albert Puech (6) directly applies, assuming for argument's sake (as I said before) that Schedule II applies to the award made by a Court acting out of its ordinary procedure.

So far as the defendants Nos. 6 to 8 are concerned, I am inclined to agree with the appellants' learned Vakil that their guardians (the defendants Nos. 1 and 2) did evidently intend to refer a question of fact to the arbitration of the District Munsif on behalf of the said minors also and the Subordinate Judge's opinion that the award is invalid owing to the minor defendants Nos. 6 to 8 not having joined cannot, therefore, be supported. But he rightly relied on the fact that the defendants Nos. 4, 5, 9 and 10 did not join in the reference. A perusal of the plaint clearly indicates that the defendants Nos. 4, 5, 9 and 10 were as much interested in the suit as the other defendants and hence the decision in Vythinatha Aiyar v. Vaithilinga Mudaliar (8) (assuming it to have been rightly decided) has no application, as it was assumed in that case that the ex parte defendants were not interested in the suit.

In the result, I am inclined to hold that if the District Munsif acted properly in accepting the position of an arbitrator under the circumstances of this case, his judgment, which is in the nature of an award as between the plaintiff and the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and 6 to 8, is binding on these parties as between themselves just as a lawful contract is binding on the parties thereto. But the suit as between the plaintiff and the defendants Nos. 4, 5, 9 and 10 could not be decided by the District Munsif as an arbitrator and he ought to have given a decision in the suit, so far as they were concerned, on the materials placed before him as a Court. He, however, dismissed the plaintiff's suit against the defendants Nos. 4, 5, 9 and 10 also, merely on the impression he formed at his local inspection and on no legal evidence and without pronouncing on the evidence already adduced before him as a Court and without giving an opportunity to the plaintiff to proceed with the trial against those defendants.

It is true that those defendants have not been prejudiced and did not appeal to the Subordinate Judge, the plaintiff who consented to abide by the Court's decision as an arbitrator having been the appellant. But the Subordinate Judge was entitled to consider on appeal the illegality of the District Munsif's judgment passed against the plaintiff in favour of the defendants Nos. 4, 5, 9 and 10 and to set it aside. It might be said that he should then have set the Munsif's decree aside only so far as it dismissed the plaintiff's suit against those defendants, and not so far as it dismissed the suit against the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and 6 to 8. But it would be a wholly inconvenient and anomalous thing that where several defendants have got the same interest, the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed in respect of some defendants and decreed against others. The two decrees would be inconsistent and unworkable. It is, on this ground, that Schedule II, paragraph 1, rightly insists that a reference to arbitration, even when made to an arbitrator who is not a Court, should be by "all the parties interested." (The former Code, section 506, was even more stringent and in its literal sense, insisted on all parties, whether interested or not, joining in the reference.) Though as I said already, paragraph 1 of the Schedule II does not apply to a case where a Court departing from its function of deciding in the ordinary way is asked to decide a question of fact extra cursum curiæ at the request of parties, the Court should follow the rule laid down in Schedule II, paragraph 1 (1), and refuse to act as an arbitrator unless all the parties interested agree. In this particular case, the District Munsif acted with material irregularity and illegally in consenting to decide the suit as arbitrator even as between the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and 6 to 8 on the one hand and the plaintiff on the other, as the defendants Nos. 4, 5, 9 and 10, who were interested in the dispute in the same way as the other defendants, did not join and as his decision as an arbitrator would not bind the plaintiff so far as his claim was made against the defendants Nos. 4, 5, 9 and 10 and the futility of his decision as an arbitrator, when some of the parties did not join, was apparent.

Though the Subordinate Judge did not base his order setting aside the dismissal of the suit against the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and 6 to 8 also on the above ground, I think that we might support it on that ground, namely, that the District Munsif acted illegally in accepting the position of an arbitrator when all the parties interested did not join in consenting to his acting as such. I might add that the District Munsif seems to have, when writing his judgment, forgotten altogether that there were other parties in the suit besides those who consented to abide by his decision on inspection (see paragraph 4 of his judgment).

Finally, even if no appeal lay against the District Munsif's judgment (in the nature of an award) because Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, applies to such an award, because it had not been set aside by an application under Schedule II, paragraph 15, and because paragraph 16 (2) also applied, I should be prepared in revision to set aside the District Munsif's decision [see Velu Pillay v. Appasawmi Pandaram (9) and Sita Nath Goswami v. Baikuntha Nath Goswami (10)] as affected with illegalities and irregularities and I would pass a decision in the same terms as those of the Subordinate Judge.

In the result, the appeal is dismissed, but as the plaintiff's own conduct led to the illegal decision of the District Munsif, I would make no order as to costs.

SPENCER, J.—I agree. In Nidamarthi Mukkanti v. Thammana Ramayya (2), Sayad Zain v. Kalabhai Lallubhai (3) and Sita Nath Goswami v. Baikuntha Nath Goswami (10), which are all cases of Munsifs or Judges arbitrating between the parties in suits over which they had jurisdiction, it is stated that their decision in each case "must be looked on as an award" or "was in the nature of an arbitrator's award." In the last named case Chitty, J., goes so far as to say it was an award, and in this and the Madras case allusions are made to the sections of the old Code which provide for references to arbitration. But I agree with my learned brother that parties who give their consent to the Court itself acting as an arbitrator are debarred from afterwards questioning the Court's decision, not by reason of the procedure prescribed in the Code, but because they are bound by their agreement.

In this case even if the District Munsif's decision is treated as falling under the rules laid down in Schedule II of the Civil Procedure Code, an appeal lies on the authority of Najm-ud-din Ahmad v. Albert Puech (6) on account of that Court's failure to allow time for objections before passing its decree.

I feel some hesitation in assuming, as was done in Ishar Das v. Keshab Deo (11) and Vythinatha Aiyar v. Vaithilinga Mudaliar (8), that all parties, who remain ex parte at the trial of a suit, even if they are minors or persons whose presence is necessary to enable the Court to adjudicate effectually and completely on the issues, are not "parties interested" within the meaning of paragraph 1 of Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code.

I think that the plaintiff was entitled and bound to prove his claim against those parties who did not join in the agreement to have the suit decided in a particular manner, and I hold that even if no appeal lay to the Sub-Court against the District

Munsif's decision, we should not interfere with an order which we should ourselves have passed if the matter had come up to this Court on revision, especially when it is one that, as it stands, does substantial justice between the parties.

The civil miscellaneous appeal should therefore, be dismissed on the terms proposed.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.
CIVIL REVISION No. 996 OF 1917.
January 24, 1919.
Present:—Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof.
MANGAT RAI—PETITIONER
versus
ALIA AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Judgment, construction of—Counsel's fee, apportionment of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 151, 152—Amendment of decree—Inherent power of Court.

Where two defendants are jointly represented by one Pleader, and the suit as against one is dismissed with costs and as against the other decreed with costs, and the judgment is silent as to how the costs are to be apportioned, the reasonable construction to be put upon the judgment is that the Court intended to allow half the Counsel's fee to the successful defendant. [p. 575, col. 1.]

The Courts in India have an inherent power to amend or vary decrees so as to bring them into accordance with the judgments, after they are signed by the Judges, even if they do not fall within section 152 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 575, col. 1.]

Revision from the order of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, Hissar, dated the 20th June 1917.

Pandit Nanak Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Badr-ud Din Kureshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This application for revision should be allowed. The facts out of which it has arisen are these. One Mangat Rai, plaintiff, brought a suit for the recovery of Rs. 3,000 on book account against Alia, defendant No. 1, and defendant No. 2, Fatteh Muhammad, the son of the defendant No. 1. Both the defendants engaged one Counsel. Lala Gulal Chand, the Subordinate Judge of the second class, decreed the suit as against the defendant No. 2 with costs and dismissed it with costs as against defendant No. 1 on the 7th October 1916. The order was made in these words:—"On the above findings plaintiff seems entitled to a decree for Rs. 1,663, principal, and Rs. 856-5-0, interest, total Rs. 2,519-5 0, with costs in proportion against defendant No. 2, Fatteh Muhammad only, and I decree accordingly and dismiss the rest of the claim and discharge Alia, defendant No. 1, whose costs will be paid by the plaintiff." The decree-writer entered Rs. 150 as the costs of Alia on account of the Counsel's fee in the case. The present petitioner made an application in the lower Court for the amendment of this decree, on the ground that according to the correct interpretation of the judgment only half the Counsel's fee must be taken to have been decreed by the Court to Alia and the decree had been wrongly prepared inasmuch as Rs. 150, namely, the entire sum taxable on Rs. 3,000 had been allowed to him in the decree. The learned Subordinate Judge disallowed the application. The petitioner has come up in revision to this Court.

It is argued on his behalf that the learned Subordinate Judge has wrongly refused to amend the decree and has thus committed an illegality in the exercise of his jurisdiction. The real question which I have to decide in this case is whether the decree is, as a matter of fact, at variance with the judgment. Now it is quite clear that there is no specified amount of costs decreed by the judgment in the case to any of the parties. I have then to decide the question, what was really intended by the Court that gave that judgment? A very similar question arose in the case of Beaumont v. Senior (1). His Lordship the Chief Justice, Lord Alverstone, observed thus in that case:—

"It may be that where two defendants are jointly represented by the same solicitor, and it is agreed between them that one of them shall be liable to the solicitor for all the costs of the defence, then in the event of the other defendant being successful in the action he cannot recover any costs from the plaintiff, not being liable to his solicitor for them; otherwise the successful defendant would be in the position of receiving costs from the plaintiff which he had not incurred in defending the action, and to which, therefore, he was not entitled." Further on he observed: "In the absence of any agreement between the two defendants as to how the costs of the defence were to be borne, it is clear, on the authority of the cases to which we have been referred, that each of the two defendants is liable to their solicitor for half the costs of the defence, and that will be the amount of costs which the plaintiff will have to pay the successful defendant."

In this case also the reasonable construction to be put upon the judgment is that the Court intended to allow half the Counsel's fee to the successful defendant.

It is contended on behalf of the respondents that this application for amendment of the decree cannot be entertained because it does not come strictly within section 152 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In my opinion this contention has no force. When a decree is at variance with the judgment, it has always been held that the Court has got an inherent power to correct the mistake in the decree. It was so decided in the case of Brijratan v. Jaynarain (2). The head note of that case runs thus:—"The Courts in India have an inherent power to amend or vary decrees so as to bring them into accordance with the judgments, after they are signed by the Judges, even if they do not fall within section 152 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908)." In accordance with the rule laid down in this case, I set aside the judgment of the lower Court and order that the decree be amended and brought into conformity with the judgment and only half the Counsel's fee be allowed to Alia, defendant No. 1. This application for revision is, therefore, allowed with costs in both the Courts.

Revision accepted.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 405 OF 1917.

January 10, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Richardson and Justice Sir Syed Shamsul Huda, Kt.

BIJOYA KANTA LAHIRY CHOWDHURY —DEFENDANT No. 1—APPELLANT

KAILASH CHANDRA BHOWMIK AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Specific performance—Agreement, oral, to grant lease —Draft to be prepared and approved by parties—Conditions, some, not settled—Specific performance, whether can be granted.

It is settled law that there may be a concluded agreement, though a document is to be executed embodying its terms. [p. 577, col. 2.]

Where the parties agree to the execution of a formal lease the draft of which is to be approved by them, specific performance can be enforced of the original agreement, even though the draft has not been prepared and approved. [p. 577, col. 2]

The defendant contracted orally with the plaintiffs to give them a putni lease of his share in certain property, at a certain annual rent and for a certain premium. The agreement provided for the preparation of a draft of the lease according to the terms settled, which was to be approved by the lessor's Pleader. In a suit for specific performance of the contract:

Held, (1) that all the material terms of the lease having been settled, in the absence of express agreement to the contrary, matters not expressly settled would be regulated by the provisions of the law in that behalf; [p. 577, col. 2.]

(2) that there was, in the circumstances of the case, a binding agreement to grant a lease, though a document was to be executed embodying its terms, and, therefore, defendant could not resile from the agreement, nor could he or his Pleader refuse assent to a properly drawn instrument. [p. 577, col. 2.]

Per Shamsul Huda, J.—In all cases of an agreement for a sale or for a lease where a registered document is necessary to complete the transfer, the approval and execution of such a document is always in the contemplation of the parties. To hold that in all such cases there is no contract capable of specific performance till the document itself is executed, would lead to results which the law never contemplated. [p 579, col. 2; p. 580, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 29th November 1916, affirming that of the Additional Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 26th April 1911.

Sir Rash Behari Ghose (with him Babu Mohendra Nath Roy), for the Appellant.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Birendra Kumar De), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—This is a second appea arising out of a suit for specific performance of an agreement for the grant of a lease. The suit has had a long history. Specific performance was granted by the decree of the trial Court dated 26th April 1911. On first appeal that decree was reversed by a decree dated 5th March 1912, the Court holding that the agreement was incomplete inasmuch as it did not fix the date from which the lease should commence and further holding that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that they had tendered the balance of the premium within the period stipulated. The plaintiffs preferred a second appeal to the High Court (No. 1183 of 1912*), which came before Mookerjee and Roe, JJ. By a judgment dated 15th May 1915 those learned Judges held that it was plain, in view of the provisions of section 110 of the Transfer of Property Act, that the intention of the parties must have been, in the absence of indication to the contrary, that the lease should take effect from the date of the execution of the instrument. On the question of tender, the learned Judges held that no time having been fixed for payment of the balance of the premium the plaintiffs were at liberty to make, and on the facts found had made, their tender within a reasonable time. The result was that the decree of the lower Appellate Court was set aside, and the suit was remanded to that Court in order that the appeal thereto might be re-heard on other points which had not been dealt with. The appeal has accordingly been re-heard by the Second Additional District Judge of Mymensingh, who has made a decree dated 29th November 1916 confirming, with some modifications, the decree of the trial Court for specific performance. From that decision the present appeal has been taken by the defendant No. 1.

The appellant is the owner of a fractional share of the property to which the suit relates. The case for the plaintiffs is that he contracted orally to give them a patni lease of the share. A close approach to an agreement to that effect is admitted, but it has been contended in defence that for various reasons other than those already dealt with by the High Court in the judgment of May 1915, the agreement was incomplete and is incapable of specific performance.

Some of the questions in controversy in the Court below have been finally disposed of in the judgment appealed from, and I shall confine myself to the matters discussed in the argument before us.

As the suit is based on an oral agreement, no question arises as to the construction of any document. The terms of the agreement and the intention of the parties are questions of fact depending on oral evidence and unless the Judge in the Court below has misapplied any principle of law to the facts which he has found, we cannot in second appeal quarrel with his conclusions. Moreover, the Judge is not bound by the language in which he states the terms of the agreement, as gathered by him from witnesses speaking to their recollection of conversations, in the same way in which the parties would be bound by the language of a written document to which they had subscribed their names. The statement of the terms by the Judge can only be regarded as approximating more or less closely to the words which the parties actually used at the time, and the Judge may look at the evidence as a whole for the purpose of elucidating the intention of the parties on any particular point.

Now, the Court below has found that negotiations having been going on for some time, on the 15th Pous 1315 an agreement was arrived at between the parties, comprising in substance four terms or conditions as follows:—

(1) That defendant No. 1 would grant to the plaintiffs a patni lease of his 3 annas and 15 gandas share in Mouzas Ranigaon, Telipara and Pabai.

(2) That the rent payable by the lessors should be Rs. 50 annually.

(3) That a sum of Rs. 1,300 should be paid as nazar or premium.

(4) That a draft lease was to be prepared accordingly and approved by the defendant's Pleader, Babu Shyama Charan Roy.

It has further been found that on the same day, the 15th Pous, Rs. 400 was paid by the plaintiffs to the defendant by way of earnest money.

The argument advanced in the Court below that the agreement was incomplete because it made no express provision in regard to certain particulars said to be essential in a patni lease has been pressed before us only in reference to three particulars. It is contended that the agreement is deficient in not providing

(1) for the kists or instalments in which rent should be paid,

(2) for the rate at which interest should run on arrears of rent, and

(3) whether security should or should not be given by the lessees for the due payment of the rent.

As to kists and interest on arrears, I agree with the Court below that in the absence of express agreement, the parties presumably intended that such matters should be regulated by the tenancy law of the country. As to security there seems no reason why any provision should be made. This contention fails.

The learned Vakil for the defendant, however, directed himself mainly to the fourth of the conditions above set out. It has been urged upon us that inasmuch as the preparation of a formal instrument of lease was contemplated, there was no concluded agreement. The effect of a reference to a formal document in connection with an agreement which is being negotiated was considered in the case of Hyam v. Gubbay (1) by the late Chief Justice and two learned Judges of this Court. The result of the English authorities there cited appears to be that it is a question of the intention of the parties whether there is to be no binding contract till the document is executed or whether the document is merely to commemorate, it may be in a manner required by law, the terms of a bargain already complete.

The conclusion of the Court below in the present case is that the lease to be drawn up "was only to put into more formal shape the terms agreed upon between the parties with the insertion of usual legal phraseology and terms necessary in patni patta." It is said that the mere fact that a formal document was contemplated was prima facie an indication that the party did not intend to be bound till it was executed. That may be so, but there was other evidence before the Court. There was, for instance, the payment of earnest money. Such payment may not be conclusive to show a binding contract but it was a fact which the Court was entitled to take into consideration. It cannot be said that there is no evidence to support the conclusion at which the Court arrived. That being so, the conclusion must be accepted.

Stress is laid on the draft lease having to be approved by the defendant's Pleader, but what difference does that make in the circumstances of the present case? The parties arranged to put their agreement in writing and the writing was to be approved by the defendant's Pleader. The two things go together and the whole question is whether there was a concluded agreement. It is settled, as I have said, that there may be a concluded agreement though a document is to be executed embodying its terms. In such a case the contents of the document have, of course, to be approved by both parties before the document is executed, but merely from the point of view whether the document correctly and formally gives effect to the settled terms of the agreement. If it does, it represents the agreement which either party can be compelled to perform. A reference to a Pleader in this connection does not necessarily alter the position. The function of the Pleader may be merely to say whether the draft correctly carries out the agreement. The defendant, therefore, is not entitled to assert, as he has attempted to do, that merely because mention was made of a draft lease and his Pleader's approval thereof, therefore, there never was a binding agreement. It was open to the Court to find, and the Court has found, a binding agreement, and all objections on the score of uncertainty and so forth have been rejected. That being so, the defendant cannot resile from the agreement, nor can he or his Pleader refuse assent to a properly drawn instrument If it be said that he or his Pleader might refuse assent to a draft not in accordance with the agreement, I quite agree. But the defendant has never met the plaintiffs fairly on that ground. He has contended from the first that there was no agreement. No doubt the draft filed by the plaintiffs with the plaint has been found to be open to exception as going beyond the agreement. But the plaintiffs, it appears, have throughout been willing to accept any reasonable modification of their draft. As modified by the directions contained in the decree of the Court below, the draft will apparently meet the requirements of the case.

There is no ground for our interference in second appeal and I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

HUDA, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for specific performance of a contract. The facts, so far as they have any bearing on the questions raised before us, are shortly these: plaintiffs alleged that the defendant No. 1 agreed with the plaintiffs Nos. 2, 4 and 5 to grant to them and to other plaintiffs a maurasi mokarari lease of the defendant's share in certain Mauzas at a fixed annual jama of Rs. 50 and for a premium of Rs. 1,300, out of which the plaintiffs paid Rs. 400 at the time of the agreement and promised to pay the rest within a month, that the plaintiffs were ready and willing to pay this amount within the time stipulated but the defendant refused to accept the balance due and perform his part of the contract.

The defence, inter alia, was that although there were negotiations for a lease they had not ripened into a contract, that no portion of the premium was paid, although the plaintiffs had made a deposit of Rs. 400 with the defendant's cashier in anticipation of a contract, that all the terms and conditions of the lease had not been settled and plaintiffs were not, therefore, entitled to a decree for specific performance.

The Courts below have found that there was a binding oral agreement between the parties, that there was no uncertainty either as regards the land to be leased or as regards the rent or the premium and that the plaintiffs' allegation regarding the payment of a portion of the premium was true, and have upon these findings decreed the plaintiffs' suit.

Admittedly there was an understanding between the parties that the draft of the patta would have to be approved by the defendant's Pleader. Plaintiffs' case is that they prepared such a draft at defendant's request and submitted it to the defendant's Pleader for approval and that the draft was so approved after certain alterations. This is denied by the defendant and there is no clear finding on this point.

The learned Vakil for appellant has argued in the first instance that the agreement is incapable of being specifically enforced as all the terms and conditions of the lease had not been settled. This agreement is completely disposed of by the finding of the lower Appellate Court, that all the material terms of the lease had been settled, that as regards those not expressly settled it was understood that these would be in accordance with the provisions of the law in that behalf in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary. Accordingly the lower Appellate Court has directed the defendant No. 1 to execute a patni patta in favour of plaintiffs Nos. 2, 4 and 5 in respect of 3 annas and 15 gundas share in Mouzas Ranigaon, Telipara and Pabai in terms agreed upon between them on 15th Pous 1315, other terms not agreed upon being provided by law.

The first contention, therefore, fails.

It is next argued that as the parties contemplated the execution of a formal lease to be approved by them, specific performance cannot be granted of the original agreement. In support of this contention reliance has been placed on Winn v. Bull (2), Hampshire v. Wickens (3) and Hyam v. Gubbay (1) and on the decisions referred to in the last mentioned case. It seems to me that the cases cited are clearly distinguishable from the present case.

In Winn v. Bull (2) there was a written agreement whereby the defendant had agreed to take a lease of a house for a certain term at a certain rent "subject to the preparation and approval of a formal contract." No such formal contract was, however, entered into and it was held that there was no final agreement of which specific performance could be enforced. Sir George Jessel laid down the law in these terms: "If in the case of a proposed sale or lease of an estate two persons agree to all the terms and say, 'we will have the terms put into form'; then all the terms being put into writing and agreed to, there is a contract."

"If two persons agree in writing that up to a certain point the terms shall be the terms of the contract, but that the minor terms shall be submitted to a solicitor, and shall be such as are approved of by him, then there is no contract, because all the terms have not been settled."

(2) (1878) 7 Ch. D. 29; 47 L. J. Ch. 133; 26 W. R. 230.

(3) (1878) 7 Ch. D. 555; 47 L. J. Ch. 213; 38 L. T. 408; 26 W. R. 491.

In Hampshire v. Wickens (3) the defendant offered to take a sub-lease from the plaintiff of a house at a particular rent on all usual covenants and provisos. The plaintiff accepted the offer. Afterwards plaintiff insisted that in the lease there should be inserted a covenant to the effect that the defendant would not without the previous consent of the lessor assign, under-let or part with the possession of the said premises, but such consent was not to be withheld to a respectable and responsible tenant. The same learned Judge held that such a covenant was not an ordinary or usual covenant and that the plaintiff could not insist on specific performance on such terms, defendant never having agreed to them.

In Hyam v. Gubbay (1) specific performance was claimed of an agreement for sale. Certain terms and conditions were agreed to between the parties and earnest money was paid. It appeared, however, that all the terms had not been settled and the parties contemplated the execution of a formal written agreement to be approved by them embodying, in addition to the usual terms and conditions, special terms and conditions as to which no agreement had been arrived at before. It was also found that there were terms and conditions not agreed to or discussed which were embodied in the draft of the formal agreement prepared by the vendor's solicitor and submitted for the approval of the purchaser, which the purchaser did not approve. It was held that there was no completed contract between the parties capable of being enforced.

The present case is different from all the cases above cited. In the first and the third cases it was clearly agreed between the parties that the exact terms of the preliminary agreement should be incorporated in a more formal document, and it was held that this was a clear indication that the first agreement was incomplete and so long as a formal document was not agreed to by the parties and a complete agreement arrived at between them there was no contract. Even in such cases the further question arises whether the execution of a more formal agreement is a condition or term of the bargain or whether it is a mere expression of the desire of the parties as to the manner in which the transaction already agreed to will, in fact, go through. "In the former case," observed Jenkins, C. J., in Hyam v. Gubbay (1), "there is no enforceable contract either, because the condition is unfulfilled or because the law does not recognise a contract to enter into a contract. In the latter case there is a binding contract, and the reference to the more formal document may be ignored." In the present case there is nothing to show that the parties intended the execution of a formal document embodying the terms of the verbal agreement or that the verbal agreement had left any matters for future settlement. No doubt, the parties intended that to give effect to the agreement a formal lease would be executed after being approved by the defendant's Pleader, but this is very different from a formal document embodying the terms of the original verbal agreement and superseding such earlier oral agreement which was complete in itself. In this case the law required a written and registered lease and the claim for specific performance is a claim to obtain such a document. If the parties had said "we are entering into an agreement provisionally but it is not to bind us so long as the lease itself is not drawn up and approved," it is obvious that neither party could enforce such an agreement. But this is not the case here. The lower Appellate Court says that "it was nobody's case and it was not definitely expressed and understood by the parties that there was to be no contract until the draft lease was made and approved." The whole question resolves itself into this: was there a final agreement in this case? Upon the findings I think this question must be answered in the affirmative.

This case is also different from the case of Hampshire v. Wickens (3), as the plaintiff in that case insisted on specific performance upon terms to which the defendant had not agreed, and those terms were not the ordinary and usual terms as to which an implied agreement could be inferred.

In all cases of an agreement for sale or for lease where a registered document is necessary to complete the transfer, the approval and execution of such a document is always in the contemplation of the parties,

To hold that in all such cases there is no contract capable of specific performance till the document itself is executed would lead to results which clearly the law never contemplated. The cases cited lend no support to any such proposition.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 2521 OF 1914.

January 22, 1919.

Present:—Sir Henry Rattigan, KT., Chief Judge, and Mr. Justice Martineau.

Musammat DURGA DEVI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

RAM NATH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 49, 62—Suit to recover documents taken possession of and moneys realised by defendant—Limitation—Applicability of Art. 62.

A.N. carried on business in money-lending and as a commission agent He died on 3rd December 1903, leaving a widow, the present plaintiff. Upon A.N's death his father B.R. carried on the business as the plaintiff's agent, till his death in February 1908, when R.N., the brother of A.N., took possession of the shop, all the bahis and account books, documents and a mortgage-deed. He realised certain sums of money due to the business, but refused to pay the amounts to the plaintiff and to give up the bahis and other documents. She, accordingly, on 2nd November 1912, brought the present suit (a) to recover the money realised by the defendant, (b) for an injunction prohibiting him from realising in future any debts due to A.N. and (c) for restoration of the bahis and other documents The District Judge, being of opinion that the suit in respect of (a) was barred by time under Article 62, and in respect of (c) under Article 49, dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed and did not press her claim for an injunction:

Held, that the reliefs sought were rightly held by the District Judge to be barred under Articles 62 and 49 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 581, col. 1.]

Article 62 applies to every case where a defendant, at the time of receipt, in fact, or by presumption or fiction of law, receives money to the plaintiff's use, and is not confined to cases where the defendant intended to receive the money to such use, and as, in this case, the plaintiff had alleged that she was in law solely entitled to the money, the defendant must undoubtedly have received the monies for her use, and therefore the Article applied to bar her claim. [p. 581, col. 2]

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 30th July 1914.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain and Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Appellant.

Pandit Rambhaj Datta and Mr. Brij Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The late Rai Bahadur Pandit Bhag Ram, C. I. E., had two sons—(1) Mehta Fateh Chand, defendant in this case, and (2) Pandit Amar Nath, who died on the 3rd December 1906, leaving a widow, Musammat Durga Devi, the present plaintiff.

The suit was instituted on the 2nd November 1912 and according to the allegations in the amended plaint (page 82 et seq. of the paper-book), which was filed on the 6th February 1913, Pandit Amar Nath at the time of his death was sole proprietor of a shop in Jullundur city, which was started in Sambat 1958 and did business in money lending, dealings in silk, etc., and as a commission agency. Upon the death of Pandit Amar Nath, Rai Bahadur Pandit Bhag Ram carried on the business of the shop as plaintiff's agent till his death in February 1908, when defendant took possession of the shop and all the bahis and account-books and thereafter realised a large amount of debts from the debtors of the firm, including four specified debts of the total value of Rs. 660; he also realised and misappropriated a sum of about Rs. 500 due upon certain shares of the value of Rs. 5,000 purchased by the late Pandit Amar Nath in the Rajputana Printing Company; and further he took possession of certain documents, including a mortgage-deed for Rs 9,000, dated 12th February 1907, executed in the name of Rai Bahadur Pandit Bhag Ram, but in reality belonging to the estate of Pandit Amar Nath. The plaint asserts that defendant had no right to any of the above-mentioned properties as he was separate from his brother, the late Pandit Amar Nath, and that though called upon several times by the plaintiff to pay the amounts realised by him and to give up the bahis, documents and the mortgage-deed, he "put off the matter by giving evasive answers and still refuses" to comply with plaintiff's demand. The cause of action is alleged to have occurred about $2\frac{1}{2}$ years before suit, but the plaint does not explain how the cause of action arose at that time or give any details upon the point.

The reliefs sought by plaintiff were (a) recovery of the Rs. 660 realised by defendant from the four specified debtors and the Rs. 500 realised by defendant in respect of the shares in the Rajputana Printing Company; (b) an injunction prohibiting defendant from realising in the future any debts due to the shop of Pandit Amar Nath; and (c) restoration of the bahis, account books, documents and the mortgage deed for Rs. 9,000.

Defendant urged a number of pleas, both on the merits and on technical grounds, in bar of the suit and upon the pleadings the District Judge framed 12 issues. The learned Judge has held that the suit is barred by time under Article 62 (as regards item (a) of the claim) and under Article 49 (as regards recovery of the books, documents, mortgage-deed, etc.,) of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908; that the claim for an injunction (item (b) of the claim) is within time; and that the suit is also barred by the provisions of Order II, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code. He has accordingly dismissed the suit though upon all the other issues (which he has decided ex majori cautela) his findings are in plaintiff's favour. Plaintiff has appealed to this Court, and we have heard Mr. Sheo Narain's arguments on her behalf. The learned Advocate informed us at the outset that as Fateh Chand had died pendente lite and was now represented by a minor son under the guardianship of his mother, the claim for an injunction was no longer pressed by plaintiff.

Upon the view we take of the case, it is not necessary for us to discuss any question other than that of limitation, as we agree with the learned District Judge that the reliefs sought are respectively barred under Articles 62 and 49 of the Limitation Act. As regards realisations of debts and of dividends upon the shares in the Rajputana Printing Company, Mr. Sheo Narain argues that Article 120 and not Article 62 is applicable to the claim, inasmuch as there was no contractual relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant, and the defendant admittedly did not in fact receive those monies for the plaintiff's use. In support of his argument the learned Advocate relied on Ohand Mal v. Sansar Chand (1) and Joti Parshad v. Sant Lal (2), but it appears to us that those decisions, so far from supporting the appellant's argument, are rather in favour of the view taken by the District Judge. It is a well-established principle that Article 62 applies to every case where defendant, at the time of receipt, in fact or by presumption or fiction of law, receives money to plaintiff's use; and it has been repeatedly held that the Article is not confined to cases where defendant intended to receive the money to such use but that it extends to all cases where a defendant has received money which in justice and equity belongs to plaintiff under circumstances which in law render a receipt of it a receipt by defendant to plaintiff's use. The authorities in support of these propositions will be found in Rustomji's Law of Limitation, 2nd Edition, under Article 62. In accordance with these authorities we must hold that upon the allegations in the plaint the defendant undoubtedly must be taken to have received the monies for the use of plaintiff, inasmuch as according to her allegations she was in law solely entitled thereto. We accordingly agree with the District Judge that this claim is barred under the said Article.

As regards the claim to recover bahis, documents and the mortgage-deed, Mr. Sheo Narain himself contended that Article 49 of the Act was applicable. In the plaint the allegation is that defendant took possession of the shop and of books, etc., therein at the time of Rai Bahadur Pandit Bhag Ram's death, which occurred in 1908. The learned Advocate admitted that plaintiff was unable to prove that she had made a demand for the recovery of the bahis, etc, at any particular time prior to suit and we must take it therefore that the books, etc, were wrongfully taken at the time when defendant took possession of the shop or, in other words, in 1908. Under Article 49, therefore, this claim, which was not preferred till 1912, is clearly barred.

For the reasons given we hold that the suit as a whole is barred by limitation and was rightly dismissed.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

W. A. LEE—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 5, 12, Sch I, Art. 151—Appeal from Original Side filed beyond limitation—Copy applied for after expiry of limitation—Time spent in obtaining copy, whether can be allowed—Extension of time—Sufficient cause—Calcutta High Court Original Side Rule, Ch. XVI, rr. 7, 27, Ch. IV, r. 9, Ch. XXXII, r. 22 (4).

Plaintiff instituted a suit on 24th June 1916 and obtained an ex parte decree on the 14th February 1918. On the 1st July 1918 defendant filed an application to set aside the ex parte decree, but this was refused on the 26th July. On the 5th August plaintiff applied to have this order drawn up. The draft order was served upon the defendant on the 7th August and was returned by his Solicitor after approval on the 16th. On the 30th August, the last day on which the Court sat before the vacation, after 4.30 P. M, the defendant appeared before Chaudhuri, J., for leave to file a memorandum of appeal against the decree of the 14th February 1918, the order of the 23rd March 1918 and the order of the 26th July 1918 without office copies of the two orders. The Court permitted the appeal to be filed, subject to objections which might be raised. On 3rd September the order of 26th July was filed at the instance of the plaintiff, and defendant applied for a copy of that order on the 9th September and obtained it on the 12th September.

Subsequently, a question arising before the Registrar as to the appeal against the decree and the order of the 23rd March 1918 being within time, the memorandum of appeal was amended and the appeal remained as an appeal against the order of 26th July 1918:

Held, that under Article 151 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act the appeal was prima facie time-barred, and that neither section 12 (2) nor section 5 of the Limitation Act could be availed of by the defendant who was guilty of unreasonable and unnecessary delay, and who did not apply to have the order drawn up, and for a copy of the order in accordance with the rules of the Court. [p. 583, col. 2; p. 584, col. 1; p 586, col. 2; p. 587, col. 1.]

Per Chitty, J—An appellant, who does not, within the period of limitation, apply for a copy of the order appealed from and who takes no steps whatever towards procuring such copy, cannot be allowed after the period of limitation runs out to claim exclusion of time requisite for obtaining such copy. [p 586, col. 2.]

In order to obtain the indulgence allowed by section 5 of the Limitation Act, an appellant must satisfy the Court that he had sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal within the prescribed time. [p. 587, col. 1.]

Appeal from the order of Greaves, J., dated the 26th July 1918.

Mr. N. Sircar (with him Mr. S. M. Bose), for the Appellant.

Sir C. C. Mitter (with him Messrs. C. C. Ghose and B. Basu), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by the defendant P. N. Roy against an order made by Greaves, J., sitting on the Original Side of the Court, which was dated the 26th July 1918, whereby the learned Judge refused the application of the defendant.

This application was for an order that the Registrar should be at liberty to receive from the defendant the sum of Rs. 27,000 as security furnished by the defendant, and that thereupon the ex parte decree (dated the 14th February 1918), which was conditionally set aside by an order dated the 23rd March 1918, might be set aside, and the defendant's defence restored in the suit.

The main question arising in this appeal is whether the appeal is barred under clause 151 of the First Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908.

In order to make the point intelligible it is necessary to state certain material dates.

On the 24th June 1916 the plaint in the suit was filed: the plaintiff claimed Rs. 27,443-2-0 in pursuance of an agreement dated the 24th June 1913. After a peremptory order had been made that defendant should file a written statement, the defence was filed on 9th February 1917.

On the 8th February 1918 Greaves, J., ordered that the defence should be struck out as the defendant had failed to give inspection of his documents.

On the 14th February 1918 an ex parte decree was made in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 27,443-2-0.

On the 23rd March 1918 it was ordered that upon the defendant on or before the 10th of April furnishing security to the satisfaction of the Registrar for Rs. 27,000 and paying to the plaintiff's Attorneys certain costs, the decree of the 14th February 1918 should be set aside and the suit should be restored for hearing.

On the 26th April 1918 the time for furnishing security was extended by order of the Court to 30th April 1918. In default the decree was to stand confirmed.

By an order dated the 3rd May 1918, the defendant, upon certain terms therein specified, was allowed one week's time from the date of the order to satisfy the Registrar as to the sufficiency of the security already offered.

On the 7th May 1918 the Registrar again refused to accept the security offered by the defendant.

On the 1st July 1918 notice of the application, already referred to, for setting aside the ex parte decree was given, and a petition by the defendant of the same date was filed.

On the 25th July 1918 this application was heard by Greaves, J., and refused.

On 30th August 1918, the defendant filed a memorandum of appeal. It was stated in Court on behalf of the plaintiff, and not denied by the defendant's learned Counsel, that an application was made on behalf of the defendant on the 30th August 1918 to Chaudhuri, J., who was sitting on the Original Side, and that such application was made about 5 P. M., at any rate at some time after the Court of Appeal had risen.

The application was for leave to file the memorandum of appeal without copies of the two orders: such copies should have accompanied the memorandum of appeal, see Chapter XXXII, rule 3 of the Rules of the Court, Original Side.

August 30th was the last day on which the Court sat before the vacation.

The learned Judge granted leave to the defendant to file the memorandum of appeal, but it was stated in Court and not denied that such leave was given subject to any objection which might be taken on behalf of the plaintiff.

On the 2nd September 1918 execution of the decree was stayed by an order of Fletcher, J., one of the Vacation Judges.

The memorandum of appeal purported to be an appeal not only against the order of the 26th July 1918, but also against the decree of 14th February 1918 and the order of the 23rd March 1918.

On the 9th September 1918 the Acting Registrar pointed out to the defendant's Attorney that the appeal was out of time as regards the decree of 14th February and the order of 23rd March,

On the 12th September 1918 the defendant's Attorney wrote the following letter:—

No. 1210. 12th September 1918.

To

The Registrar,
High Court, (O. S.), Calcutta.

Dear Sir,

APPEAL No. 70 OF 1918.
SUIT No. 706 OF 1916.
P. N. ROY—APPELLANT
versus
W. A. LEE—RESPONDENT.

You consider the appeal against the ex parte decree dated the 14th February 1918 and the order dated the 23rd March 1918 as barred by limitation. As I am advised by Counsel that they are not barred, I crave leave to argue the matter before the Appellate Court.

Subject to the above, I initial the alterations made in the grounds of appeal on page 2 thereof.

A copy of this letter may be served with the notice of appeal to be issued herein.

Yours obediently,
P. N. Sen.

Consequently the memorandum of appeal was altered by striking out the decree of the 14th February 1918 and the order of 23rd of March 1918.

The memorandum of appeal, therefore, remained as an appeal from the order of 26th July 1918 only.

The question whether the appeal was out of time, as regards the decree of the 14th February 1918 and the order of 23rd March 1918, has not been raised before this Court on the hearing of the appeal, and we have, therefore, only to deal with the question whether the appeal is out of time as regards the order of 26th July 1918.

Clause 151 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act, 1908, provides that in the case of an appeal from an order of the High Court of Judicature of Fort William in the exercise of its original jurisdiction the period of limitation is twenty days, and that the time begins to run from the date of the order. Consequently in this case, the order having been made on the 26th July 1918, the period of limitation began to run from that date, and it would expire on the 15th August 1918.

The memorandum of appeal was not filed until the 30th August 1918 and prima facie it was out of time. But on behalf of the defendant reliance was placed upon section 12 (2) of the Act.

That section provides that in computing the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal.....the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the.....order appealed from shall be excluded.

The question is, whether the period from the 15th August 1918 to the 30th August 1918, viz., a period of 15 days, can be said to have been time requisite for obtaining a copy of the order appealed from.

No application was made on behalf of the defendant for a copy of the order now under appeal, until the 9th September 1918: Stamps were paid on the 10th September, and he obtained a copy on the 12th September.

It is not the practice at the present time for the Court to draw up an order until it is applied for by a party: Chapter XVI, rule 27, is as follows:—

No decree or order shall be drawn up until applied for by a party. The application, therefore, shall be made by the requisition in writing of the party in whose favour the decree or on whose application the order was made, or, in default of his applying within four days from the date of the decree or order, by any party within one month thereafter.

In case any decree or order is not applied for within the last mentioned time, the Registrar may decline to draw up the same without the leave of the Court or a Judge.

It was argued on behalf of the plaintiff that the order of 26th July 1918 was made on the application of the defendant and that thereupon in pursuance of this rule he could have applied to the Court for a copy of the order any day after the 26th July 1918, or that at any rate the defendant could have applied for a copy of the order, in default of the plaintiff applying within 4 days from the date of the order; and that if the defendant desired to appeal against the order, it was his duty to get the order drawn up in accordance with the rule.

On the other hand it was argued on behalf of the defendant that a period between the 7th August and 3rd September should be excluded from the period of limitation as time which was requisite for obtaining a copy of the order under the following circumstances:

It appears that about the 5th or 6th August 1918 the plaintiff applied to the Court to have the order drawn up. The date does not appear from the documents before us, but it was stated in Court that it was on the 5th or 6th. On the 7th August 1918 the draft order was sent to the defendant's Attorney: it was approved by the defendant's Attorney on the 16th August 1918: thus a period of nine days was taken for approving the draft order:

In my judgment, this was unreasonable and unnecessary delay; the order was a short and simple one, and no explanation has been given of this delay.

The order was signed by the Master on the 28th August and it was filed on the 3rd September by the plaintiff.

The defendant's learned Counsel argued that the period from August 7th to September 3rd should be excluded: As I understand his argument, it was that the defendant could not obtain a copy until the order was filed on the 3rd September, and that, as the order was being drawn up by the plaintiff, there was no necessity for the defendant to take any steps to have the order drawn up and filed so that he could appeal within the specified time, and that, therefore, this was time requisite for obtaining a copy of the order.

I am not prepared to accept this argument. In the first place the plaintiff did not make any application for drawing up the order until the 5th or 6th August, some ten or eleven days after the order was made, and, to say the least the defendant could at any time after the 30th July 1918, when four days had elapsed from the date of the order, have applied to have the order drawn up.

He made no such application, and he did not even apply for a copy of the order until the 9th September 1918, six days after the order was filed, and indeed when the defendant's Attorney had received the draft order on the 7th August he did not approve it until the 16th August after a lapse of nine days, and after the twenty days allowed for appealing had expired. A period of fifteen days, i. e., from the 15th August until 30th August has to be accounted for, and the defendant has not made out to my satisfaction that such period was requisite for obtaining a copy of the order. In my judgment, if the defendant desired to appeal from the order he should have applied to have the order drawn up and for a copy of the order in accordance with the Rules of the Court, which he did not do. If he had done so there is nothing to show that fifteen days would have been requisite for obtaining a copy of the order.

In addition it is to be noted that on the 30th August 1918, the last day of the sittings and after the usual Court hours and after the Court of Appeal had risen, the defendant obtained leave from the learned Judge on the Original Side to file his memorandum of appeal without a copy of the order; no explanation has been given why this was left to the last minute, so to speak, in the manner above mentioned: and if it was necessary for him to obtain such leave, there was nothing to prevent him from making his application before the period of limitation had expired.

For the above mentioned reasons in my judgment the memorandum of appeal was filed out of time and this appeal is barred by the Limitation Act.

There was a further point raised by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff, viz., that the defendant had not complied with the rules relating to the preparation and filing of the paper-book, and consequently that this appeal should not be heard. It is not necessary to decide this point in view of the conclusion already arrived at.

Finally, it was urged on behalf of the defendant that the Court should admit the appeal under section 5 of the Limitation Act after the prescribed period of limitation.

The defendant has not satisfied me that he had any sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal within the prescribed period, and consequently, in my judgment, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

CHITTY, J.—On 24th June 1916 the plaintiff instituted this suit against the defendant to recover a sum of Rs. 27,443-2-0, said to be due under an agreement dated 24th June 1913. The plaintiff also asked, if necessary, for an account. On 2nd February 1917 a peremptory order was made upon the defendant to file his written statement within a week, with which order he complied on 9th February. In consequence of failure by the defendant to give inspection of his documents on 8th February 1918 Mr. Justice Greaves ordered that the defence should be struck out On 14th February 1918 a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff for the amount claimed. It is stated, but not admitted, that the defendant and his solicitor were present in Court At any rate the defendant appears to have taken no part in that day's proceedings. On 8th March 1918 a notice was given by the defendant that he would apply to set aside the decree On 23rd March Mr. Justice Greaves ordered that the decree would be set aside if the defendant furnished security to the satisfaction of the Registrar for the amount of the claim by 10th April 1918. The time for furnishing security was by subsequent orders, the last being of 26th April 1918, extended to 30th. This order was peremptory. On the 29th the Registrar rejected the security offered by the defendant. On 3rd May, on the defendant undertaking not to apply for any further extension of time, the time for furnishing security was extended by the Court for one week, i.e., to the 10th. Again the defendant tendered a security which was rejected by the Registrar. The defendant gave notice of an application further to extend the time; but this application appears to have been proceeded with. On 26th July a second application for the setting aside of the decree was refused by Mr. Justice Greaves. On 5th August 1918 the plaintiff applied to have this order drawn up. The draft order was served upon the defendant on 7th August 1918 and was returned approved by his solicitor on the 16th. The Master fixed 20th August for the consideration of the order by the parties and, on 28th August 1918, the order was signed by the Master. On 30th August, the last day of the term, after 4-30 P.M. the defendant appeared before Mr. Justice Chaudhuri and asked leave to file a memorandum of appeal against the decree of 14th February 1918, the order of 23rd March 1918 and the order of 26th July 1918 without office copies of the two orders. The ground stated in the affidavit of Mr. P. N. Sen, the defendant's Attorney, with reference to the order of 26th July 1918 was that it was completed on 28th instant by the plaintiff's Attorneys, who having not yet filed the same an office copy thereof could not be obtained. The Court permitted the memorandum to be filed. It does not appear from the minutes but it is conceded on both sides that that order was subject to any objections which might be raised thereafter. On 3rd September 1918 the order of 26th July 1918 was filed at the instance of the plaintiff. On 9th September 1918 the defendant applied for a copy of that order. He furnished the requisite stamp on the 10th and the copy was supplied to him on the 12th. A question had arisen before the Registrar as to the appeal against the decree and the first of the two orders being within time; and on that day Mr. P. N. Sen for the defendant struck out of his memorandum of appeal the words "the decree made on the 14th day of February 1918" and "the order made on the 23rd day of March 1918". The appeal thus stood from that day as an appeal only against the order of 26th July 1918. The question for our determination is whether this appeal was filed within time. A further question arises whether having regard to the laches of the defendant in preparing and filing his paper-book, the appeal should not be dismissed on that ground also.

Under Article 151 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act the time for filing an appeal from an order of a High Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction is twenty days from the date of the order. That time expired on 15th August 1918, and unless the appellant is entitled for some reason or other to have the time extended, his appeal which was filed on 30th August is clearly out of time. It was argued by Mr. Sircar on his behalf that he was entitled under section 12 of the Limitation Act to exclude the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the order appealed from. This contention is, in my opinion, unsound for two reasons. In the first place, an appellant cannot be permitted to avail himself of this provision, unless he satisfies the Court that he has exercised due diligence towards obtaining the copy. Here admittedly the appellant did nothing in this behalf until 9th September 1918 when he applied for a copy and even then he did not furnish the requisite stamp until the following day. It was argued that he could not procure a copy until the order was filed and that as on 7th August 1918 he learnt that the plaintiff was taking steps to have the order filed, it was useless for him also to take steps in the matter. In my opinion this excuse is worthless. A litigant on whom the law of procedure lays some duty or obligation cannot be heard to say that he is absolved, wholly or in part, because his opponent is doing something which may possibly save him the trouble. Here no doubt the appellant could not in the ordinary course obtain an office copy of the order until it was filed (See High Court Rules, Chapter IV, rule 9). But it was his duty at any rate after 30th July 1918 to have it drawn up. (Chapter XVI, rule 27). It was all the more incumbent upon him to do so and to have the order filed without delay if he was intending to appeal from the order. The appellant, however, took no steps whatever to expedite the filing of the order. His Attorney retained the draft for nine days before he approved it. Then again after the order was filed on 3rd September he waited six days more before he applied for an office copy. It is unnecessary to discuss the cases which were cited to us on either side. The question must be decided on the Limitation Act and the Rules of this Court on the Original Side. On principle I would hold that an appellant who has not within the period of limitation applied for a copy of the order appealed from, and who has within that period taken no steps whatever towards procuring such copy, cannot be allowed after the period of limitation has run out to claim exclusion of time requisite for procuring such copy.

There is in this case a further reason for holding the appeal to be out of time. On 30th August the appellant applied for and obtained leave to file his appeal without an office copy of this order. This exemption was granted by Mr. Justice Chaudhuri under Chapter XXXII, rule 22 (b). In these circumstances no question of procuring an office copy arises. It was open to the appellant to have preferred this application and obtained the exemption on 15th August or before. Indeed, before the period of limitation had expired, his application would have come with greater force. There was no reason whatever for his allowing the period of limitation to go by without making that application. When he did so the appeal was already out of time.

At the close of the arguments it was suggested that we might exercise our powers under section 5 of the Limitation Act and admit the appeal though out of time; but in order to obtain that indulgence, the appellant must satisfy the Court that he had sufficient cause for not preferring his appeal within the prescribed period. Here he has shown not only no sufficient cause, but no cause whatsoever.

It is unnecessary to consider the question of the appellant's laches, if any, in the preparation and filing of his paper-book. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1963 OF 1915.

January 30, 1919.

Present:—Sir Henry Rattigan, KT., Chief Judge, and Mr. Justice Martineau.

Musammat HUSAIN BIBI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

HAKIM AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 5, 6, 7, 14—Pre-emption suit—Vendee, one of several, death of, before institution of suit—Legal representatives brought on record after limitation, effect of—Extension of time.

On 7th October 1914 the plaintiff brought the present suit to pre-empt certain lands sold by her father on 7th November 1913. One of the vendees had died before the suit was instituted and his heirs were impleaded as co-defendants on 8th December 1914. The suit was dismissed as time-barred on the ground that the sale was one jointly in favour of the vendees and as the suit was barred against the representatives of the deceased vendee, it was equally barred against the surviving vendee. Plaintiff appealed, pleading minority and ignorance of the vendee's death:

Held, that sections 5 and 14 of the Limitation Act were not applicable to the case, and as sections 6 and 7 of the Act did not extend to suits to enforce a right of pre-emption, the suit had been rightly dismissed.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 10th June 1915.

Mr. Azim Ullah, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—Musammat Husain Bibi sued to pre-empt certain land sold by her father to Piran Ditta and Hakim by deed of sale, dated 7th November 1913. The suit which was filed on the 7th October 1914 purported to be against both vendees, but it was subsequently discovered that Piran Ditta, one of the joint vendees, had died previously to the institution of the suit, and it was not till the 8th December 1914 that heirs were impleaded as co-defendants with Hakim. The District Judge has dismissed the claim as time barred, on the ground that the sale was one jointly in favour of the vendees, and the suit, being barred against the representatives of Piran Ditta, is equally barred against Hakim. Plaintiff has appealed to this Court and on her behalf it is urged that she was a minor at the time of suit and that neither she nor her husband, who was acting as her next friend, had any knowledge of Piran Ditta's death. But even if we assume that such was the case, we do not see how plaintiff can be granted an extension of time, as sections 5 and 14 of the Indian Limitation Act are not applicable and the provisions of sections 6 and 7 do not extend to suits to enforce a right of pre emption.

The suit has accordingly been rightly dismissed as time barred and we must reject this appeal.

CIVIL SUIT No. 1116 OF 1919.
May 19, 1919.
Present:—Mr. Justice Rankin.
SARDARMULL JESSRAJ—PLAINTIFF
versus
AGAR CHAND MAHATA & Co.—
DEFENDANT.

Arbitration—Party denying contract, remedy of—Procedure—Injunction, interlocutory, when can be granted.

Where a dispute is referred to arbitration under a clause contained in a commercial contract, and one or other of the parties to that contract seeks to impeach it upon equitable grounds, such as fraud, mistake or surprise, and seeks either to have it set aside or to have it rectified, in such a case the Court will, and should, restrain the arbitration proceedings until the question of the contract out of which they arise has been determined by the Court. [p. 588, col 2]

Where, however, a party denies the contract altogether, his course is to let the arbitrators do what they like, to wait till there is a question of the award being enforced, and the moment he gets notice that the award is going to be filed or has been filed to object to it. It may be prudent in such a case to inform the arbitrators of the objection to their jurisdiction and that, if the award is filed without due notice to the objecting party, such as the law requires, and if, as the result of that, execution is levied, then the arbitrators may make themselves liable in damages, if the party is successful when he moves the Court to take the award off the file [p. 590, col 1.]

Where the proceedings will be a nullity and futile, although vexatious, the Court will not grant an interlocutory injunction. [p. 589, col. 2.]

Mr. B. L. Mitter (with him Mr B. K. Ghose,) for the Plaintiff.

Mr. K. P. Khaitan, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiffs ask for an interlocutory injunction to restrain further proceedings before an Arbitration Tribunal under a commercial contract for the sale of goods. The plaintiffs deny that the alleged written contract was ever signed by them or on their behalf. The defendants put forward a document and they allege that that document was the document of the plaintiffs, and in this case as in may others I find there is no possibility of my deciding even provisionally with any certainty as to which of these parties are in the right. Under these circumstances I have to consider whether it is right that an interlocutory injunction should go to restrain the arbitration until this question has been determined. This is a question which has arisen before, but I have not had occasion to decide it before, and I think it desirable that the matter should be decided, so far as I am concerned, for the benefit of future cases that may arise.

Now it is to be determined according to the principles which this Court has inherited as part of its inherent jurisdiction from the old Court of Chancery. The special Indian legislation about interlocutory injunctions is contained in the Civil Procedure Code and as regards perpetual injunctions, it is contained in the Specific Relief Act; but I cannot find that there is anything in either of these statutory enactments to assist me as regards this matter. I certainly do not find any power in them which would enable me to grant this injunction, and I have to resort to equitable principles.

When one looks at the English cases one finds that they are somewhat burdened by matters with which I am not concerned, namely, by the question whether section 25 of the Judicature Act has not extended the rights of the Courts in England to grant an injunction where, previous to that Act, the Court of Chancery could not have granted one at all. Cleared of this difficulty the position in my view stands thus. It is quite clear on the authority of Kitts v. Moore (1) that where an agreement has been made and where one or other of the parties to that agreement seeks to impeach it upon equitable grounds such as fraud, mistake or surprise, seeks either to have it set aside on equitable grounds or to have it rectified, in these cases the Court will and should restrain the arbitration proceedings until the question of the contract out of which they arise has been determined by the Court. Previous cases are somewhat instructive on this point. There is a case of Maunsell v. Midland G. W. Ry. (2). That was a case where two companies entered into an agreement containing an arbitration clause. The plaintiff was a share-holder in one of the companies and he brought his action on behalf of himself and all the other share holders to have it declared that the agreement was ultra vires of the Director of his own company, and in that case it was decided that the arbitration proceedings should be restrained until that matter had been determined. Again in the case of Mylne v. Dickinson (3) it was sought to rescind the contract and a suit was brought in equity upon that footing: in the meantime the arbitration under that contract was restrained. The basis of those decisions is that if the Court of Equity did not interfere there would be a contract which was good in law and that an arbitration held under that contract would be an arbitration to which the parties would have no answer, if it had resulted in an award, when an action at law was brought. In that state of the law undoubtedly it was an embarrassment to a person who had an equitable right to set aside or rectify the contract that the arbitration should be allowed without that question being determined.

There is, however, another principle running parallel with that, which has the authority of the Court of Appeal in the case of North London Railway Company v. Great Northern Railway Company (4) and also Wood v. Lillies (5). These were cases where there was an arbitration clause in an agreement; the plaintiff's case was that the matter sought to be referred was not one within the arbitration clause; and in those cases what the Court held was this, that the proceedings before the arbitrator would be futile and vexatious; the award, if made, would be a nullity; but such an award was no legal injury to the plaintiff; and under these circumstances the Court would not issue an injunction merely because the proceedings were futile and vexatious. It is quite clear that in such a case the plaintiff, if he does not attend before the arbitrators, would stand no chance of the award being in his favour. It is also quite clear that in every such case, if he does attend before the arbitrators under protest, there will be no way by which the Court afterwards, if it finds in his favour, can award to him the costs which he incurred before the arbitrator. In spite of these facts the Court of Appeal did decide, and I think in conformity with the previous practice of the Court of Chancery, that where the proceedings would be a nullity and futile although vexatious, it would not grant an interlocutory injunction. The result of the arbitration proceedings would merely be that the successful party would have either to bring an action on the award or else to apply under the Rules of the Supreme Court to get leave to enforce the award as a judgment, and such leave will not be given if there is any case for impeaching the jurisdiction of the arbitrators. In the result, having an award which is invalid is analogous to having a bad cause of action. As there is no means of preventing parties bringing unfounded actions against their neighbours, the Court would not interfere with such an arbitration.

I have not found a case where a question arose as to the existence or non-existence of the contract containing the submission. There have been cases where there were admitted contracts but it was contended that the matter referred to was not within the submission. I have noticed in some of the references to Kitts v. Moore (1) that the matter has been put in this way that if the plaintiff is seeking to impeach the contract he is entitled to restrain the arbitration. The words "impeach the contract" were used by the Lord Justices in Kitts v. Moore (1) but, I think, meant to impeach the contract on equitable grounds such as fraud, mistake or surprise. To impeach the contract on a ground of equity is quite different from denying the existence of any contract as a matter of fact. In my view the latter case is exactly the same as where the submission is admitted but the allegation is that the matters to be referred are outside it. I think there is no legal injury and no embarrassment in equity if a person who has not made a contract is put into the position of having an arbitration held against him. The question of costs that I have mentioned is then the only embarrassment. These considerations in my judgment take the present case out of the principles of Kitts v. Moore (1).

I have also considered one matter in which the Indian practice differs from the practice at home. Under the Arbitration Act, section 11, when an award is made then instead of the party who wants to enforce it bringing an action on the award or applying on summons for leave to enforce the award summarily, the award when filed becomes the subject-matter of execution as though it were a decree of Court and the party prosecuting it does not require to obtain leave or to bring an action. Prima facie, therefore, execution can be levied as though it were a decree of Court the moment it is filed. I have considered whether that difference of practice makes a difference in the application of the principles to which I have referred. I find, however, by the Arbitration Act it is a duty laid upon the arbitrators to give notice to the parties when the award is made. I think it is a matter of procedure and not of substance that the party complaining in such a case would have to apply to the Court to have the document taken off the file. I do not think that I ought to start granting interlocutory injunctions upon novel considerations, and attempt to commence a new system as regards interfering with arbitrators in such matters by reason of this difference in practice between the Indian Arbitration Act and the provisions of the English rules. Therefore the position is simply this, that in all these cases where a man says that he wants to deny the contract altogether, his course is to let the arbitrators do what they like, to wait till there is a question of the award being enforced, and the moment he gets notice that the award is going to be filed or has been filed to object to it. It may be prudent in such a case to inform the arbitrators of the objection to their jurisdiction and that if the award is filed without due notice to the objecting party, such as the law requires, and if, as the result of that, execution is levied, then the arbitrators may make themselves liable in damages if the party is successful when he moves the Court to take the award off the file.

(3) (1815) G. Cooper 195; 35 E. R. 528 14 R. R 243.
(4) (1883) 11 Q. B. D. 30; 52 L. J. Q. B. 330; 48 L. T. 605; 31 W. R. 490.
(5) (1892) 61 L. J. Ch. 158.

I will add a word with regard to the special class of cases which sometimes arises out of commercial contracts for sale containing an arbitration clause, viz., where the contract is attacked on the ground that the transactions are gaming and wagering transactions and that, therefore, the arbitrators have no jurisdiction. In that class of case the law has been settled by the Court of Appeal here, following the case of M'Harg v. Universal Stock Exchange (6), that it is not a question of attacking the contract upon equitable grounds, and it appears to me that the present practice is not to grant an interlocutory injunction in cases where the contracts are said to be void on other than equitable grounds.

In this case the motion for an injunction is refused. As regards the costs I will make them costs in the action.

Injunction refused.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 55—Contract for re-sale of property conveyed—Time, whether of essence of contract.

The doctrine that time may not be of the essence of a contract, which arises on the construction of contracts of sale, should not be applied to contracts for the re-sale of property conveyed. The right to re-purchase, being an option, must be exercised according to the strict terms of the power. [p. 591 col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 80 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Chingleput, in Original Suit No. 14 of 1916.

Messrs. T. Narasimha Aiyangar and A. Sadagopachariar, for the Appellant.

Mr. Krishnamachariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The lower Appellate Court was in error in applying the doctrine that time may not be of the essence of the contract, which arises on the construction of contracts of sale, to contracts for re-sale of property conveyed. The true doctrine is stated in Fisher on Mortgages, Page 11, Chapter I, section 18, and is that if the transaction is not a mortgage, the right to re-purchase, being an option, must be exercised according to the strict terms of the power, vide Joy v. Birch (1), Ranelagh v. Melton (2) and Dibbins v. Dibbins (3). There is no reason why a different rule should prevail in India. We, therefore, reverse the decisions of the lower Courts and remit the case to the Court of first instance for the trial of issues one and four in the light of the observations of the Full Bench in Muthuvelu Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Mudaliar (4). Under the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law a sister is not an heir at all to her brother, and, consequently, cannot be brought on to the record as the heir and legal representative of her deceased brother to continue a suit or appeal. [p. 592, cols. 1 & 2]

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, dated the 1st February 1915, decreeing the plaintiff-respondent's claim.

Lala Durga Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Respondent.

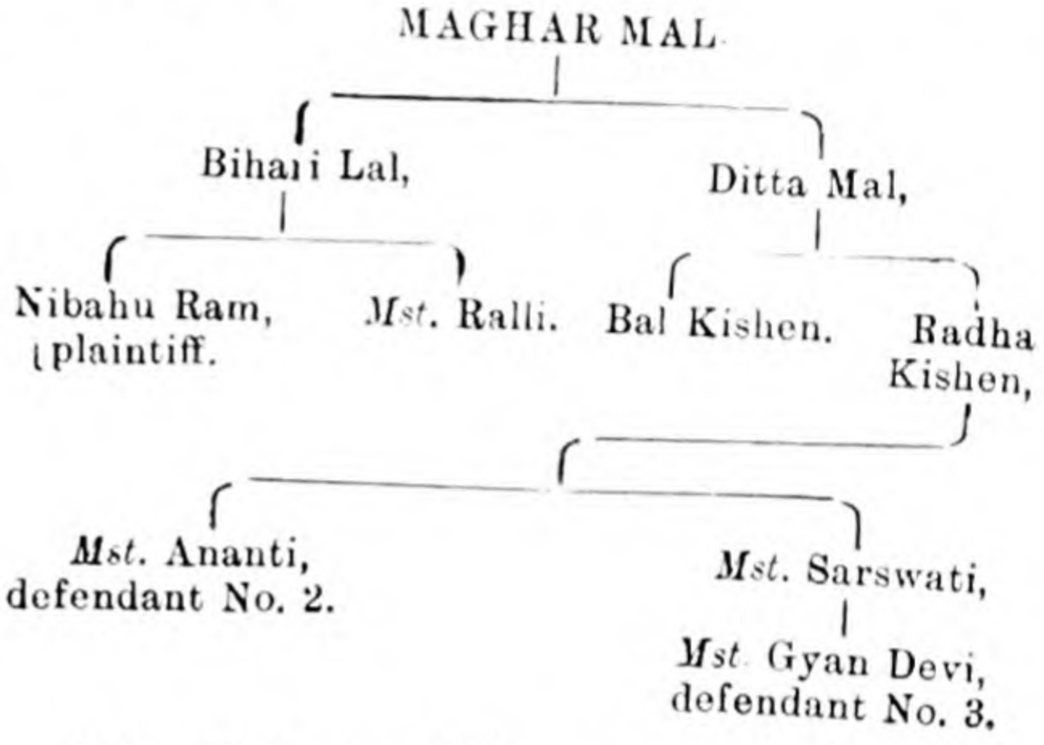
JUDGMENT.—The genealogical tree is as follows:—



Bal Kishen died sonless, leaving a widow Musammat Thakri, who died on 28th July 1913. Her brother Shambhu Nath is defendant No. 1. The case relates to the estate of Bal Kishen. Nibahu Ram sued for possession, alleging that Shambhu Nath was in illegal possession. Plaintiff alleges that Musammat Thakri succeeded to a life tenure only. The defence was that the plaintiff had sold his rights to Musammat Thakri for Rs. 1,155, and that Musammat Thakri had executed a Will in favour of the defendants. The Senior Subordinate Judge held that the sale of reversionary rights was invalid, that the Will executed by Musammat Thakri was also invalid, but that it was not proved that Musammat Thakri had left any property except the houses mentioned in the Will. So the learned Subordinate Judge gave plaintiff a decree for the houses but dismissed the suit for the rest of the property.

Against the Subordinate Judge's decree three appeals were lodged, one by the plaintiff (admitted as a pauper appeal in March 1915), one by Shambhu Nath, and one by Musammat Ananti and Musammat Gyan Devi. This judgment will cover all three appeals.

SHAMBHU NATH v. RALLI.

Nibahu Ram died in May 1915. The defendants appellants put in applications, asking that Nibahu Ram's sister Musammat Ralli should be brought on to the record of their appeals as representative of the deceased respondent. On these applications there are orders of the Deputy Registrar of this Court granting the applications subject to confirmation by the Court.

In the appeal lodged by Nibahu Ram no application has ever been made for bringing his representative on to the record. Mr. Jai Gopal, who represents Musammat Ralli in this Court, says his client made no application as she thought that as she had been made respondent in the cross-appeals, this was sufficient. It is not sufficient. As no application for bringing a representative on to the record in due time has been made, the appeal lodged by Nibahu Ram has abated.

On behalf of Shambhu Nath, appellant, a fresh application has been put in urging that the application for bringing Musammot Ralli on to the record was made under a mistake of law, and that the real representative, if any, is Musammat Ananti. The latter, however, is only a daughter of the first cousin of the deceased, and Lala Durga Das is unable to show us how such a relation can be regarded as an heir under Hindu Law. But the question remains whether the sister is an heir. Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi urges that in the absence of other heirs the sister must be regarded as the legal representative of the deceased. The whole subject is ably discussed in Mayne on Hindu Law and Usage, 8th Edition, pages 724—753, wherein it is pointed out that as regards the provinces which follow the Mitakshara School both principle and authority seem to exclude the daughter. Counsel refers us to Lakshmanammal v. Tiruvengada Mudali (1) and Bhagwan Vithoba v. Warubai (2). We think it unnecessary to enter into any lengthy discussion. We may only remark that in Northern India it has always been held that under the Mitakshara School a sister is not entitled to inherit, and we prefer to follow what seems to us the decided weight of authority.

(1) 5 M. 241; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 169.
(2) 32 B. 300; 10 Bom. L. R. 389.

Then it is urged that in the absence of other heirs the sister must inherit. But as we understand the law the position of the sister is not that she is an ultimate heir, but that she is not an heir at all.

Then it is urged that a legal representative need not be an heir, and here Charanjit Mal v. Mitho (3) is relied on. But in that ruling certain reversioners were allowed to remain on the record on the great probability that they were as much the next heirs and representatives as the other persons who were pointed out as the heirs. Here, however, we find that there are no heirs at all, so far as we can discover; at all events we hold that the sister is not an heir. We, therefore, refuse to confirm the order of the Deputy Registrar bringing Musammat Ralli on to the record as representative of the deceased plaintiff-respondent and we strike her name off. There being no respondent the appeals lodged by the defendant cannot proceed, and must be dismissed. The effect is, of course, practically the same as if the appeals were accepted, as Musammat Ralli cannot execute the decree of the lower Court and it does not appear that there is any one else who can. The defendants-appellants are to blame for having named her as representative, but on the other hand she was in no way bound to defend these appeals; and if she wished to avoid the risk of being ordered to pay costs she could have appeared and pleaded that she was not the heir and had wrongly been impleaded, instead of attempting to show that she was the heir. We think the proper course is to leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

All three appeals are dismissed, but we pass no order as to costs in this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal application for revision against the decision of the Resident Magistrate, Bandra.

Mr. S. Y. Abhyankar, for the Petitioners.

Mr. W. B. Pradhan, for the Opponent.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—This is an application against an order made by the Resident Magistrate of Bandra under Act XIII of 1859. The contracts in question are between certain "Kathodis" and the complainant. The contracts relate to the work to be done as charcoal burners from the 1st of September 1918 to the 15th of June 1919. They refer to certain small advances in cash, and the rate of wages is fixed at 2 annas per bag of charcoal. They also provide that the wages should be set off against the sums advanced and to be advanced to the workmen.

"It has been found by the Magistrate that "a Katkari, if he is a good and hardworking workman, manufactures with the assistance of others and his family about 300 bags of charcoal in a season of 10 months. His earnings, therefore, at 2 annas a bag would come to Rs. 37-8-0." In plain terms, the result of this contract, according to the finding, is that when a workman with his whole family works for 10 months, he earns Rs. 37-8-0, that is, he earns nearly Rs. 4 per mensem. It is admitted by the complainant in his evidence that the wife and children of the Katkaris work with the Kathodi, that they are not paid separate wages for their work and that their labour is also included in the rate. It is also admitted by him that, though he feeds them, he could charge them for the same and would do so in case the workmen did not return to work for the following season. Taking the terms of the contract as stated in the document, with the finding of the Magistrate and the facts admitted by the complainant, I am wholly unable to accept his conclusion that the conditions of the contract are fair and reasonable. It is suggested before us that these workmen get some further remuneration under some other arrangement or contract. But there is no evidence in support of this suggestion. The fairness of the contracts must be determined on the evidence on the record; and it is hardly possible to treat these contracts, under the circumstances established, to be fair or reasonable. The workmen refused to work though they received the advances; and the question is, whether, under the circumstances, it is established that they had no lawful or reasonable excuse to neglect or refuse to perform the work as contemplated by the Act. Having regard to the terms of the contract, it seems to me that it cannot be said that the workmen had no lawful or reasonable excuse to refuse to work. The learned Magistrate has referred to some other facts which go to show that the complainant treats his workmen with a certain degree of consideration. But it appears from his evidence that the consideration he shows to the workmen means an addition to the legal dues recoverable from them. No doubt it is claimed that if these persons would return to work for the next season, he would not charge them the dues of the preceding season. But that is a matter of concession on his part and not of any right of the workmen under the contract. I do not think that, on such considerations, the terms of a contract which may not be otherwise fair, can be treated as fair for the purpose of determining whether the workmen had a lawful or reasonable excuse to refuse to work. There is no question on the present proceedings of the civil liability of these workmen for the moneys received or for breach of contract. But all breaches of contract are not within the scope of the Act; I am satisfied, on a consideration of the terms of the contract and the other circumstances which are not in dispute, that in the present case the omission on the part of the workmen to perform the work did not render them liable to be dealt with under Act XIII of 1859.

I would, therefore, make the Rule absolute and set aside the order of the Magistrate.

The same order in the other companion applications Nos. 126 and 127 of 1919.

HAYWARD, J.—I concur that the order should be set aside as proposed by my learned brother.

The charcoal burners entered into this contract with the contractor,—"I bind myself to work for a season from 1st September 1918 to 15th of June 1919. Therefore, you have paid me at my request in advance cash Rs. 14. I bind myself to work for you till the amount is paid. The conditions of payment of your money, which is to be paid off by working, are that for my personal labour in preparing charcoal account will be made at the rate of 2 annas per bag. The money should be set off against the sum advanced. In case more money is taken by me as an advance in respect of my wages I bind myself to work under you till that amount is paid off. Till all your money is paid off as above I bind myself to work under you. If owing to any cause I give up your work and go away, you are fully empowered to proceed against me under Act XIII of 1859." The charcoal burners—it has been calculated and not disputed—would under this contract earn Rs. 37-8-0 by 10 months work with the aid of their families—whereas they would have to spend during the same period about Rs. 225 for their own support and that of their families. The contractor has been said to have made special arrangements for providing them with food and, unfortunately also, with drink. But it would appear that the expenses of these items have all been scrupulously and regularly debited to their account. He has, however, stated that the balance which would, under the arrangement, inevitably be due against them at the end of each year could be wiped off provided they returned to work with him the following year. They have had accordingly to return to work for him during the last 6 or 7 years. They have, however, on this particular occasion been tempted to break away by a better offer, and the consequence has promptly resulted which would in similar circumstances have happened during any of the past 6 or 7 years. The balances due against them have not been wiped off and they have been directed to work as usual upon the same disadvantageous terms or in default to be sent to jail under the provisions of Act XIII of 1859.

The charcoal burners have been described as "ignorant Kathodis"; and, again, as members of "the improvident and half barbarian tribe like the Kathodi" by the learned Magistrate. The contractor, on the other hand, would appear to be a well-to-do forest contractor. There could be, in my opinion, no doubt, in these circumstances, that the relations subsisting between the parties were such that one of the parties was in a position to dominate the will of the other, and there could, in my opinion, also be no doubt whatever, upon a consideration of the terms of the contract, that the transaction was unconscionable. The contractor was, therefore, bound by law to prove that the contracts were not induced by undue influence. No such proof has been pointed out to us, and the result must follow that the contracts would be liable to be avoided or broken as contracts obtained by undue influence under sections 16, and 19A of the Indian Contract Act. If so, it could not, in my opinion, properly be said that the contracts have been broken without lawful or reasonable excuse. The charcoal burners had the lawful right to break the contracts. They could not be said, in the circumstances, to have left the contractor without reasonable excuse. They have, no doubt, been wilfully broken, but that would not be enough. They must also have been broken without lawful or reasonable excuse as provided by section 2 of Act XIII of 1859. It is only in such circumstances that the contractor has been given a right to have recourse for the enforcement of his contracts to the Criminal Courts, and that has for a number of years been the view of Benches of this Court.

Rule made absolute.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 4 (1) (h), 190 (1) (a, b, c), 200, 526—'Complaint' 'Police report'—Report made by Police Officer in non-cognizable case, whether complaint or 'Police report'—Jurisdiction of Magistrate to take cognizance Failure to examine complainant on oath, effect of – Irregularity.

The Superintendent of Police by a letter to the Deputy Commissioner made charges of extortion against the petitioner who was a Police Officer under suspension, and this letter was placed before a Magistrate empowered under section 190, Criminal Procedure Code, who issued a warrant for the arrest of the petitioner and thereby instituted proceedings against him without examining the Superintendent on oath:

Held, that if the Police Superintendent's letter was not a 'Police report' it was a 'complaint' within the meaning of section 4 (1) (h) of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the proceedings were not liable to be quashed, whether the letter was a 'Police report' or a 'complaint' [p. 595, col. 2.]

If a Magistrate, duly empowered, takes cognizance of an offence upon complaint, but omits to examine the complainant on oath the omission is no more than an irregularity and it does not affect the Magistrate's jurisdiction to try the offender. [p. 596, col. 1.]

Rule against the decision of the District Magistrate, Jalpaiguri.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mookerjee (with him Babu Panna Lal Chatterjee not present), for the Petitioner.

Mr. Orr, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule upon the District Magistrate of Jalpaiguri to show cause why the criminal proceedings pending against the petitioner under section 384 of the Penal Code, in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate of Jalpaiguri, should not be quashed or, in the alternative, why the case should not be transferred to some other District for trial.

The petitioner is a Police Officer. In June 1918 the Superintendent of Police, Jalpaiguri, by a letter addressed to the Deputy Commissioner, made certain charges of extortion against the petitioner who had been suspended. The letter on receipt in the Deputy Commissioner's Office appears to have been placed before Mr. A. Majid, Deputy Magistrate, who issued a warrant for the petitioner's arrest and thereby instituted the proceedings against the petitioner to which the Rule relates.

Mr. Majid is specially empowered to take cognizance of offences under section 190, sub-section (1), clauses (a) and (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code. The first point taken on the petitioner's behalf is that the Superintendent's letter is not a Police report within the meaning of clause (b), and that Mr. Majid erred in taking cognizance of the case, as it appears that he did, under that clause. An offence under section 384 of the Penal Code is a "non-cognizable" offence and it is argued, on the authority of the decision of a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court in King-Emperor v. Sada (1), that the expression 'Police report' in clause (b) of section 190 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code does not include a report made by a Police Officer of his own motion in a non-cognizable case. If that be so, what follows? In the definition of "complaint" in section 4 (1) (h) of the Code it is stated that the term does not include "the report of a Police Officer." If the expression "Police reports" is to have a restricted meaning, then, as the case cited itself shows, the meaning of the expression "report of a Police Officer" must be similarly restricted, so as to bring a report made by a Police Officer of his own motion in a non-cognizable case within the definition of "complaint". Otherwise, such a report as the Police Superintendent's letter in the present case would be neither a "complaint," nor a "Police report" nor could it be dealt with under section 190 (1) (c) as "information received from any person other than a "Police Officer." That could not have been intended by the framers of the Code. It is sufficient, therefore, for the purposes of the present case to say that if the Police Superintendent's letter was not a "Police report," it was a complaint and the Deputy Magistrate is empowered to take cognizance of offences upon complaint under section 190 (1) (a). It is said that the Deputy Magistrate did not examine the Superintendent on oath under the provisions of section 200 of the Criminal Procedure

(1) 26 B. 150; 3 Bom. L. R. 586.

Code. But, even on the assumption that the Superintendent's letter was a complaint, the mere fact that he was not examined on oath would not, in our opinion, vitiate the proceedings or render them proceedings taken without jurisdiction. Under section 529, clause (e) of the Code if a Magistrate not empowered by law to take cognizance of an offence under section 190, sub section (1), clause (a) or clause (b) does so erroneously but in good faith, his proceedings are not to be set aside merely on that ground. That being expressly laid down if a Magistrate, duly empowered, takes cognizance of an offence upon complaint, but omits to examine the complainant on oath, the omission can hardly be more than an irregularity which does not affect the Magistrate's jurisdiction to try the offender. This is the second time the petitioner has moved the Court to intervene in the proceedings against him. On the last occasion this question of jurisdiction was not raised or mentioned. Moreover, the Police Superintendent's letter was based on information received by him and his examination on oath would have been a mere formality.

To sum up, if the Superintendent's letter was a "Police report" no question even of irregularity arises. If it was a "complaint" the petitioner has no substantial grievance. We are accordingly unable to accept the contentions now put forward as disclosing any sufficient reason for quashing the proceedings.

There remains the alternative prayer for the transfer of the case to some other Court for trial. The petitioner, though he is under suspension, is a Police Officer. As a Police Officer he is subject to the disciplinary rules of his department and the lawful authority of the Officers to whom he is subordinate. He complains that disciplinary orders, to which he is bound to render obedience, hamper him in the conduct of his defence. Now it is entirely beyond our province to interfere with the discipline of the force or the exercise by the Superior Officer of Police of their lawful powers. We have no doubt that the observations made on the 23rd August 1918 by the learned Judges who were then dealing with criminal matters have borne fruit and that the Superintendent of Police has honestly attempted to remove any cause of complaint on the petitioner's part that he was being harshly or inconsiderately treated.

On the other hand, we are bound to satisfy ourselves that the conditions under which the petitioner is being tried do not impede him in his defence and for that purpose we must look at the matter not only from the point of view of the superior officers but also from the point of view of the petitioner.

The principal order governing the petitioner's movements appear to be an order of the 5th September 1918, quoted in the explanation submitted by the Deputy Commissioner. By that order the Superintendent directs that the petitioner is to be "allowed facilities for instructing his legal adviser or taking such other steps as may be necessary for the conduct of his defence at any time on application made to me." We are quite prepared to believe that no exception can be taken to the spirit in which that order was meant to be carried out. The order, nevertheless, seems to involve this, that the petitioner has to apply to the Superintendent from time to time for such facilities as he requires. The Superintendent may be quite willing to grant the facilities but there may be at any rate some delay before the petitioner's applications are received or dealt with by him. The result has been to engender in the petitioner's mind a feeling that his movements are unduly restricted and on the materials before us we cannot characterize his state of mind as entirely unreasonable.

While, therefore, we make no reflection on the conduct of the Superior Police Officers, and while no one questions the impartiality of the Deputy Magistrate before whom the case is now pending, we are of opinion that a transfer of the case is desirable and we direct accordingly that the case be transferred for trial to the Court of such competent Magistrate at Siliguri as the Deputy Commissioner of Darjeeling may appoint.

Case transferred.

A person cannot be convicted under the Defence of India Consolidation Rules of 1915, without the written consent of the authority mentioned in rule 30 of the rules to initiate proceedings against him

The shop of accused No 1 was raided by the Police who found a furnace ready heated, and on it a crucible containing molten silver and near it a large number of sovereigns in an open dish or receptacle so placed as to be ready for transfer to the crucible: he was convicted of attempting to melt sovereigns under rules 21A and 28 of the Defence of India Consolidation Rules 1915. On revision to the High Court:

Held, that he had been rightly convicted

A and B were tried and convicted of offences under rules 21A and 28 of the Defence of India Consolidation Rules, 1915. It was found that the consent in writing required by rule 30 authorised proceedings against A. alone and that it did not specify the offence for which he was to be tried:

Held, (1) that B's conviction was illegal and must be set aside;

(2) that the defect in the consent did not invalidate the proceedings as regards A.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—We are hearing these matters in revision, but, as well as the point of law, we have had the evidence laid before us. It is a prosecution under the Defence of India Consolidation Rules of 1915. Under rule 21A of those rules it is made an offence to melt any current gold coin. It is urged against the accused No. 1 that he attempted to melt a number of sovereigns, and it is conceded that if he did attempt to melt sovereigns, he is guilty under this rule together with another rule which penalizes attempts. It is provided by rule 30 that "no Court shall take cognizance of any offence punishable under these rules" unless certain authorities, amongst whom is the District Magistrate, have "by order in writing consented to the initiation of the proceedings." We have in this case the order in writing which purports to be the consent to the initiation of the proceedings, and that document recites that, in the exercise of the authority vested in him by rule 30, the District Magistrate of Surat hereby consents to proceedings being initiated against Memon Abu Hasan of Surat in the Court of the First Class Magistrate of Surat. The nature of the proceedings is not stated in the order. Memon Abu Hasan is the accused No. 1 in the case. After proceedings had been initiated against him, it transpired that there was another man, accused No. 2 in the case, who, it is alleged, abetted the offence by providing the sovereigns. It is claimed for him that there is no consent in writing to any proceedings against him. That, I think, is so. He might be got at, it seems to me, at most in only two ways, either by entering his name in the written consent, but that was not done, or possibly, (I will not say certainly) by describing the offence in the written consent and thereafter showing that he was concerned in that particular offence. But this has not been done either. There is no offence described in the consent in writing, and the name of accused No. 2 is not mentioned, therefore, it seems to me that accused No. 2 must be acquitted for the reason that I have stated that the proceedings against him have not been consented to in writing. This is a great deal more than a merely technical matter. We are dealing with an act which has been made an offence by certain rules which are temporary in their nature and are made to meet a special emergency. It is specially provided that there must be consent in writing for the initiation of proceedings. This is intended as a real safeguard and it must be given full effect to,

That has not happened in this case as regards accused No. 2.

This rule about a consent in writing is, as I read it, intended to be an undertaking by the Government that no one shall be prosecuted unless his case has been considered by one of the authorities named. This has to be shown by a consent in writing. There is no guarantee here that the case of accused No. 2 received any consideration whatever from the District Magistrate. Therefore, to uphold his conviction would cause a breach of an undertaking given by the Government. To that we cannot possibly consent

It is urged also that the consent in writing does not properly cover even the case of accused No. 1. We think, however, that it does cover his case, because he is named and from what happened contemporaneously with the grant of this consent there is no doubt that the nature of the proceedings to be initiated was known and understood, so that the omission of mention of them in the document does not render that document inoperative as regards accused No. 1. But I must say that the document is very carelessly drawn up, and further that proper care and attention ought to be given to these matters by the responsible officers.

I will now turn to the facts. It was proved to the satisfaction of the trial Court and of the Court of Appeal that when the Police raided the shop of accused No. 1, they found a furnace ready heated and on it a crucible containing molten silver and near it a large number of sovereigns in an open dish or receptacle so placed as to be ready for transfer to the crucible. It is contended that these facts are not established by the evidence and in particular that it is not shown that there was a crucible on the furnace with molten silver in it. No doubt that fact was disputed before the trial Magistrate and evidence was recorded before him to show that there was no crucible. The Magistrate, however, found that there was a crucible with molten silver in it, and when the matter came up in appeal before the Sessions Judge, he recorded in his judgment,—"It is admitted, that when the shop of accused No. 1 was raided, a furnace was found burning with a crucible on it containing molten silver." If that circumstance was admitted before the Court of Appeal I feel no hesitation whatever in accepting it as a fact, sitting here as a Court of Revision. The facts, therefore, are as stated in the judgment of the Sessions Judge, and what those facts mean beyond any doubt to my mind is this that the sovereigns were there for the purpose of being melted, and that the crucible with the molten silver on it was there for the purpose of having those sovereigns or some of them placed in it.

The only point that remains, then, is to consider whether this does amount to an attempt to melt these sovereigns or some of them. It seems to me that it does. I will take a case that has been referred to—Queen Empress v. Luxman (1),—it is stated that Sir Lawrence Jenkins described an attempt in these words:—"An attempt is an intentional preparatory action which fails in its object—which so fails through circumstances independent of the person who seeks its accomplishment." We have another view of what an attempt is stated in the case of Emperor v Chandkha Salabatkha (2), in which, at page 555*, there is a quotation of what Mr. Justice Blackburn said, that,—"if the actual transaction has commenced which would have ended in the crime, if not interrupted, there is clearly an attempt to commit the crime." The transaction in this case comprised the heating of the furnace, the placing of the silver in the crucible, the placing of the crucible with the silver in the furnace, the lapse of time required to melt the silver and, finally, the depositing of the sovereigns in the crucible containing the molten silver. The whole of this somewhat complicated, and by no means brief, transaction had been accomplished except the final act of putting the sovereigns into the molten silver in the crucible. That, in my judgment, shows, and clearly shows that there was an attempt to commit this offence. Therefore, I think, that the accused No. 1 was rightly convicted.

BIR KISHORE ROY v. EMPEROR.

But I think that, having regard to the circumstance that the melting of coin was formerly not an offence and we are told formerly not uncommon, and that it has been made an offence by special rules of a temporary character to meet a special purpose and that, so far as we know, this is the first case of the kind in these parts—certainly the first case that has come before us—we think that the punishment need not be so severe as that which has been imposed.

We, therefore, change the sentence of imprisonment to imprisonment for that period which the accused No. 1 has already undergone, and we leave the sentence of fine unchanged.

Accused No. 2 is acquitted and the fine, if paid, must be refunded.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is a petition on behalf of Bir Kishore Rai, a Pleader practising at Puri, in the Courts subordinate to the District Court of Cuttack, praying for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from an order passed by a Full Bench of this Court, under section 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act, 1879, suspending him from practice for a period of six months from the 7th February 1918. The circumstances under which the petitioner was suspended appear from the judgment of the Court in the matter of Emperor v. Bir Kishore Rai (1). There were three charges against him of accepting briefs for both sides. The first was a mortgage suit in which he appeared for the plaintiffs and signed the plaint and subsequently accepted a vakalatnama from the mortgagor, one of the defendants, and filed a written statement admitting the claim although other defendants, transferees, were contesting it. In the second case he appeared for a decree-holder in an execution case, and subsequently appeared for the judgment-debtor praying for an order to set aside the sale obtained in execution. In the third case he first appeared for the decree holder in execution, then appeared for an adverse claimant under Order XXI, rule 58, in the same proceedings, and when that claim was dismissed and the property sold, finally appeared for the judgment-debtor seeking to set aside the sale. This Court found that this was grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty within section 13 (b) of the Legal Practitioners Act and suspended him accordingly.

We are now asked to grant a certificate that the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council.

A preliminary objection has been raised that the Court has no jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal in such a case as the present, as no appeal lies unless their Lordships should decide for special reasons to admit it.

There is no provision in the Legal Practitioners Act conferring a right of appeal from an order passed by the High Court under section 13. It is contended, however, that under clause 31 of the Letters Patent by which this Court is constituted an appeal lies to His Majesty in Council. That clause provides that an appeal shall lie to His Majesty in Council in any matter not being of criminal jurisdiction (inter alia) any final order made in the exercise of original jurisdiction not coming under the operation of clause 10. Admittedly, the case is not covered by clause 10, which provides for appeals to the High Court itself from the decision of a Single Judge, or of two or more Judges where they are equally divided in opinion. There is a proviso to clause 31 that the sum or matter at issue shall be of the amount or value of not less than Rs. 10,000, or that the judgment, decree, or order appealed from shall involve a claim, demand or question respecting property of the like amount or value, and an appeal is also allowed.

"From any other final judgment, decree, or order made on appeal or otherwise as aforesaid when the said High Court declares that the case is a fit one for appeal."

The words "or otherwise as aforesaid" clearly refer to judgments, decrees, or orders passed in the exercise of original jurisdiction not being criminal jurisdiction or covered by clause 10.

Clauses 9 to 27 of the Letters Patent deal with the different clauses of jurisdiction which are conferred on the High Court. They are civil, criminal, admiralty, testamentary, and intestate and matrimonial jurisdiction, appellate and original. The next three clauses deal with procedure, and clauses 31 to 34 deal with appeals to the Privy Council. In my opinion, the clauses dealing with the right of appeal to His Majesty in Council were meant to be confined to the different clauses of jurisdiction above enumerated and not to the administrative or disciplinary powers conferred on the Court by earlier clauses in the Letters Patent or by Statute. The use of the word "jurisdiction" in clause 31 clearly seems to indicate that the appeals referred to are appeals from judgments, decrees, and orders passed in the exercise of one or other of the clauses of jurisdiction conferred by clauses 9 to 27 where the word jurisdiction is used. In the clauses conferring administrative and disciplinary powers the word jurisdiction is nowhere used to describe such powers. In fact, the powers of removing or suspending from practice granted by clause 8 of the Letters Patent are confined to the cases of Advocates, Vakils, and Attorneys. The like power in the case of Pleaders is conferred only by section 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act, and is not a power referred to in the Letters Patent at all. It has been held, however, by the High Court at Bombay that the right of appeal to His Majesty in Council granted by clause 39 of the Letters Patent of that High Court (corresponding to clause 31 in those of this Court) did not apply to orders passed suspending a Vakil in the exercise of the disciplinary powers granted to that Court similar to those contained in the present clause 8. [See G. S. D. v. Government Pleader (2)]. It was also held by the Supreme Court of Bombay in Morgan v. Leech (3) in 1841 that the Charter granting an appeal from a "judgment or determination" did not apply to a rule of the Court refusing to strike a person off the rolls. Matters of this nature have generally been held to be the subject of special leave. James Minchin, In re (4) was a case where the Supreme Court of Madras made an order dismissing the Master of that Court from his office for alleged misconduct. On appeal to Her Majesty in Council it was pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee that there was no right of appeal under the Charter, and that the order was not made in the course of a judicial proceeding. The clause in the Charter in question was as follows:—

"And it is our further will and pleasure and we do direct establish and ordain that if any person or persons shall find him, her or themselves aggrieved by any judgment or determination of the said Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras in any case whatsoever it shall be lawful for him, her or them to appeal to us our heirs or successors in our or their Privy Council in such manner and under such restrictions and qualifications as are hereinafter mentioned, that is to say, in all judgments and determinations made by the Supreme Court of Judicature at Madras in any civil cause the party or parties against whom or to whose immediate prejudice the said...

determination shall be or tend may by his or their humble petition to be preferred for that purpose to the said Court pray leave to appeal to us our heirs or successors in our or their Privy Council stating in such petition the cause or causes of such appeal."

Special leave was subsequently granted, and the appeal was heard on the merits. The words "in any civil cause" in the Charter quoted do not appear to me to be less comprehensive than the words in clause 31 of this Court's Letters Patent which restrict appeals to judgments, decrees or orders passed in the exercise of appellate or original jurisdiction, such jurisdiction having already been defined in the preceding clauses, the only possible class which might apply to the present case being that described as civil jurisdiction. In Safford and Wheeler's Privy Council Practice, at page 789, the practice relating to this class of cases is referred to as the subject of special leave, and there can be little doubt that they have been so treated by the Judicial Committee for a considerable period. The judgment of the Bombay High Court in the case of G. S. D. v. Government Pleader (2), above mentioned, refers to three earlier cases where the High Courts of Calcutta and Allahabad appeared to have granted leave, but, as pointed out in that judgment, those cases are of doubtful authority. In one of them, Parboti Charan Chatterji, In the matter of (5), it does not appear from the report whether leave was granted and in another [Sashi Bhusan Sarbadhicary, In the matter of (6)] special leave was obtained.

In my opinion this petition should be refused.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 8, 25, 26—Statement made by accused to Police Officer, admissibility of—Conduct, evidence of—Statement made by Police Officer to complainant in presence of accused, admissibility of.

Statements made to a Police Officer or to a complainant in the presence of a Police Officer are inadmissible in evidence under sections 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act. [p. 603, col. 1.]

Similarly, evidence, which is substantially evidence of the confession of an accused person in the presence of a Police Officer is inadmissible as evidence of conduct apart from the accompanying statements under section 8 of the Act. [p. 603, col. 1.]

The second explanation to section 8 of the Evidence Act does not apply to a statement made by a Police Officer to a complainant in the presence of an accused person. [p. 603, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal from conviction and sentence passed by the Second Presidency Magistrate, Bombay.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—In this case three persons were charged with house-breaking at night and theft of property worth about Rs. 22,000, said to have been committed in the bungalow of the complainant on the Walkeshwar Road on the 11th February last year. The theft and the house-breaking alleged were undoubtedly committed. A part of the property stolen was later on traced to one Moti Narottam residing in the Palanpur territory, and, as a result of the investigation that followed upon this tracing of the property, the present accused who belong to the Kaira District, were sent up for trial to the Second Presidency Magistrate.

The property which has been traced has been identified, and there can be no doubt that the property traced to Moti and the witness Shiva in the case formed part of the property stolen from the house of the complainant. The principal evidence against these three persons was the evidence of the witness Moti Narottam. The learned trial Magistrate acquitted accused Nos. 2 and 3 on the ground that the evidence of Moti Narottam, who was undoubtedly an accomplice, required independent corroboration and that there was no such corroboration in any material particulars as regards these two accused persons. As to the accused No. 1 the trial Magistrate held that such corroboration was afforded first by the close resemblance between the foot-print of accused No. 1 and the tracing of a foot-mark which was found on a table in the house of the complainant immediately after the offence, and secondly, by the evidence of the Inspector of Police to the effect that the accused No. 1 pointed out on the 5th June the house which he had entered on the night of the offence and the various places in the house connected with the offence and accordingly convicted him. The accused No. 1 has appealed to this Court and the points in the appeal relate to the admissibility and sufficiency of the evidence relied upon by the learned Magistrate as corroborating the story of the accomplice so far as it affects the appellant.

I may mention, at the outset, that the general account given by the accomplice appears to me, as it appeared to the trial Magistrate, to be substantially true, and that, under the circumstances, corroboration as to the connection of the accused with the house breaking and theft is needed. It is proved in the case that about this time Shiva occupied a house in Khetwadi; that the three accused used to stay with him or to visit him, and that probably they were in Bombay at the time, when this theft was committed. But that circumstance does not corroborate the story of the prosecution that the three accused were concerned in the theft on the night of the 11th of February. In fact, the trial Magistrate has not treated the circumstance in that way as to accused Nos. 2 and 3, and it is equally ineffective as regards accused No. 1.

The argument in the appeal has mainly ranged round the two circumstances which the trial Magistrate has relied upon as sufficiently corroborating the evidence of the accomplice as to the connection of accused No. 1 with the theft. The evidence which relates to the resemblance of the two foot-prints is not sufficient to corroborate the accomplice. A careful comparison of the foot-print with the tracing on the glass does not yield any better result than that the two foot-prints may be of the same man. It is impossible to say with any degree of confidence on a comparison of these prints that the mark which was observed on the table in the house of the complainant on the night of the 11th was really the mark of the right foot of accused No. 1. There was some argument as to the admissibility of the evidence of the expert examined on behalf of the prosecution to establish the identity. But it is not necessary to go into that question. Assuming his evidence to be admissible, it is clear that his opinion cannot be accepted as establishing the identity of the appellant as the foot marks do not coincide with sufficient accuracy. In the course of the argument it was fairly conceded by the Government Pleader that he could not maintain that the two marks were sufficiently identical, and on a comparison of these two marks I have come to the same conclusion. The apparent resemblance between the two marks does not carry the case of the prosecution any further than the evidence of the accomplice.

As to the second item of corroboration, which consists of the evidence of the Inspector and the complainant, the question is whether that evidence is admissible. The learned Magistrate is of opinion that it is admissible. I am, however, unable to agree with that view. In my opinion the evidence taken as a whole shows that it is evidence of a confession of the accused in the presence of a Police Officer. It is true that in terms it purports to establish that accused No. 1 pointed out the house and the various places connected with the offence and it is contended that it is really evidence of the conduct of the accused, and that, therefore, it is admissible under section 8 of the Indian Evidence Act. It is clear from the evidence that the real significance of the conduct arises out of the statements made by the accused at the time, and that the conduct apart from the statements made either expressly or impliedly by gestures by the accused has very little value. The meaning that was conveyed to the witnesses by what is contended to be the conduct of the accused and not his statements was really conveyed by the statements made at the time when he pointed out the various places. Such statements would clearly be inadmissible under sections 25 and 26 of the Indian Evidence Act as they were made to the Police Officer or to the complainant in the presence of the Police Officer. It is common ground that no fact is deposed to as discovered in consequence of the information furnished by the accused and that section 27 of the Indian Evidence Act does not apply. I am unable to accept the contention urged by the learned Government Pleader that this evidence, which is substantially evidence of the confession of the accused in the presence of a Police Officer, can be admitted as evidence of conduct, apart from the accompanying statements, under section 8. It is further urged that in any case the statements made by the Police Officer to the complainant in the presence of the accused that he (the accused) was going to show the various places connected with the theft, would be admissible under Explanation 2 of section 8. I do not think, however, that Explanation 2 can apply to the statement made by the Police Officer to the complainant in the presence of the accused, first, because the conduct, apart from the accompanying statements, is not shown to be relevant, and secondly, because under the circumstances such a statement cannot be said to affect the conduct of the accused For these reasons I am of opinion that the evidence of the Police Inspector and the complainant as to the pointing out of the various places by the accused No. 1 is really evidence of the confession of his guilt made while he was in the custody of the Police Officer, and is, therefore, inadmissible.

In the result, therefore, we have the evidence of the accomplice without any material corroboration as to the connection of the appellant with the theft and house breaking. On that evidence the learned Magistrate has rightly refused to convict accused Nos. 2 and 3 and under the circumstances the accused No. 1 also is entitled to the same treatment. I am of opinion that the evidence of the accomplice is insufficient to justify the conviction of the appellant on the charge of theft and house-breaking. The conviction and sentence must be set aside and the appellant should be acquitted and discharged.

HEATON, J.—I agree. Taking the evidence and circumstances in this case I think it is inevitable that the appellant must be acquitted. He is convicted of theft and, apart from the two matters to which I will allude later on, the evidence of importance in the case is directed to connect him not with the theft, but with the disposal of certain of the stolen property some time after the theft and at places hundreds of miles away from the scene of the offence. The evidence of the approver Moti makes much more certain the connection of himself and other persons with the stolen property than the connection of the present appellant and those who were co accused as thieves with him. The Magistrate very rightly, as I think, found it quite impossible to convict any of these three persons on the strength of Moti's evidence. As regards the present appellant, however, he was convicted by reason of the two items of evidence which my learned brother has fully dealt with.

As regards the foot-print, all I need say is that after the closest examination and after careful comparison of the outline taken on glass of the foot print found on the table with the foot print of the accused No. 1, the present appellant, the result is this. The two may be impressions of the foot of the same person, but it is at least equally possible that they may be the impressions of the feet of different persons. That item of evidence is, therefore, absolutely neutral.

As regards the other item, I entirely agree with my learned brother that in this case what the appellant was doing was that he was making a confession to a Police Officer. But the confession comprised not merely words but gestures, and what is sought to be done is, while not proving the words, to prove gestures and further to prove all that is necessary to give significance to those gestures. But I quite agree that gestures are just as much a part of a confession as are the words used. So that item of evidence also must be discarded.

Therefore, I think the order of acquittal, as I have said in this case is inevitable.

Accused acquitted.

ASGHAR ALI—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—Revision—Enhancement of sentence—Sentence not in accordance with law—High Court, power of—Sentence of imprisonment for period already undergone, legality of.

The High Court can interfere, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to enhance a sentence, only in those cases in which a legal sentence has been passed. A sentence for a period already undergone in the lock-up is not a legal sentence.

Case reported by the District Magistrate, Karnal, with his No. 1332 G. of 3rd October 1918.

FACTS.—Lieutenants C. Reynolds and N. Walker, while travelling from Simla to Delhi by train, were robbed of their articles. The former was robbed on the night between 19-20th July and the latter on the night between 1st-2nd August 1918. The accused was travelling without tickets in the same trains as the complainants. Last time when arrested he was searched and found in possession, besides the articles of stolen property, of two 1st class tickets from Simla to Delhi, which apparently belonged to the complainants. He was charged under section 411, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to imprisonment for the period already passed by him in the lock-up.

GROUNDS.—The sentence is perfectly absurd. So is the conviction under section 411 instead of section 379. The thief is proved to have been on the trains on both nights on which the thefts were committed, he is also found in possession of the two 1st class tickets stolen besides other property. How could he have obtained the 1st class tickets unless he himself had stolen them? They are worth nothing and no one would "receive" them. I think the accused should have been sentenced to one year's imprisonment at least. There are two separate thefts which show the man is a habitual train thief. The case must go up for enhancement of punishment.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the accused has been sentenced in two cases by a Magistrate to imprisonment for the period which he had already passed in the lock-up. The District Magistrate has referred the case to this Court with a recommendation for enhancement of the sentences. I regret, however, that I am unable to take action as no legal sentence has been passed and the provision of section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, only refers to such sentences. Bhagel Singh v. Crown (1) is an authority that a sentence for a period already undergone is not a legal sentence. I am, therefore, compelled to remand the case to the Magistrate with directions that he shall pass sentences in accordance with law upon the accused.

Case remanded.

MURARJI RAGHUNATH GUJARATI v. EMPEROR.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—This is a case which is both interesting and important. A customer purchased from a shopkeeper goods the price of which was Rs. 2-13-0 and he tendered in payment two currency notes, one of Rs. 2-8-0 the other of rupee one. The shopkeeper accepted the notes and the change which apparently he ought to have given was annas 11 but he tendered as change only 9 anna and 3 pies, saying that the notes were not worth their face value and that 1 anna and 9 pies was charged by the shopkeeper on that account. At least that is what in substance happened, though of course we cannot be sure from the evidence, what were the exact words used. What happened exactly next we do not know from the evidence. But we know either that the customer complained to a Police Officer or that the Police Officer saw what had happened and intervened, for the two notes paid to the shopkeeper were attached, a Panchanama was made and the shopkeeper was sent before a Magistrate who, after taking evidence, framed a charge of cheating. The accused pleaded guilty to the charge. He was convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 25 and he has applied to this Court in revision.

First, I will deal with the plea of guilty. I feel perfectly certain in my own mind that the accused never intended by his plea of guilty to admit more than that the facts alleged against him were true. Whether on those facts he ought to be held to have committed the offence of cheating is really a question of law, as to which the plea of the accused must be considered immaterial. Magistrates sometimes make mistakes of this kind. They think that because an accused person admits the facts, therefore, he admits that he has committed the offence with which he is charged. This is one of those cases in which the admission of the facts does not amount to an admission of the offence. Therefore, I shall proceed to deal with the case as if there were no plea of guilty.

For cheating there must be deceit. In this case, obviously, there was no deceit at all in the earlier part of the transaction. There was a sale of goods after the usual inquiry as to price and there was a tender of the price by the purchaser. So far then, there was clearly no deceit. But it is said that the shopkeeper deceived when he stated that the notes were not worth their face value. Whether he said this before or after he had taken the notes into his hands does not appear. But, in substance, it is to my mind perfectly clear that there was no deceit at all. The customer was not induced to hand over the notes by any representation on the part of the shopkeeper that he would get change calculated on the face value of the notes. He handed the notes to the shopkeeper in the ordinary course of the sale and purchase transaction and what really happened was, that a dispute then arose as to the correct amount of change due to the customer. He claimed 11 annas calculated on the face value of the notes. The shopkeeper said he would give only 9 annas and 3 pies, because the notes were not worth their face value. It is, as I judge it, simply a case of a dispute between the shopkeeper and the customer, and in no way whatever a case of deceit, and certainly not a case of cheating. That is the only matter that we have to consider. The case may illustrate the fact that there are economic and financial difficulties about these notes. With that we have nothing to do. We have merely to decide whether the present applicant is guilty of the offence of cheating, and, in my opinion, it is not a matter even of the slightest doubt—I hold that it is perfectly clear—that he never committed the offence of cheating in this matter at all.

I think our order should be that the conviction is set aside and that the fine, if paid, should be refunded.

SHAH, J.—I entirely agree.

Order set aside.

HOSHNAK RAM-GANGA RAM—PETITIONERS
versus
EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Petroleum Act (VIII of 1899), ss. 11, 15 (a)—Transporting petroleum, what amounts to—Unlawful possession of petroleum, what is.

A person who purchases petroleum from the agent of a company who, in order to give delivery, has to procure it from another place, cannot be convicted of "transporting" petroleum, within the meaning of section 11 of the Petroleum, Act.

A person who takes delivery of a quantity of petroleum in excess of the quantity allowed by law, and is unable to prove that he did not continue for a reasonable time to be in possession of the entire quantity of which he took delivery, is guilty of the offence of being in possession of petroleum in excess of the quantity allowed by law, within the meaning of section 15 (a) of the Petroleum Act.

Criminal revision from the order of the Sessions Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 9th October 1918.

Mr. Ram Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Mul Chand, Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners, who constitute the firm of Hoshnak Ram-Ganga Ram, doing business at Toba Tek Singh, in the District of Lyallpur, have been convicted of having transported and possessed petroleum in contravention of section 11 of the Indian Petroleum Act, VIII of 1899. Now, so far as the offence of transporting is concerned, I am of opinion that the conclusion of the lower Courts cannot be upheld.

The material facts are briefly as follows:—The Asiatic Petroleum Company of Karachi, which consigned the petroleum have got their agents Mul Chand-Khan Chand at Lyallpur. It appears that the petitioners entered into a contract with the agents at Lyallpur for the purchase of a certain quantity of petroleum, and that, in pursuance of that contract, the agents wrote to the Asiatic Petroleum Company at Karachi to despatch the goods. The latter consequently despatched petroleum and sent the railway receipts to Mul Chand Khan Chand. It is to be observed that in the railway receipts the Asiatic Petroleum Company are described as the consignors and Mul Chand Khan Chand as the consignees. So far as these receipts are concerned, the petitioner's names did not originally appear.

Upon instructions received from Mul Chand-Khan Chand, the petitioners went to them, paid the money and got the railway receipts endorsed in their favour. They then went to the railway station and took delivery of the goods. Upon these facts I am not prepared to hold that the petitioners can be deemed to have transported petroleum from Karachi to Toba Tek Singh. The word "transport," as defined in section 2 of the Act, means to remove from one place to another, and I fail to understand how it can be said that the petitioners removed petroleum from Karachi to its destination.

It is perfectly clear that they originally entered into a contract to purchase the goods, and that the property therein did not pass until the payment by them of the price to Mul Chand-Khan Chand and the endorsement of the receipts by the latter in their favour. The petroleum was, up to that date, the property of the Asiatic Petroleum Company, and the possession was also with them. If they had refused to deliver the goods to the petitioners, the latter could only claim damages for the breach of an agreement to sell; but they could not say before the aforesaid date that the dominium had passed to them or that the goods were in their possession. Suppose, the agents, instead of endorsing the railway receipts, had gone to the railway station at Toba Tek Singh and taken delivery of the petroleum from the railway administration, and then handed it over to the petitioners. In that case, I do not think that it could be seriously contended that the petitioners had transported the petroleum. And I do not consider that the fact that the agents endorsed the receipts to the convicts and authorised them to receive the goods makes any real difference in the matter.

Mr. Mul Chand for the Crown invites my attention to a judgment of the Madras High Court in Queen-Empress v. Ramanujam (1), which deals with the offence of transporting opium in contravention of the provisions of the Opium Act, I of 1878. In that case the accused had sent a servant to buy opium from a licensed dealer at a certain place and to bring it to Madras, and the Court rightly held that the act of the servant was the act of the master and consequently convicted the latter of the offence of transporting. I do not think that that judgment has any application to the facts of the present case. Neither the Asiatic Petroleum Company nor their agents, Mul Chand-Khan Chand, can be viewed as the agents of the petitioners. It seems to me that the petitioners were one party to the contract, and the Asiatic Petroleum Company, through their agents, were the other party to the contract. I am unable to hold that either the promisor or the promisee can in this case be regarded as the agent of the other.

On the question of possession, the matter seems to be simple enough. It is beyond dispute that the petitioners received delivery of 800 gallons of kerosene oil on the 9th May 1918, which was in excess of the quantity allowed by law. The evidence adduced by them that they sold 500 gallons to one Ram Chand at the railway station on that day has been disbelieved by the lower Courts, and there is nothing to show that they did not continue for a reasonable time to be in possession of the entire quantity of the kerosene oil of which they undoubtedly took delivery on the aforesaid date. They accordingly kept petroleum in excess of the quantity allowed by law, and have been rightly convicted of having been in possession of the entire quantity covered by the third consignment. Mr. Ram Chand for the petitioners places his reliance upon a judgment in Swaminatha Iyer, In re (2) but that case is distinguishable on the simple ground that there the person concerned immediately after taking delivery from the Railway Company distributed the petroleum at the railway premises to certain persons for whom it was intended. The Court accordingly held that he did not "keep" within the meaning of section 15 (a) of the Petroleum Act more than 500 gallons of petroleum for a reasonable time. Here, as stated above, the petitioners have failed to establish that they distributed any petroleum out of 800 gallons which they received on the 9th May 1918.

Accordingly, I accept the application for revision so far as to set aside the convictions and sentences in respect of the transporting of petroleum. The convictions and sentences in regard to the possession of petroleum are maintained. The fines levied in consequence of the convictions which are hereby set aside must be refunded to the petitioners.

Revision accepted in part.

CRIMINAL APPLICATION FOR REVISION NO. 14 OF 1919.

April 11, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Heaton and Mr Justice Shah.

In re CHANDULAL RANCHHOD—ACCUSED—APPLICANT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 488, 489 -Maintenance, order directing payment of, to wif —Restitution of conjugal rights, decree for, effect of.

Where a wife obtains an order against her husband under section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code and subsequently thereto the husband obtains a decree against the wife for restitution of conjugal rights, such decree determines and puts an end to the order of maintenance notwithstanding the fact that the husband does not execute the decree and continues to pay the maintenance. The wife in such a case is not in a position to make an application under section 489 of the Code. [p. 607, col 1.]

Criminal application for revision against conviction and sentence passed by the City Magistrate, 1st Class, at Ahmedabad.

Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—This is in form an application under section 489 of the Criminal Procedure Code by a wife who, in the year 1910, obtained an order under section 488 for maintenance from her husband. She asked for an increased allowance and that is granted; and now the husband has applied to us in the exercise of our revisional powers.

The facts we have to deal with are these: The order under section 488 was made in 1910. In 1912 the husband obtained a decree against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights. That decree was never executed. The wife has never, since 1910, lived with her husband and the husband has continued to pay without objection the allowance directed by the Magistrate's order of 1910. These, as the case is presented to us, are undisputed facts.

It seems to me that the decree of 1912 did, as a matter of law, determine or put an end to the Magistrate's order under section 488, and for this simple, but to me convincing, reason. The decree for restitution of conjugal rights is a statement by a Court of matrimonial jurisdiction that husband and wife are under an obligation to live together and that the wife has no right to live apart from her husband. The Magistrate's order of 1910 was in law a statement that the wife had a right to live apart from her husband; but, of course, in the nature of things, any order made by a Magistrate in the exercise of the limited powers conferred on Magistrates by Chapter XXXVI of the Criminal Procedure Code, is subject to the orders of Civil Courts exercising matrimonial jurisdiction. For it is those latter Courts and they alone, that have the power to say finally what are the legal relations between the husband and the wife. A Magistrate under Chapter VI of the Criminal Procedure Code is granted a very limited power for the sake of convenience and that only. Therefore, it seems to me that the wife was not in a position to make a proper application under section 489, because there was no subsisting order under section 488. However, in all the circumstances of the case, we have to come to the conclusion that the Magistrate should treat the application nominally under section 489 as an application made by the wife under section 488. The Magistrate should hear any further evidence that may be offered and what arguments are offered and then determine, in the light of the circumstances at or about the date of the application, whether the wife is or is not entitled to an order for maintenance under section 488, and, if she is what the amount of that maintenance should be. The proceedings should be returned to the Magistrate for this purpose.

We set aside the order which the Magistrate has made.

SHAH, J.—I agree.

Order set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 439—Order under s. 145 without taking evidence, legality of—Jurisdiction of Magistrate—Revision.

An order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, without taking any evidence whatever, is an order made without jurisdiction.

Rule against the order of the Sub Divisional Magistrate, Khulna, dated the 14th March, 1919.

Babu Bir Bhushan Dutt, for the Petitioner

Babu Hemendra Coomar Das, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The ground on which this Rule was issued was that the learned Magistrate had acted without jurisdiction in passing the order under section 145, Code of Criminal Procedure, without taking any evidence whatever. The explanation submitted by the Magistrate and the affidavit filed by the opposite party do not afford sufficient justification for the order. The Magistrate was doubtless invited to go to the spot. But that invitation did not mean that he was to dispose of the case without recording any evidence whatever. We think in this case that the Magistrate acted without jurisdiction (and the order must be set aside). We make no order as to any further proceedings because that lies outside the scope of our functions.

Rule made absolute.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss 65, 190—Magistrate directing arrest of accused, legality of—Damages, suit for—Magistrate, liability of.

A Sub-Magistrate, acting under sections 65 and 190 of the Criminal Procedure Code in respect of a complaint under section 448 of the Penal Code, went to a temple, where the accused were in hiding, and arrested them, although he had passed no final order on the occurrence report which he had received the day previous:

Held, that, independently of the occurrence report, the Magistrate's action was justified, and he was not liable in an action for damages

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Additional Temporary Subordinate Judge, Guntur, in Appeal Suit No. 43 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Bapatla, in Original Suit No. 222 of 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. V. Ramesam and N. Kunjitapatam Ayyar, for the Appellants.—The 1st defendant, in making the arrest, acted in exercise of his powers. Under section 60, Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate can himself make an arrest or direct the arrest of a person and under section 190 (c) he can take cognizance of an offence on his own knowledge or suspicion that such an offence had been committed. Here the Magistrate, on entering the temple, found the accused making attempts to conceal themselves. They shut themselves in and refused to open the door. That is a case of legitimate suspicion entitling the Magistrate to act as he did under section 190. That he was perfectly fair is evidenced by his having enlarged the plaintiffs on bail immediately. When he made the arrest the occurrence report was also not disposed of. The defendants are immune from civil action.

Mr. C. Rama Rao for Mr. P. Narayanamoorthy, for the Respondents.—The Sub-Magistrate had the occurrence report before him on which he should have acted. There were no grounds for suspicion and the Magistrate should not have acted under section 190.

JUDGMENT.—The pleadings clearly state that the second defendant the Sub-Magistrate, was acting under sections 190 and 65 of the Criminal Procedure Code in respect of a complaint under section 448 of the Indian Penal Code, when he went to the temple and found the plaintiffs barricading themselves inside and refusing to open the door, and then arrested them, releasing them immediately after on their recognizance to appear to answer a charge under section 448 of the Indian Penal Code. His acts and those of the 1st defendant, the Inspector of Police, were perfectly legal. The Subordinate Judge has misread the evidence of the Sub-Magistrate, who does not say that he had disposed of the occurrence report which reached him on the previous day. As he has passed no final order on the report, it was open to him to take action upon it next day, and further under section 190 (1) (c) the facts which he saw at the temple were sufficient to justify him in taking action independently of the occurrence report. We set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and restore that of the District Munsif with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Lunacy Act (IV of 1912), Ch. V—Court, power of, to alienate portion of lunatic's estate.

Under Chapter V of the Lunacy Act, where a manager is appointed of a lunatic's estate it is he alone who can, with the permission of the Court, alienate any portion of it. The Court has no power to do so. [p. 610, col. 1.]

JOGENDRA NARAYAN RAY v. DURGA CHARAN GUHA.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 26th July 1918.

Bhagat Govind Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. D. Kureshi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Jagdish Rai was adjudged to be of unsound mind, and Bishambar Nath was appointed manager of his estate. On an application made by Musammat Parbati, the guardian of the person of the lunatic, under section 80 of Act IV of 1912, for the removal of the manager, and for the appointment of another person in his place for the purpose of selling the lunatic's house, the District Judge has passed an order for the house to be sold. Bishambar Nath appeals.

There is no need to go into the question whether it is desirable or not that the house should be sold, or whether, as the learned District Judge finds, Bishambar Nath has been mismanaging the property of the lunatic, as the appeal must succeed on the ground that the learned District Judge had no power to order the house to be sold. Under Chapter V of Act IV of 1912, where a manager of the lunatic's estate has been appointed, the Court has no power to alienate any portion of it.

It is only the manager who can do so, with the permission of the Court. If the appellant is mismanaging the estate and is not a fit person to remain in charge of it the Court may, under section 80 (1) of the Act, remove him and appoint some one else in his place. This is in fact what the respondent asked the Court to do, but instead of passing an order under section 80 the lower Court has ordered the sale of the property, which it was not competent to do. I cannot agree with the contention of Counsel for the respondent that the order should be regarded as one for the removal of the manager.

Although the objection that the order is illegal was not taken in the grounds of appeal, it is one which cannot be ignored.

Holding that the lower Court's order was ultra vires I accept the appeal and set aside the order. This will not debar the District Judge from taking action under section 80, if he finds that there is sufficient cause for doing so. The parties will bear their own costs.

Appeal accepted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIII, rr. 4, 5, 6, 7—Application for leave to sue in forma pauperis—Inquiry, scope of—Evidence, admissibility of, on merits—Examination of applicant—Jurisdiction—Irregularity—Revision.

Where, upon an application to sue in forma pauperis, the Court holds an inquiry under the provisions of Order XXXIII of the Civil Procedure Code, it is empowered to examine the applicant not only with reference to the question of his pauperism, but also with reference to the merits of his claim, and to consider the statements made in the plaint and by the applicant in his examination in determining whether his allegations do not show a cause of action as laid down in clause (d) of rule 5 of that Order. But the Court cannot examine other witnesses for deciding the question of limitation or any question other than the pauperism of the applicant. [p. 611, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, a Court decided the question of limitation, not upon the allegations made in the plaint, nor upon the statements made by the applicant in his examination, but upon conclusions based upon an examination of the witnesses who were summoned for the purpose of proving the pauperism of the applicant, the High Court set aside the order as being made without jurisdiction. [p. 613, col 2; p. 614, col. 1.]

Rule against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Barisal, dated the 2nd April 1918.

Babu Gunada Charan Sen (with him Babu Nilkanta Ghose), for the Petitioner.

Babu Abinash Chandra Guha (with him Babu Jitesh Chandra Guha), for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule calling upon the opposite party to show cause why an order of the Subordinate Judge of Barisal dismissing an application for leave to sue as a pauper should not be set aside.

The petitioner applied in the Court below for leave to sue in forma pauperis for recovery of certain debattar property. The learned Subordinate Judge found that he was a pauper, but dismissed the application on the ground that upon the evidence adduced by the plaintiff, the suit was barred by limitation. The Court below says that the evidence adduced by the petitioner shows that since 1286 B. S. neither the petitioner nor his father has ever been in possession of the property. No such statement was made by the plaintiff himself either in his plaint or in his examination before the Court, and the learned Subordinate Judge, therefore, has evidently come to that conclusion upon certain statements made by some witnesses (on behalf of the plaintiff-petitioner) who had been summoned for a different purpose, namely, for the purpose of proving that the plaintiff was a pauper.

The question is whether the Court below was right in taking evidence on the point in an enquiry into the pauperism of the petitioner.

Order XXXIII of the Civil Procedure Code lays down the procedure for hearing an application for leave to sue as a pauper. Rule 3 lays down what the contents of the application should be. Rule 4 provides that where the application is in proper form and duly presented, the Court may, if it thinks fit, examine the applicant or his agent, when the applicant is allowed to appear by agent, regarding the merits of the claim and the property of the applicant. Rule 5 lays down the grounds upon which the Court shall reject an application for permission to sue as a pauper, and one of the grounds, clause (d), is "where his allegations do not show a cause of action." Rule 6 says that when the Court sees no reason to reject the application on any of the grounds stated in rule 5, it shall fix a day (of which at least ten days' clear notice shall be given to the opposite party and the Government Pleader) for receiving such evidence as the applicant may adduce in proof of his pauperism, and for hearing any evidence which may be adduced in disproof thereof. Rule 7 says that on the day so fixed or as soon thereafter as may be convenient, the Court shall examine the witnesses (if any) produced by either party and may examine the applicant or his agent and shall make a memorandum of the substance of their evidence. The provisions of rules 5 and 7 of Order XXXIII correspond to sections 405, 407 and 419 of Act XIV of 1882.

There has been some difference of judicial opinion with regard to the exact scope of an inquiry under rules 5 to 7, or the corresponding sections of the earlier Codes. In some cases it has been laid down that the Court cannot go into any question as to the merits of the case; while a contrary view appears to have been taken in some other cases. In some other cases again it has been held that a Court is not confined merely to the statements contained in the plaint, but also can look into the statements made by the applicant who may be examined by the Court, and the Court, therefore, can look into the merits of the case in so far as they appear upon the plaint and the statements of the petitioner.

Rule 4 expressly gives power to the Court to examine the applicant regarding the merits of the claim and the property of the applicant, so that there is no doubt that the applicant himself can be examined not only with reference to the question of his pauperism but also with reference to the merits of the claim. If the application is to be decided merely upon a consideration of the statements made in the plaint, it would be wholly unnecessary to examine the applicant on the merits of his claim.

We think, therefore, that the Court may not only consider the statements made in the plaint but also the statements made in his examination by the applicant before the Court, in determining whether his allegations do not show a cause of action as laid down in clause (d) of rule 5 of Order XXXIII. But we think the Court cannot examine other witnesses for deciding the question of limitation or any question other than the pauperism of the applicant.

Turning to the decided cases on the point, we find that in the case of Gunga Dass Adhikaree, In the matter of (1), where the Court below had disallowed the application on the ground that a Will under which the applicant claimed had already been construed by the High Court in a previous suit against him, and that he had, therefore, no rights to sue, this Court (L. S. Jackson and D. N. Mitter, JJ.) held that it was competent to the Court to take into consideration the construction of the Will on which the applicant relied. The learned Judges observed that where the grounds stated in section 304 appear, the Court is bound to refuse an application to sue as a pauper, but if the Court does not see reason to refuse the application, the Court is at liberty to fix a day for hearing evidence to be adduced on either side upon the question of pauperism, and upon such further hearing if the opposite party should bring to the notice of the Court any grounds upon which the Court would be bound to refuse the application, it would be at the discretion of the Court upon being so informed to refuse leave

On the other hand, in the case of Parkash Ojha v. Dusruth Ojha (2) it was held that where a Subordinate Judge had decided the question of limitation not upon the examination of the petitioner but upon that of other witnesses summoned for a different purpose, he exceeded his jurisdiction.

In an earlier case on the Original Side of this Court, the defendant proposed to show by examination of the plaintiff that on the facts stated in the petition, there was no cause of action. Macpherson, J., allowed the plaintiff to be examined with a view to show that on her own evidence, she had no cause of action. She was accordingly examined but her evidence did not show that she had no cause of action. It was then proposed to show it by calling other witnesses but Macpherson, J., refused to allow this. The case of Gunga Dass Adhikaree, In the matter of (1) appears to have been cited in argument on behalf of the defendant [see Turramoney Dabee v. Hurro Mohun Chatterjee (3)].

The decisions in the cases Debo Das v. Mohunt Ram Charn Dass Chella (4) and Gopal Chandra Neogy v. Bigoo Mistry (5) affirm the proposition that it is not open to a Court, at a preliminary stage, to enter into the merits of the suit.

If the learned Judges meant to lay down that the Court cannot go into the merits of the claim so far as they appear from the allegations in the plaint, and the statements made by the applicant in his examination, it would be opposed to the express provisions of sections 406 and 409 of the Code. But we do not think that that was meant, because the learned Judges observed: "if the Subordinate Judge had confined his enquiry to the allegation as made in the plaint, and if he said that these allegations do not show a right to sue, it is extremely doubtful whether this Court could interfere with his order." It does not appear that the applicant was examined in those cases. In the first, the Court below had decided the question of the rights of the parties, and not whether the allegations showed a right to sue, and in the second, the Court below dismissed the application upon a construction of a Will. The learned Judges (Ghose and Pratt, JJ.) held that the Court could not construe the Will at that stage.

In the Madras High Court in one of the earlier cases, Koka Ranganayaka Ammal v. Koka Venkatachellapati Nayudu (6), Turner, C J., and Kindersley, J., held that the Code does not authorise the rejection of an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis for want of merits, when the applicant is found to be a pauper and his allegations disclose a right to sue, and that when an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis is made, the Court should not go into evidence as to the merits of the claim. A different view, however, was taken in a later case [Vijendra Tirtha Swami v. Sudhindra Tirtha Swami (7)], where Subramania Ayyar, J., held that the Court below had not acted illegally in taking evidence and going into the questions whether the plaintiff's claim was res judicata and whether it was barred by limitation.

In Amirtham v. Alwar Manikkam (8) Sir Arnold White, C. J., held that under section 407 the applicant must make out that he has a subsisting cause of action capable of enforcement. In that case the Court below dismissed the application on the ground that the applicant on the face of the plaint did not appear to have a right to sue, though this was done at the hearing under section 409. In another case in the same volume [Sankararama Ayyar v. Subramania Ayyar (9)] White, C. J., held that the Court is not bound to give leave if the allegations made by the petitioner are such that, if true, they would show a good cause of action. In a still later case, a Full Bench of that Court held that "the investigation contemplated under section 409 of the Civil Procedure Code, where a day is fixed for hearing an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis, must be confined to the question of the applicant's pauperism. No evidence as to the merits of the case can be gone into in such an investigation" [see Rathnam Pillai v. Pappa Pillai (10)]. This was followed in the case of Sankararamier v. Subramania Aiyar (11), in which the learned Judges (Subramania Ayyar and Boddam, JJ.) held that the evidence referred to in section 409 of the Civil Procedure Code is confined to evidence in proof or disproof of the pauperism of the applicant, and does not include evidence as to the merits of the case, and the decision of White, C. J., in Sankararama Ayyar v. Subramania Ayyar (9) was overruled. In the latest Madras case, Govindasami Pillay v. Municipal Council, Kumbakonam (12), it has been held that Order XXXIII, rule 5 (d), applies only to cases where the allegations of the petitioner do not show a cause of action, and that this should appear clearly upon the face of the petition. In that case, the applicant does not appear to have been examined.

(8) 27 M. 37.
(9) 27 M. 120.

Some stress was laid on behalf of the opposite party on a passage in the judgment of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Chattarpal Singh v. Raja Ram (13), in which the learned Judges held that the terms of section 407 (c) must not be read as limiting the Court's discretion to merely ascertaining whether the right to sue arose within its jurisdiction, but have a more extended meaning, namely, "that an applicant must make out that he had a good subsisting cause of action capable of enforcement in Court and calling for an answer and not barred by the law of limitation or any other law." But we do not think that it was intended to lay down that evidence is to be gone into on such points, as the learned Judges in an earlier passage said that it was competent for the Subordinate Judge to reject the applicant's petition on the ground that, as from his petition and his examination his cause of action was shown to have arisen beyond the period of limitation allowed by law for instituting the suit, his allegations did not show a right to sue. The passage quoted from the judgment of the Full Bench was followed with approval in a latter Allahabad case, Kamrakh Nath v. Sundar Nath (14), where it was held that the Court was not confined merely to the allegations contained in the plaint but that it was open to the Court to examine the applicant and take the statements in his examination in determining whether the applicant had a cause of action. The same passage was also quoted with approval by Jardine, J., in Dulari v. Vallabdas Pragji (15). In that case it appears the action was not maintainable upon the allegations made in the plaint itself.

The latest case in our Court is that of Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Harish Chandra Acharjee (16), in which Mookerjee and Sharfuddin, JJ., after referring to the cases on the point, held that before an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis is granted, it is the duty of the Court to satisfy itself that the allegations of the petitioner do show a cause of action, and that the allegations are not only those made in the plaint but also those made in the examination of the applicant before the Court. We have already expressed our opinion that the Court may not only look into the allegations made in the plaint but also into the statements made in the examination of the applicant. The evidence, however, to be taken under rule 7 is confined to the evidence which may be adduced by the applicant in proof of his pauperism, and any evidence which may be adduced in disproof thereof as laid down in rule 6.

We are accordingly of opinion that the Court, in an enquiry under Order XXXIII of the Code, cannot take evidence (accept the evidence of the applicant himself) on the merits of the claim. The learned Subordinate Judge having decided the question of limitation, not upon the allegations made in the plaint nor upon the statements made by the applicant in his examination, but upon conclusions based upon an examination of the witnesses who were summoned for the purpose of proving the pauperism of the applicant, his order must be set aside.

The result is that the Rule is made absolute. The case will go back to the Court below in order that the petitioner may be allowed to proceed with the suit as a pauper, as the lower Court has already come to the finding that he is a pauper.

The petitioner will be entitled to costs.

ALUR LAKSHMI NARASIMHA SASTRULU AND OTHERS—DEFENDANT No. 1's LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES—RESPONDENTS Nos. 8 TO 10—APPELLANTS

versus

VENKATA NARASAMMA—PLAINTIFF—PETITIONER—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 4—Partition, suit for—Preliminary decree—Death of defendant—Application by plaintiff to bring legal representatives on record and for division and allotment of property, nature of—Application granted—Objection on score of limitation, whether can be taken in second appeal—Hindu Law—Partition, preliminary decree for, against father—Death of father—Sons, position of.

After a preliminary decree for partition was passed by the District Court at Cuddapah the 1st defendant died. The plaintiff filed an application for bringing his representatives on to the record, for the appointment of a Commissioner to divide the properties into six shares, and for delivery of one such share to herself. The District Judge brought defendants Nos. 8 to 10 on to the record as 1st defendant's legal representatives, but treated the other prayers as prayers in execution and transferred the execution to the District Court at North Arcot:

Held, (1) that as the Cuddapah District Court had jurisdiction under the law to continue the further trial of the suit, which must be considered as pending in that Court till a final decree was passed, the order of transfer to the District Court of North Arcot was illegal; [p. 615, col. 1.]

(2) that the plaintiff's application was in substance not an application for execution, but an application in the suit to pass a final decree. [p. 615, col. 1.]

Where an application to bring the legal representatives of a deceased party on to the record is granted by a trial Court without any objection being taken thereto on the ground of limitation, an objection that the suit had abated by the application not having been made within the prescribed period, cannot be entertained in second appeal. [p. 615, col. 2.]

Where a preliminary decree is passed against a Hindu father for partition, it is presumably passed against him as representing his undivided family and binds his sons, and on his death the plaintiff is entitled to add his sons as his legal representatives or even as parties whose names should be deemed to be already on the record as represented by their father till his death and which names are merely sought to be inscribed on the record openly after his death. [p. 615, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the District Court, Cuddapah, in Execution Petition No. 35 of 1916, in Original Suit No. 3 of 1903.

Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. Subramanya Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants Nos. 8 to 10 (the sons of the deceased 1st defendant) are the appellants before us. A preliminary decree for partition of the B Schedule properties was passed by the District Court, Cuddapah, in the plaintiff's favour against the 1st defendant in 1904. The 1st defendant died in January or February 1914. The plaintiff filed the present petition on 8th December 1916 in the form of an execution petition and she filed it in the District Court of Cuddapah praying for the defendants Nos 8 to 10 being brought on the record as the 1st defendant's legal representatives, for the appointment of a Commissioner to divide the B Schedule properties into six shares and for delivery of one such share to her.

The District Court has brought the defendants Nos. 8 to 10 on the record as the 1st defendant's legal representatives (evidently because no objection was taken by them to that course). But it treated the other prayers as prayers in execution and transferred the execution to the North Arcot District Court.

The appellants contend before us that,

Ground No. 2.—The appellants not having been made parties to the suit cannot be proceeded against in execution.

Ground No. 3.—The Court below erred in treating the application as a proceeding in execution.

Ground No. 4.—The legal representatives of the deceased not having been brought on the record within the time limited by law the District Judge ought to have held the suit as against him had abated.

Ground No. 6.—The lower Court has failed to note that the High Court expressly treated the decree as a preliminary decree to be followed up by a final decree, which alone is capable of execution.

Ground No. 8.—The District Judge ought to have held that the application was barred by limitation.

Ground No. 10.—The Court below had no jurisdiction to transfer the decree for execution to the District Court of North Arcot.

So far as grounds Nos. 3, 6 and 10 are concerned, the appellants' contentions are sustainable and the order of the District Judge of Cuddapah transferring execution to the District Court of North Arcot must be and is set aside. It must be admitted that the judgment of the High Court in A.A. O. No. 252 of 1912 is not quite clear on the question whether the District Court of North Arcot had exclusive jurisdiction over the further proceedings in the suit but that judgment, in our opinion, did not intend to deprive the Cuddapah District Court of its undoubted jurisdiction under the law to continue the further trial of the suit, which must be considered as pending in that Court till a final decree is passed in the suit.

Ground No. 8 is unsustainable, as the petition is in substance not an execution petition but an application in a suit to pass a final decree and as such is not affected by the bar of limitation. Too great a stress should not be laid on the form of the petition.

As regards ground No. 4, the contention that the suit had abated by an application not having been made within six months of the 1st defendant's death was not raised or argued in the lower Court and the defendants Nos. 8 to 10, the appellants, were brought on the record of the suit without such an objection having been raised on their part. It is too late to raise the objection now and even if it is not too late, the plaintiff having filed a similar application (to bring on the record the legal representatives of the 1st defendant) in March 1915 in the North Arcot District Court and it appearing to us that the judgment of this Court in the previous proceeding between these same parties might have misled the plaintiff into the impression that applications as in execution proceedings could be taken by her once in three years and that they may be made to the District Court of North Arcot, we consider that the delay in filing the present application in the District Court of Cuddapah to bring in the defendants Nos. 8 to 10 as the legal representatives of the 1st defendant might be excused and we excuse it accordingly.

As regards ground No. 2 when a preliminary decree is passed against a Hindu father for partition, it is presumably passed against him as representing his undivided family and binds his sons, and on his death the plaintiff is entitled to add his sons as his legal representatives or even as parties whose names should be deemed to be already on the records as represented by their father till his death and which names are merely sought to be inscribed on the records openly after his death. [See also Hira Lal Sahu v. Parmeshar Rai (1).]

In the result we modify the lower Court's order by setting aside the direction transferring the decree for execution to the North Arcot District Court and direct the Cuddapah District Court to treat the application of the plaintiff, not as one in execution but as one in the pending suit itself, to pass a final decree after appointment of a Commissioner, &c., and to pass fresh orders accordingly. We need not say that the commissioner appointed under Order XXVI, rule 14, may be a resident within the jurisdiction of the North Arcot District Court if the District Court of Cuddapah thinks it desirable or convenient to appoint such a person.

There will be no order as to the costs of this appeal.

When a testator says in his Will that the proceeds of a sale are to be applied in a particular manner, he practically points out very distinctly that the property is not to be mortgaged, more especially that it is not to be mortgaged at a high rate of interest, which must almost necessarily be injurious to the estate. Where a guardian of a minor appointed by Court executes a mortgage on behalf of the minor without obtaining any sanction from the Court which appointed him guardian, the mortgage is not binding on the minor, and the latter can be equitably held liable only if it is shown that the debt or any portion of it was actually applied for the benefit of the minor. [p. 618, col. 2; p. 619, col. 1.]

A testator by his Will gave away all his properties to his sons, defendants Nos. 1 to 6, and appointed his two elder sons defendants Nos. 1 and 2, executors of his Will and guardians of their minor brothers, defendants Nos. 3 to 6. The Will, which did not expressly impose any restriction on the executors' power to mortgage, stated that the testator had debts the interest payable whereon exceeded the income of his property and that, therefore, the executors should relieve him from the "sin of his debts" by granting permanent settlement of or by sale of certain properties specified in the Will. After the death of the testator, the executors, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, took a certificate of guardianship in respect of the properties of their minor brothers and about 10 years after the death of the testator executed a mortgage of the properties for selves and as executors to the estate of their father and also as certificated guardians of their minor brothers:

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit upon a mortgage-bond executed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for selves, as executors to the estate of their father and as certificated guardians of their four minor brothers, the defendants Nos. 3 to 6. The suit has been decreed by both the Courts below against the defendants, and defendants Nos. 3 to 6 have appealed to this Court.

It is contended on behalf of defendants Nos. 3 to 6 that they were minors at the date of the mortgage bond, that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who had obtained a certificate of guardianship did not obtain sanction of the Court for the mortgage and that, therefore, the mortgage was not binding upon them.

Before dealing with this contention, we have to consider the powers of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 under the Will, as they executed the mortgage bond not only as certificated guardians of the minors, but also as executors. By the Will it was provided that all the brothers would be "entitled to what remained after performing the obsequial ceremony." The two elder brothers (the defendants Nos. 1 and 2) were appointed guardians of the minors, and they were directed to manage the estate during the minority of the younger brothers and were given the power of transferring the two Mahals specified in the Will for paying off debts. The mortgage was executed 10 years after the death of the testator, and before the date of the mortgage the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had taken a certificate of guardianship in respect of the property of the minors, thus treating the estate to have been absolutely vested in the brothers. We think that in these circumstances the real position of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 at the date of the mortgage was that of guardians and managers and not that of executors. But even assuming that the position was that of executors, we are of opinion that the Will imposed a restriction on their power to mortgage. Under section 90, sub section (2) of the Probate and Administration Act, the power of an executor to dispose of immoveable property vested in him is "subject to any restriction which may be imposed in this behalf by the Will appointing him, unless Probate has been granted to him and the Court which granted the Probate permits him by an order in writing, notwithstanding the restriction, to dispose of any immoveable property specified in the order in a manner permitted by the order." In the second paragraph of the Will the executors were authorised to grant a permanent settlement of or sell two Mahals specified in the Will for the purpose of liquidating the testator's debts. There is no express restriction on their power to mortgage, but the restriction need not be express and the question is whether having regard to the terms of the Will there was any implied restriction on the power of the executors to mortgage the property. The testator in the second paragraph of the Will states that he had debts amounting to abont Rs. 9,000, that the annual interest payable thereon exceeded the income of his property, that there was little means of paying off the debts and that, therefore, the executors should "save him from the sin of debt" by granting some permanent settlement of or by sale of the two Mahals specified in the Will.

It is clear, therefore, that the intention of the testator was that his debts should be paid off by sale of the two Mahals, so that the remaining portion of the estate might be saved and that he might be saved from the "sin of debt" It cannot be contended in the circumstances that the intention of the testator was that the debt, which was such a large sum (Rs. 9,000), was to be paid off by another mortgage-debt the existence of which would be equally injurious. It may be mentioned that the mortgage bond in suit provided for interest at the rate of Rs. 14-4 0 per annum with half yearly rests.

Sir Barnes Peacock in the case of Sreemutty Deeno Moyee v. Tarrachurn Koondoo Chowdry (1), after referring to the case of Haldenby v. Spofforth (2) in which it was laid down "that a trust to 'make sale or dispose of' the testator's real estates, does not authorise a mortgage, there appearing an intention on the part of the testator that the whole estate should be converted," observed: "In the present case, we think that the clear intention of the testator was that if it should become necessary to raise money for the purposes of his estate, the house in Calcutta should be sold, and the surplus proceeds, if any, would be invested in Government securities. When a testator says, that the proceeds of a sale are to be applied in a particular manner, he practically points out very distinctly that the house is not to be mortgaged, more especially that it is not to be mortgaged at a high interest which must almost necessarily be injurious to the estate." See also the case of Kanti Chondra Chattopadhya v. Kristo Churn Acharjee (3). No permission of the Court was obtained for mortgaging the property in the present case and we are accordingly of opinion that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had no power to mortgage as executors under the Will.

(3) 3 C. W. N. 515.

Our attention has been drawn to the case of Purna Chundra Bakshi v. Nobin Chandra Gangopadhya (4). In that case the learned Judges held that where a Will gave the executor power to sell the testator's property to pay off the debts incurred by him or if the property was a losing concern, there being no provision in the Will against the executor mortgaging the property, he had power to mortgage such property and the case of Kanti Chandra Chattopadhya v. Kristo Churn Acharjee (3) was distinguished The decision of the learned Judges, however, turned upon the terms of the Will, and they held that it was clear that the testator never prohibited or intended to prohibit the executor mortgaging the property in case of necessity. In the present case the intention, as stated above, was that the property should be sold and not mortgaged and we think, therefore, that there was an implied restriction on the power of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

The learned District Judge also was of opinion that as the bond was executed some ten years after the death of the testator, it did "not appear that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 took the loan as executors of the Will, the more so, as in the Will it was laid down that the testators' debts were to be discharged by the sale of two specific properties."

The next question is whether the mortgage by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 as certificated guardians of the minors is binding upon the latter. There is no doubt that under section 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act, VIII of 1890, the guardian of the property has no power, without the previous permission of the Court, to mortgage the property of his ward, and under section 30 the disposal of immoveable property by a guardian in contravention of section 29 is voidable at the instance of the minor. It is contended, however, that the defendant No. 1 was karta of the family and that, therefore, he had power to mortgage even though he had not obtained sanction of the Court, which would be required in the case of a certificated guardian in effecting a mortgage. But if the karta of a joint Hindu family chooses to apply under Act VIII of 1890 for being appointed a guardian of a minor and has been appointed as such guardian, we think that he comes under the control of the Court and cannot exercise the powers of a karta. As pointed out by Macpherson, J., in the case of Surut Chunder Chatterjee v. Ashootosh Chatterjee (5): "Having been appointed under Act XL of 1858 the guardian could no longer act for the minor otherwise than under his appointment by the Court. If one who is the natural guardian is appointed by the Court and acts under the appointment, he can have no power other than that given him by Act XL of 1858." The same view was taken in the cases of Bhupendro Narayan Dutt v. Nemye Chand Mondul (6) and Ranjit Sing v. Amullya Prosad Ghose (7). Reliance is, however, placed on behalf of the respondents upon the case of Gharib-ullah v. Khalak Singh (8). But that case is clearly distinguishable. There the minor belonged to a Mitakshara family and although a guardian was appointed of his property, it was pointed out by the Judicial Committee that the guardian of the property of an infant cannot properly be appointed in respect of the infant's interest in the property of an undivided Mitakshara family, on the plain ground that the interest of a member of such a family is not individual property at all, and that, therefore, a guardian, if appointed, would have nothing to do with the family property. In the present case the family is governed by the Dayabhaga, and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had been properly appointed guardians. That being so, the mortgage executed by the guardians without the sanction of the Court is certainly voidable at the instance of the minor.

Nor does the plaintiff's case stand on a better footing if the position of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 be taken to have been that of testamentary guardians (assuming that they could exercise their power as such after having been appointed guardians under the Guardians and Wards Act), as we have found that an implied restriction was imposed on their power by the Will which appointed them guardians.

The learned District Judge, however, was of opinion that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 as adult male members of a joint Hindu family were entitled to borrow what they considered necessary for joint family expenses. One of them was the karta of the family, but the question of family necessity or benefit of the minors was not raised in the plaint, and the case was brought on the footing that the minors were liable because the mortgage was executed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 as executors and certificated guardians of the minors. The learned District Judge says that the defendants had an opportunity of meeting this aspect of the case, because it was raised in the examination of the witnesses. But as there was no allegation in the plaint on the point, the defendants might have considered it unnecessary to adduce evidence on the point. Apart from that there is no finding that the minors have been actually benefited by the money borrowed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and it is only where it is shown that the debt or any portion of it was actually applied for the benefit of the minors that they can be equitably held liable. The case will, therefore, go back to the lower Appellate Court in order that the question whether the mortgage debt or any portion of it was applied for the benefit of the minors may be decided. If it is found that the minors had been benefited, then they will be made liable to that extent.

The last contention is as regards interest. The rate of interest provided in the bond cannot stand, as the contract is not binding on the minors. In the event of it being shown that the minors were benefited by the debt they should be made liable for interest at a reasonable rate, and in order to obviate any further discussion on the question as to the rate of interest, the appellant has suggested 6 per cent. per annum and the respondent not objecting to it, we think that interest at that rate should be allowed on such amount (if any) for which defendants Nos. 3 to 6 may be held liable. As against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 the mortgage decree will stand.

Costs will abide the result except as regards the defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

Oaths Act (X of 1873), ss. 9, 10, 12—Challenge to take oath—Oath not taken on appointed day on account of challenger's failure to pay charges—Oath taken on subsequent day—Challenger, whether bound by oath—Right to trial.

The plaintiff challenged the defendant to take a particular oath on a specified day and the challenge was accepted including a term that, if plaintiff failed to pay the cost of taking the oath and the defendant did not take it, that should be treated as equivalent to his taking it. On the day fixed the plaintiff made default and defendant did not take the oath, but took it on a later day. The plaintiff objected and applied for a trial on the merits, but the trial Court made a decree in defendant's favour:

Held, that the plaintiff was not bound by the oath and that his default in his part of the agreement was not a foundation on which the law could allow any decree to be founded, and that it was for the defendant to show that his deviation from his agreement was immaterial and that the date specified in it was not of its essence. [p. 620, col. 2; p. 621, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of North Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 281 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif of Badagara, in Original Suit No. 790 of 1915.

FACTS.—Suit on a pro-note against the defendant, one of the executants, and the assets of the other executant in his hands as he was dead. Plaintiff consented to be bound by the oath of the defendant so far as his personal liability was concerned and the oath was ordered to be administered on the 4th February 1916. Plaintiff did not pay the charges therefor on some frivolous plea and the oath was not administered and plaintiff applied that the suit be regularly tried. But the Munsif ordered the oath to be administered on the 11th February at defendant's cost and the oath was taken on that day. The question was how far plaintiff was bound by that oath.

Mr. B. Pocker, for the Appellant.—Once an agreement to be bound by oath is come to, it is not open to either party to resile from it.

[OLDFIELD, J.—It is clear that plaintiff did not agree to the taking of the oath on the 11th February. Why should we not say that he is not bound by it?]

See Ayyakannu Nadar v. Muthiah Nadar (1). Time is not of the essence of the agreement; what sections 9 and 10 of the Oaths Act say is only that the form of the oath should be clearly set out.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Section 12 is against that contention.]

Section 12 does not apply but section 11 applies. See also Vithu Govinda v. Ramji Yelluji (2). If the oath is not taken on the appointed date owing to plaintiff's default, it must be taken as if the oath was taken. That is the case in Ayyakannu Nadar v. Muthiah Nadar (1).

Mr C. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondent. —This point was obviously given up in the Courts below. If the plaintiff's default was the cause of the non taking of the oath on the 4th February it may be that section 12 raises a presumption against me.

Mr. Pocker, in reply.—The defendant can enforce the agreement. See Thukku Goundan v. Kuppauda Goundan (3). Even if the oath is taken contravening the provisions of the Oaths Act, the oath is valid and binding except as regards third parties, Ram Narain Singh v. Bibu Singh (4). Section 12 applies only as regards the form Here the oath has been taken and in any case he is bound by it. See Seshagiri v. Tenkamakki Sankayya Setti (5)

If the oath does not take place on the appointed day owing to plaintiff's default, the defendant is entitled to get an opportunity of taking it on some other date: Velayuda Goundan v. Narayanasami Goundan (6).

[Moyan v. Pathukutti (7) was referred to by the Court as against the contentions.]

Thoyi Ammal v. Subbaroya Mudali (8) considers whether time was of the essence of the contract.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent in this case challenged the defendant-appellant under section 9, Oaths Act, to take a particular oath on a specified day and the challenge was accepted, including a term that, if owing to plaintiff's failure to pay the cost of taking the oath, defendant did not take it, that should be treated as equivalent to his taking it. On the day fixed, as plaintiff did not pay, defendant did not take the oath. He, however, in spite of plaintiff's opposition and application for a trial on the merits took it on a later day; and the District Munsif passed a decree in his favour. The lower Appellate Court in the order appealed against held that plaintiff's consent was only to be bound by the oath as originally agreed on, that he withdrew his consent on that agreement proving abortive and that he was entitled to a remand for a trial on the merits. It has been argued that this withdrawal was not open to plaintiff and did not, in fact, take place. But we deal with this part of the dispute on the shorter ground that the plaintiff's default in his part of the agreement was not a foundation on which the law could allow any decree to be founded. Section 11, Oaths Act, says that the evidence given in pursuance of the challenge shall be conclusive proof of the matter stated. Section 12 says that a refusal to make the oath shall be recorded; and it has been held, for instance, in Moyan v. Pathukutti (7) that such refusal is a relevant fact in a trial on the merits. But there is no provision, under which any legal effect follows on any other incident than the making of the oath or on any act or omission by the party, who gives the challenge. In these circumstances the agreement before us, by which a legal result was to follow on the default of the challenger, plaintiff, was to that extent an attempt to introduce a method of decision which the law does not authorise and which can have no legal consequences. That part of the agreement, therefore, must be treated as inoperative and all argument founded on it must be rejected.

Defendant has then asked us to deal with the remainder of the agreement, which provides for the taking of the oath by him on a specified day and to hold that the oath he took on a later day is equally conclusive. Assuming that this part of the agreement is separable, we cannot construe it in the manner suggested. It is for defendant to show that his deviation from the terms of the agreement is immaterial and that the date specified in it is not of its essence. We see no reason for accepting and much for rejecting this view. It, moreover, is unsupported, so far as we have been shown, by authority. In the circumstances this contention also fails.

We must, therefore, confirm the lower Appellate Court's decision, with, however, the observation that at the renewed hearing it will be open to the District Munsif to consider the evidence as to plaintiff's conduct and his responsibility for defendant's failure to take the oath on the date originally arranged and to give it what weight it may deserve. The appeal against order is dismissed. In the circumstances there will be no order as to costs.

Pre-emption—Denial of vendor's title in previous mutation proceedings, whether extinguishes right.

The fact that the plaintiff in a pre-emption suit had, in mutation proceedings previous to the institution of the pre-emption suit, denied the title of the vendor to a part of the property does not deprive him of his right of pre-emption. [p. 622, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 22nd November 1917.

Mr. Bisheswar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal in a pre-emption suit which has been dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff had previously, in mutation proceedings, denied the title of the vendor to a part of the property sold. This was held by the learned Subordinate Judge to deprive him of his right of pre-emption. There is nothing in the language of the Oudh Laws Act to support this contention and there is direct authority in Agra against it. In Bhagwoti Saran v. Parmeshar Das (1) it was held that there is nothing to prevent a plaintiff even in the same suit from setting up a claim for possession of the property as owner, and in the alternative claiming pre-emption. Here the denial was not made in the same suit, but in mutation proceedings a considerable period previously. The appellant's objection in mutation proceedings was decided against him on 12th September 1916. He acquiesced in this decision and filed the suit, out of which the present appeal arises, on 8th May 1917. There is nothing in the plaint in the present suit which questions the vendor's right to the property. The learned Subordinate Judge relied mainly on three decisions, the first two of which are clearly inapplicable. The first is a decision of the Privy Council in Abdul Wahid v. Shalukha Bibi (2). In this case the defendants in the same suit denied the plaintiff's title to the property and in the alternative pleaded that they had a right of pre-emption. It may be mentioned that the claimant had sold part of the property to her co-plaintiffs in order to obtain funds to maintain the suit and this sale was the basis of the claim to pre-emption put forward. Their Lordships say:—

"If the defendant succeeded and the suit was dismissed there would have been no property to be sold. In truth the transaction was a sale of a share in a law suit. The position taken up by the defendant was altogether inconsistent with claiming a right of pre-emption."

In Durga Pershad v. Mendi Lal (3), which is the second case relied on, the denial of title was in the same suit in which pre emption was claimed and the suit was dismissed on the ground that the two reliefs prayed for were inconsistent with each other. The case of Fakhr ud-din Ahmad v. Musammat Rasulan (4) is no doubt in favour of the respondents. In that case Mr. Spankie held that a suit for pre-emption was barred by reason of a denial of the vendor's title made by the plaintiff in previous litigation. He conceded that the Privy Council case in Abdul Wahid v. Shalukha Bibi (2) was distinguishable on this ground, and remarked: "This (i. e., denying the title) is what the plaintiff-respondent did at the time when Rajab Ali proposed to sell the share; she denied his title and alleged that he was not a co-sharer. It is true that she now admits that he is; but the fact is immaterial."

Three things may be remarked regarding this case; first, that it was a decision of a single Judge, secondly, that no reason is given for the decision, and thirdly, that the remarks quoted above were really obiter, as the learned Judge had already dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by limitation. In our opinion the fact that the denial of title occurred a considerable time previously is not immaterial but on the contrary makes a considerable difference. If the principle relied on by the respondents were accepted, to what extent is it to be carried? Is a denial of title once made but immediately withdrawn to deprive the plaintiff of his right of pre-emption altogether? It is unnecessary for us to decide whether, under the present Code of Civil Procedure, a claim for possession and in the alternative a claim for pre-emption is maintainable, as has been held by the Allahabad High Court, but we are clearly of opinion that a denial of title in previous mutation proceedings does not have that effect. It has been contended by the respondents that the case of Fakhr-ud-din Ahmad v. Musammat Rasulan (4) has been followed in two subsequent cases: Ram Dayal v. Bhajju Lal (5) and Khurshaid Ali v. Rashid Husain (6), but a glance at those cases is sufficient to show that neither of them is in point. In the former case (vide the last paragraph of the judgment) it was held that the plaintiffs were on the horns of a dilemma. If they admitted that the sale was a valid one, any interest they previously had in the property was lost to them on the sale taking place and, therefore, they had no subsisting title at the date of the institution of the suit, while if they denied that their father had power to transfer their interest, they were precluded from claiming pre-emption. In the second case the ground of decision was that the vendor was not in possession of the property and that what was really sold was a share in a law suit.

In our opinion the view taken by the lower Court is incorrect. We accordingly allow the appeal and as the suit has been decided on a preliminary point we remit the case for decision on the merits under Order XLI, rule 23. Costs will abide the result.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Tellicherry, in Appeal Suit No. 621 of 1916 (Appeal Suit No. 645 of 1915 on the file of the District Court of North Malabar), preferred against the decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif of Tellicherry, in Original Suit No. 299 of 1914.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. Kunhi Raman, for the Respondents.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 1st August 1918, the Court made the following ORDER.—The appellants have no case against the 5th respondent on the findings of fact. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 contended that the plaintiffs must redeem the mortgages evidenced by Exhibits I and II simultaneously with the mortgage under Exhibit B. Before we decide this point of law, we think it desirable to call for a finding on the following issue:—

"Whether the mortgages under Exhibits I and II were real and valid and if so, whether they were time-barred or not on the date of plaintiffs' suit."

As this will depend on whether there is any evidence that these rights were really created and were kept alive by acknowledgment or otherwise, either party will be allowed to adduce fresh evidence on both points. The finding should be submitted within two months from the date of the receipt of this order and ten days will be allowed for filing objections after the notice of the receipt of the same has been posted up in this Court.

In compliance with the above order the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Tellicherry submitted the following

FINDING.—I have been ordered to submit a finding on the following issue, namely:—

Whether the mortgages under Exhibits I and II were real and valid and if so, whether they were time-barred or not on the date of plaintiffs' suit?

2. In Original Suit No. 456 of 1889, these two debts were held to be not binding on the Tarwad. It was so held, as the mortgaged property was found to be property belonging to the Tarwad and Kunhoonhan Amma, who held the property as a provision for her maintenance, had no right to create charges on the property (vide Exhibit III). But in that case Raman Nambiar, one of the executants of these two documents, when examined in that case admitted receipt of consideration (vide Exhibit IV). So it should be held that the bonds are genuine and that they are supported by consideration. In 1900, this property was found to be the separate property of Kunhoonhan Amma and the decree in Original Suit No. 456 of 1889 to be one obtained by collusion (vide Exhibit D). In 1910 on a Melcharth obtained from the Tarwad a suit was instituted to recover this property. There also it was found that the property did not belong to the Tarwad (vide Exhibit E). The property should, therefore, be held to be property which belonged exclusively to Kunhoonhan Amma. Kunhoonhan Amma is one of the executants of Exhibits I and II. Under the circumstances, I should hold that the mortgages under Exhibits I and II were real and valid.

3. The next question is whether these debts were time-barred or not on the date of this suit. Kunhoonhan Amma leased this property in 1052 (1877) to Raman on a rent of Rs. 6 a year (vide paragraph 6 of the plaint). In 1053 (1877) Raman was empowered to appropriate this rent of Rs. 6 towards the interest due to him for the sum of Rs. 50 lent by him under Exhibit B. Exhibit I is mortgage-deed for Rs. 70 executed on 22nd Kumbhom 1056 (22nd sic February 1881). The interest fixed in it is 18 per cent. per annum. The time fixed for payment is one year. Exhibit II is for Rs. 35. It is a document executed on 17th Vrichigam 1063 (1st December 1887). The interest fixed in it is 18 per cent. per annum. The time fixed for payment in it expired on 15th August 1888. On default of payment on the due date there is provision in it, that the amount due then with further interest at 24 per cent. per annum, should be a charge on the plaint property. There is Raman's admission of these debts on 3rd October 1890 (vide Exhibit IV). After the case was sent back for finding, parties have not produced any new document. The only witness examined is 1st defendant. He states that the agreement was to return the sum due under Exhibit II along with the sum due under Exhibit B. This agreement does not find a place in Exhibit II. On the evidence on record I should find that the claims under Exhibits I and II were time-barred on the date of the institution of this suit.

4. My finding, therefore, is that the mortgages under Exhibits I and II were real and valid and that they were time-barred on the date of the plaintiffs' suit.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing, after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court on the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—We accept the findings. Following Ramakrishna Kukkilaya v. Nekkar Kuppanna (1), we consider that plaintiffs were under no obligation to redeem the time barred hypothecation deeds. The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Time for redemption is extended for three months.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Chetty sued on a mortgage made in his favour on the 12th May 1913 by the defendants Nos. 1 to 6, who were the heirs of their father, deceased. The 7th defendant was Mahair Ali, who obtained a conveyance of the property from the defendants Nos. 1 to 6 on the 12th August 1914. The 8th defendant is a mortgagee from the 7th defendant. The lower Court refused the plaintiff a decree against the 7th and 8th defendants on the ground that though his mortgage was prior to the conveyance to the 7th defendant, he took it during the pendency of Suit No. 11 of 1912, and under section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, which deals with the law regarding the doctrine of lis pendens, his mortgage was postponed to the 7th defendant's title. The plaintiff now appeals as against the 7th and 8th defendants.

Suit No. 11 of 1912 was brought by the 1st defendant as Receiver of his father's estate against the 7th defendant for ejectment, alleging that the 7th defendant was a tenant of his deceased father and that the tenancy had expired. That suit was dismissed for default on the 24th September 1914. A petition of compromise was put in in that suit on the 12th August 1914, the date of the conveyance to the 7th defendant, alleging that the plaintiff in that suit (who represented the present defendants Nos. 1 to 6, the present plaintiff's mortgagors) had agreed to convey this land to the present 7th defendant and asking that the compromise be recorded and the suit dismissed. Nothing was done on that application, but on the 17th August the plaintiff in that suit applied to withdraw the application of compromise. It was, therefore, withdrawn with leave to file a fresh application of compromise. No fresh application of compromise was filed, and on the 24th September 1914 the plaintiff appeared in person and asked to withdraw the suit, and the suit was accordingly dismissed for default. The learned Judge in the lower Court has found that the conveyance to the 7th defendant was in pursuance of the compromise in that suit; and apparently the order for dismissal was in consequence of that compromise. He refers to the case of Annamalai Chettiar v. Malayandi Appaya Naik (1). The decision in that case merely shows that a decree by consent which embodies the terms of a compromise is no less a decree because it is made by the Court at the instance of the parties, and that the doctrine of lis pendens applies to such a decree. He also refers the case of Kishory Mohun Roy v. Mahomed Muzaffar Hossein (2) as showing that the Court will go behind the actual order passed by the Court; but in that case also the terms of the compromise were apparently embodied in the decree. In the present case, so far from the terms of the compromise being included in the final order, its terms were not before the Court at all at the time of the final order. The conveyance by the defendants Nos. 1 to 6 to the 7th defendant was a matter altogether outside the Court. Section 52 only protects rights which are acquired under the decree or order of the Court. No authority has been shown to us under which the doctrine of lis pendens can be applied so as to protect a transfer of land made during the pendency of a suit, when such transaction is not embodied in the final order or decree. The case of Hukm Singh v. Zauki Lal (3) shows that the purchaser from a litigant pendente lite cannot go behind the decree to show that the decree proceeded upon a palpable mistake of fact. So too in the present suit, the 7th defendant cannot go behind the final order in the previous suit in order to show that the order would not have been made but for the fact that the land in dispute had been transferred to him by another party to the suit in pursuance of a compromise made out of Court. The effect of the order dismissing the Suit No. 11 of 1912 was at most to preclude the plaintiff in that suit, as the representative of the defendants Nos. 1 to 6, from bringing a fresh suit against the 7th defendant upon the same cause of action; and by the doctrine of lis pendens the present plaintiff would be subject to the same disability, i.e., the plaintiff could not sue the 7th defendant in ejectment as being a tenant of this land and as being liable to ejectment at the time that suit was instituted. It does not preclude the plaintiff from suing the 7th defendant upon a mortgage of the land. In this case one of two innocent purchasers has to suffer; and there is nothing in section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act under which the claim of the subsequent purchaser can be preferred to the plaintiff's title which was prior in time. The appeal is, therefore, allowed. The decree of the lower Court is set aside as regards defendants Nos. 7 and 8 and the mortgage decree given to the plaintiff will be altered so as to include the paddy land mentioned in item No. 5 of the plaint. The order of costs in the lower Court in favour of the 7th and 8th defendants is set aside. The value of the plaintiff's security as regards the land in item No. 5 may be taken to be Rs. 2,680 and the plaintiff-appellant will get his costs in both Courts on that amount as against the 7th and 8th defendants.

Appeal allowed.

r. 27—Appeal, second, whether trial—Res judicata, doctrine of, applicability of, to second appeals—Admission of fresh evidence—Copy of judgment of High Court, admissibility of.

There is no objection on grounds of principle or convenience to the admission in second appeal of a document, such as the judgment of a High Court, which could not be produced earlier because it was not in existence, and which requires no further evidence to explain it. No general rule, however, can be laid down and each case must be dealt with with reference to its own merits, and the existence of the sufficient cause referred to in Order XLI, rule 27, of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 626, col. 2; p. 627, col. 1.]

Section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code is not confined in its application to suits and first appeals. Its provisions apply equally to a second appeal, the hearing of which is a trial within the meaning of that section. [p. 627, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Cocanada, in Appeal Suit No. 27 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Temporary District Munsif, Ramachandrapur, in Original Suit No. 302 of 1916.

Mr. B. Narasimha Row, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, here appellant, sued in ejectment alleging that 1st and 2nd defendants had attorned to him as tenants by paying him rent for one year, 3rd defendant being their sub-tenant, and that they had subsequently set up the title of 4th defendant. Plaintiff set up his own title as by purchase from Sattemma, who claimed under the Will of Rajasekharadu. Defendants denied the title of both the last mentioned and contended that the decisions in Original Suits Nos. 212 of 1905 and 133 of 1915 were res judicata in their favour. The District Munsif accepted this contention. The lower Appellate Court confirmed his decision, relying solely on the judgment in Original Suit No. 212 as the judgment in Original Suit No. 133 was the subject of a pending second appeal in this Court. It has since been confirmed here in Second Appeal No. 1057 of 1917.

Plaintiff argues first that, even if this Court's judgment can be looked at, it will be decisive only as between himself and 4th defendant, who were parties to it, not in favour of 1st, 2nd and 3rd defendants, who were not and of whom 1st and 2nd defendants have paid rent to him for one year and are, therefore, (together with 3rd defendant who holds under them estopped from denying his title or pleading, as they did, the title of 4th defendant. But, although this estoppel is mentioned in the plaint, it has apparently been relied on only at the hearing before us, not in the grounds of second appeal or in either of the lower Courts; for, although the payment of rent, on which the estoppel depended, was denied, no issue was framed regarding it. Plaintiff, having impleaded 4th defendant, clearly sought a decision against his permanent title and against the claims of the other defendants only as based on it. In the circumstances he must be taken to have waived his plea of estoppel against 1st, 2nd and 3rd defendants and thus, the only objection to the character of this Court's judgment as res judicata, therefore, fails.

Plaintiff argues next that the judgment cannot be looked at, because it is not on the record and we cannot admit it or any other evidence in second appeal. This argument is answered by reference to Order XLI, rule 27, and Order XLII, rule 1. For there is no reason for holding that the former provision is not applied by the latter to second appeals; and the substantial cause referred to in Order XLI, rule 27 (1) (b), is available in the possibility that, if this Court's decision is not considered, the result may be two conflicting decrees between the same parties. Plaintiff relies on Ramachandra v. Krishnaji (1) and the judgment of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Raman Menon v. Mammali (2), the suggestion in both cases being that the proper course is not to ask the Court to accept newly discovered evidence in second appeal, but to apply to the trial Court for a review in order to its consideration. But there is nothing in the wording of the rule, above referred to, to warrant a distinction between newly discovered and other fresh evidence, and we have not been shown that the practice of this Court to refuse to deal with the former is as clearly established as it is apparently in Bombay or was supposed to be by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., here. We see no objection, on grounds of principle or convenience, to the admission in second appeal of a document such as this Court's judgment which could not have been produced earlier because it was not in existence, and which requires no further evidence to explain it. There is no resemblance between these circumstances and those dealt with in the cases relied on, since the evidence offered in them related to a question of fact and, the sole ground on which Spencer, J., concurred in Sadasiva Aiyar, J.'s decision in the Madras case was that, it would have been inconvenient to receive it. The conclusion must be that no general rule as to the party's right to have newly discovered evidence taken in second appeal can be laid down, but that each claim must be dealt with on its merits with reference to the existence of the sufficient cause referred to in Order XLI, rule 27, and that such cause has been shown in the present case.

(2) 39 Ind. Cas. 954; (1917) M. W. N. 560.

Plaintiff's remaining objection is that section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure prohibits the trial of an issue, in which the matter in issue has been in issue in a former suit between the same parties, and as this Court is not holding a trial it is not affected by the prohibition. The question raised in effect is whether the hearing of a second appeal is not a trial. We have been referred to no authoritative definition of a trial and plaintiff's proposal to apply the term only to proceedings in which evidence is or can be taken and questions of fact can be decided, that is, to proceedings before Courts of first instance and first appeal, cannot be accepted. For apart from the anomaly involved in treating a decision reached on the pleadings as a trial, when it is reached by the Courts last specified, but as other than a trial when, although it would have been reached earlier, it is actually reached on the same materials only in second appeal, the distinction is not maintained in the two cases on which plaintiff relies. For in them the proceedings of a Court of first appeal were in question. In Abdul Majid v. Jew Narain Mahto (3) the High Court, no doubt, held that the Appellate Court "was not holding a trial and, therefore, section 13 of the Code then in force" could not apply and that Court's decision founded on res judicata could not be sustained; and this decision was approved by a Full Bench of this Court in Panchanada Velan v. Vaithinatha Sastrial (4). But the contrary view is implied in Balkishan v. Kishan Lal (5), which was approved in this Court in Venkata Narasimha Appa Row v. Sobhanadri Appa Row (6), and in Calcutta in Midnapore Zemindary Co., Ltd. v. Nitya Kali Dasi (7), in which dissent from Abdul Majid v. Jew Narain Mahto (3) in that decision is unconnected with the preceding statement of the reason for it, that "the doctrine of res judicata did not apply", when, as in the case before the Court, "the very object of the appeal in substance, if not in form, was to get rid of the adjudication which was said to render the question which the Appellate Court was asked to decide res judicata. That observation is, it may be respectfully suggested, intelligible with reference to the case before the Court and to the case in Abdul Majid v. Jew Narain Mahto (3), because res judicata was pleaded in both in respect of a decision in another suit decided on the same evidence as that with which the appeal was connected. Here that is not the case; and it is, therefore, unnecessary for us to treat Panchanada Velan v. Vaithinatha Sastrial (4) as conclusive or the reference in it to Abdul Majid v. Jew Narain Mahto (3) as an endorsement of all the dicta contained therein or of that on which plaintiff relies. In accordance with the other decisions above referred to, which include one of this Court, plaintiff's objection to the consideration of this Court's judgment in Second Appeal No. 1057 of 1917 must be disallowed.

The foregoing exhausts plaintiff's arguments. The result is that the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code has no application to a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff and defendant are the mutwallis of waqf property and are entitled to manage it jointly. [p. 629, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Moradabad, dated the 29th January 1919.

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Raza Ali, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises relates to a grove which originally belonged to one Musammat Muniran. She made a waqf of this grove in the year 1890 and appointed herself the first mutwalli. The deed of waqf provided that after her death the mutwallis should be her grandsons, namely, the plaintiff Muhammad Husain and the defendant Ali Husain. The present suit was brought by the plaintiff for a declaration that the grove was waqf property in which the plaintiff and the defendant Ali Husain had no other rights than those of mutwallis. He asked for an injunction restraining Ali Husain from transferring the trees in the grove. He was allowed to amend the plaint and to claim a certain sum of money as the price of trees which were alleged to have been cut down. It appears that on the 15th of June 1917 the plaintiff Muhammad Husain executed a document whereby he transferred his rights as mutwalli to his father Allah Baksh and appointed him mutwalli in his own place. Allah Baksh applied for mutation of names, but his application was refused and he has taken no part in the management of the property nor has he asserted any right in respect of it. The defendant contended that as the plaintiff had transferred his rights to his father he was not entitled to maintain the suit and that he had ceased to be mutwalli. The decision of the question thus raised depended on the terms of the waqfnama executed by the creator of the waqf. In the fourth paragraph of that document she provided that the mutwallis could appoint a member of her family as mutwalli in their own place. The learned Subordinate Judge held that this was not a general power enabling each one of the mutwallis to appoint a substitute in his own place but power was given to both the mutwallis jointly to appoint a substitute in place of both of them. We think that this interpretation of the clause the in waqfnama is a proper interpretation and apparently represents the intention of the waqif. If this was so (and we think that this is what was intended by the waqif), the appointment of the plaintiff's father by the plaintiff was invalid. As we have said above, the appointment has never taken effect and the plaintiff's father has after the decision of the mutation case not asserted any right under the document executed in his favour. It is urged before us that the effect of the appointment of the plaintiff's father by the plaintiff was that the plaintiff relinquished his rights as mutwalli, and in support of this contention reliance is placed upon the following passage in Mr. Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Volume I, Fourth Edition, page 456:—"The appointment of another mutwalli by one who does not possess general powers, without the leave of the Qazi, is tantamount to a withdrawal of the incumbent from office, yet he remains responsible, unless the appointment or transfer of the trust is subsequently confirmed by the Qazi." This passage, in our opinion, so far from supporting the case of the appellant, is against him. The plaintiff, notwithstanding the appointment by him of his father, remained responsible inasmuch as the appointment of the father or the transfer of the trust was never confirmed by any authority. Being so responsible he is entitled to restrain the defendant, his co trustee, from alienating or wasting any part of the waqf property. A reference was made in the course of the argument to section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure and it was urged, though no plea has been taken on the point in the memorandum of appeal before us, that the plaintiff was seeking by this suit to obtain the remedy which could be granted by section 92. It is clear from the prayer in the plaint that such was not the intention of the plaintiff. He was not seeking to remove the defendant from the management of the trust property. On the contrary he is asking for a declaration that both he and the defendant are the mutwallis and are entitled to manage the waqf property jointly. We think the appeal is without force. We dismiss it with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 144—Co-sharers—Adverse possession—Overt act.

The entry on, and possession of, land under the common title of one co-owner will not be presumed to be adverse to the others, but will ordinarily be held to be for the benefit of all the co-owners, for the reason that the possession of one co-owner is in itself rightful and does not imply hostility as does the possession of a mere stranger. A co-owner might, however, establish a plea of adverse possession, if it is clearly shown that he repudiated the title of his co-owners by an overt claim to exclusive ownership more than twelve years before the institution of the suit. [p. 630, col 2.]

Mr. J. R. Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. May Aung, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 3 and 5 to 8.

JUDGMENT.

TWOMEY, C. J.—The Supari Bazaar, a piece of land with bazaar buildings on it in Akyab town, was jointly owned in 1900 by six persons in various shares. One of these joint owners was the defendant-appellant, Hari Pru, who had inherited certain shares and bought others so that he held 62 14/15 shares in all out of the total 101⅓. Another of the share-holders was one Mi San U, who had 24 shares. Hari Pru subsequently sold his shares and they now belong to the Bank of Bengal. The present suit was brought by the plaintiffs as heirs of Mi San U for a declaration of their title to Mi San U's 24 shares, the alleged cause of action being that the Bank had attached the whole property in execution of a decree as belonging to Hari Pru. The first two defendants are Hari Pru and his wife, the Bank of Bengal is the third defendant and the remaining defendants Nos. 4 to 7 are representatives of the remaining joint owners (of 101⅓ minus 62 14/15 minus 24 shares). The defendants Nos. 3 to 7 did not contest the plaintiffs' claim. The Bank put in a written statement stating that they claimed only the shares which belonged to Hari Pru, 62 14/15. The defendants Nos. 4 to 7 admitted the plaintiffs' claim and asked that a declaration might also be passed as to their shares (101⅓ minus 62 14/15 minus 24). The defendants Nos. 1 and 2, Hari Pru and his wife, contested the plaintiffs' claim and alleged that they had been in adverse possession of the whole property from 1900, i.e., upwards of 12 years.

The District Court found that Hari Pru's possession was not adverse as against the co-sharers and granted declarations as prayed for by the plaintiffs and by the defendants Nos. 4 to 7. Hari Pru and his wife appeal.

The first question raised in appeal is whether the District Court should not have refused the declaration under section 42, Specific Relief Act, as the plaintiffs omitted to seek further relief. This question was not raised in the District Court. The plaintiffs claimed that they were in possession of their 24 shares. But Hari Pru in his written statement denied their possession, and having regard to the provisions of section 42, Specific Relief Act, the Court should thereupon have framed a preliminary issue and determined the question whether the plaintiffs were at the time of instituting the suit in possession of the 24 shares so as to make it unnecessary for them to seek further relief beyond the mere declaration of title. Instead of following this course the learned Judge framed the single issue: "Have defendants Nos. 1 and 2 come to be owners by adverse possession of all the interest in this land which has not been bought by the Bank of Bengal?" As a matter of fact the learned Judge held that although Hari Pru was not in adverse possession from 1900 as claimed by him, he did set up a claim to be in adverse possession in a certain letter, Exhibit G, sent by him to the plaintiffs' legal advisers in November 1915. For reasons which will be stated presently we are unable to regard this letter as a claim to be in adverse possession of the plaintiffs' shares in the property. The facts of the case are not really in dispute. It has always been the practice for one of the co sharers to act as manager of the property, and when Hari Pru acquired the shares of a former co-sharer named Tha Zan who had been managing the bazaar, Hari Pru with the assent of the other co-sharers became manager in 1900. The learned Judge says: "there is no doubt that Hari Pru has been dealing with this bazaar as though it was his own," but the judgment clearly shows that in the Judge's opinion Hari Pru was regarded by the other co-sharers only as manager, and this view is borne out by the evidence. There was no definite refusal to render accounts. The co-sharers demanded accounts and Hari Pru made excuses and put them off.

Hari Pru received all bazaar rents and spent considerable sums on repairs and improvements, but at least in some cases he consulted the co-sharers. The profits are said to have amounted to only Rs. 300 to Rs. 500 a year and some heavy expenditure appears to have been incurred in building a pucca sea wall and in re-roofing and re-flooring the buildings. It may well be, as the Judge suggests, that the co-sharers accepted Hari Pru's assurances that there was no surplus.

It is not disputed that Tha Zan and former managers were in possession of the whole property for themselves and the co sharers. The latter were in possession of their shares through the managing co-sharer. There is nothing to show that a different state of things arose when Hari Pru became manager. It must be taken that he entered into possession for himself only as regards his quota of the shares, and that his possession was the possession of the co-sharers as regards their respective quotas. In these circumstances the burden was on Hari Pru to show how and when his possession of the co-sharers' quotas became adverse. The fact that he exclusively managed the property counts for next to nothing. The following passage from a recent judgment of the Privy Council has a bearing on this point:—"It is important to bear in mind certain facts with regard to the possession of joint property, which distinguish it from property separately held. In the former case the phrase 'exclusive possession' has an equivocal meaning; in the latter it has not. If by exclusive possession of joint estate is meant that one member of the joint family alone occupies it, that by itself affords no evidence of exclusion of other interested members of the family. Uninterrupted sole possession of such property, without more, must be referred to the lawful title possessed by the joint holder to use the joint estate, and cannot be regarded as an assertion of a right to hold it as separate, so as to assert an adverse claim against other interested members:" Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (1). The same principle would apparently apply to joint owners generally. The appellants' learned Counsel relies on the Calcutta case Jogendra Nath Rai v. Baladeo Das (2) as showing that one co-owner may hold adversely to his co-parceners, and if his possession is continued uninterruptedly for the statutory period he will acquire an indefeasible title. The fundamental rule is stated to be that the entry and possession of land under the common title of one co-owner will not be presumed to be adverse to the others but will ordinarily be held to be for the benefit of all, the obvious reason being that the possession of one co-owner is in itself rightful and does not imply hostility as would the possession of a mere stranger. But the learned Judges considered that a co owner might establish a plea of adverse possession if it was clearly shown that he had expressly repudiated the title of his co-owner. Assuming that this is a correct statement of the law (and it is consistent with the passage from the Privy Council judgment above cited), Hari Pru would have to show that he repudiated the plaintiffs' title by an overt claim to exclusive ownership more than twelve years before the institution of the suit, and he has clearly failed to show this.

This finding would be sufficient to dispose of the appeal were it not for the plea raised with reference to section 42, Specific Relief Act. In view of that plea we have to decide the further question whether Exhibit G, dated 12th November 1915, had the effect of dispossessing the plaintiffs of their 24 shares and thus rendering it incumbent on them to sue for possession. The following is a translation of the letter:—"Exhibit G, for the plaintiff. Akyab, 12th November 1915, to U Tun Chan, Advocate. I have received your notice, dated 6th November 1915, and its amendment, dated 11th November 1915. As I have been enjoying the profits and standing the losses of the said property since 1260, I write to say that whether the property in question is sold or not, or pulled down and re-built or not, it has nothing whatever to do with the persons referred to. (Sd.) Haree Pru." It was sent by Hari Pru in reply to a notice from the plaintiffs pointing out that Hari Pru had sold his 62 shares, and, therefore, that he had no further concern with the property, objecting to Hari Pru's action in letting out the property to a tenant, and directing him to refrain from pulling down or re-building any of the buildings. The letter of November 12th, 1915, does not expressly repudiate the claims of the co sharers. It does not expressly claim that Hari Pru is in exclusive separate possession of the property. It is capable of being read as a claim by Hari Pru to continue the exclusive management of the bazaar (whether in his own right or on behalf of those who purchased his former shares). The concluding words, "it has nothing whatever to do with the persons referred to" (i. e., the plaintiffs), do not necessarily mean that the writer is claiming anything more than the right to go on managing the property without interference from the plaintiffs. We do not agree with the learned Judge in regarding this letter as a definite claim by Hari Pru to hold the whole property as his own. It must be held that this letter made no change in the character of Hari Pru's possession, and that the co-sharers, including the plaintiffs, continued in possession through him. Consequently, the frame of the suit did not contravene the provisions of section 42, Specific Relief Act.

The learned Judge, in our opinion, erred in granting declarations of title to the defendants Nos. 4 to 7. It is admitted that there is no provision of law under which declarations could be granted to the defendants in this case.

The decree will be modified by striking out the declarations in favour of defendants Nos. 4 to 7 and the order for the payment of these defendants' costs by the co-defendants Nos. 1 and 2 is set aside. Otherwise the decree of the lower Court is confirmed and the appellants will pay the costs of the respondents Nos. 1 to 3 in this Court.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 31—Profits of land, claim for—Profits consisting of rent and being fixed sum—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court.

A suit for a specific sum as profits of land without asking for an account of profits is a suit of a Small Cause nature, and is not exempt from the cognizance of a Small Cause Court under Article 31 of Schedule II to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. [p. 632, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, South Kanara, in Appeal Suit No. 296 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Puttur, in Original Suit No. 600 of 1916.

Mr. K. Y. Adiga, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. V. Anantha Krishna Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaint claims a specific sum as a half share of the profits of land, and does not pray for an account of profits. No issue was raised as to the amount of profits, and apparently they are a fixed sum and probably, therefore, consist of rent. It must be taken, from the course of the proceedings, that the suit was properly framed and that an account was unnecessary to ascertain the profits of the land. The suit, therefore, does not fall within the Provincial Small Cause Court Act, Article 31, and is of a small cause nature and no second appeal lies.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Musammat BIBI KUNWAR—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 61—Suit to recover revenue paid by plaintiff in respect of property of which he has been dispossessed—Limitation, commencement of.

The period of limitation for a suit to recover revenue paid by the plaintiff while in possession of immoveable property, but of which he subsequently relinquished possession, is contained in Article 61 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and the period commences to run from the date on which the last payment was made. [p. 633, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Bareilly, dated the 17th April 1917.

The Hon'ble Mr. Raza Ali, for the Appellant.

Mr Lakshmi Narain, for Mr. Iswar Saran, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought under the following circumstances. One Jai Ram was the owner of certain immoveable property. Upon his death in 1910 disputes arose between his widow Musammat Bibi Kunwar and his nephew Baijnath. The former alleged that Jai Ram was separate and that she, as his widow, was entitled to his property. Baijnath, who was the brother's son of Jai Ram, asserted that he and Jai Ram were members of a joint family, and that, therefore, upon Jai Ram's death he succeeded to the property by right of survivorship. These disputes were raised in mutation proceedings. The Court of first instance held that the family was joint and ordered the name of Baijnath to be entered in the revenue papers. This order was passed on the 23rd of December 1910. On appeal the aforesaid order was set aside and the Appellate Court held on the 18th of April 1911 that Bibi Kunwar was entitled to the property, her husband having been separate from his nephew, and directed her name to be entered. Upon the passing of the order of the Court of first instance Baijnath took possession and between the date of the order of the first Court and that of the order of the Appellate Court he collected rents and profits to the extent of Rs. 1,218-14-8 from tenants and paid Rs. 1,226 8 3 on account of Government revenue. After the passing of the order of the Appellate Court he had to relinquish possession as he apparently acquiesced in the decision of that Court. Some of the tenants sued him for a refund of the rents which he had realised from them and obtained decrees. He thereupon assigned to the plaintiff his alleged right to recover from the defendant the revenue which he had paid in respect of the property. The plaintiff by virtue of this assignment brought the present suit for recovery of Rs. 1,226-8-3 and interest thereon. He alleged his cause of action to have arisen when the tenants obtained a decree against Baijnath on the 29th of March 1913. The suit was instituted on the 28th of March 1916. The defendant pleaded limitation and the question was what Article of the Limitation Act governs the present suit. The Court of first instance decreed a part of the claim. It did not decide what article of the Limitation Act applied to the case. The lower Appellate Court was of opinion that Article 97 was applicable and that limitation was to be computed under that article from the 18th of April 1911, the date of the decision of the Appellate Court when Baijnath relinquished possession. That Court dismissed the suit as time barred. In our opinion Article 97 has no application to the present case. That article provides for suits for money paid upon an existing consideration which afterwards fails. The consideration for payment of the revenue could not be the realisation of rents from the tenants. The revenue was paid because the property was liable for revenue and demand was made for it. It was payable by the person in possession, whether he had collected rents or not. Therefore, the collection of rents was not the consideration for the payment of the revenue, as held by the Court of first instance and contended for by the learned Vakil for the appellant, and a refund of the rents cannot be said to be a failure of the consideration or part thereof. The learned Vakil for the appellant has asked us to apply Article 97 or Article 120. We do not think that Article 97 is applicable. If we assume that the consideration for the payment of revenue was possession by Baijnath of the property of the defendant that consideration failed, as the learned Judge says, when possession was removed in April 1911. We do not, however, think that it could be said that the consideration for the payment of revenue was the fact that Baijnath was in possession. In our judgment the article applicable is Article 61, which clearly applies to cases of this kind. That article provides for suits "for money payable to the plaintiff for money paid for the defendant" and limitation runs from the date on which the money was paid. Baijnath, the vendor of the plaintiff, paid the revenue which in reality was payable by the defendant. Therefore, the money which he paid was money paid for the defendant and it is this money which is sought to be recovered by the present suit. As limitation for a suit of this kind should run from the date of payment and in the present case the last date of payment was some prior to the 18th April 1911, the present suit brought on 28th March 1916 is time-barred. It is urged that if Baijnath had sued for the revenue which he had paid, it might have been contended on the defendant's behalf that as he had realised rents from the tenants he was not entitled to get anything more than the difference between the amount realised by him and the amount paid as revenue and that the present suit could not have been instituted unless Baijnath had refunded any part of the rents realised from the tenants.

We do not think that this is a valid contention. Baijnath could have sued, if at all, for the balance of revenue due to him after giving credit for what he had realised. In that case the defendant could not have recovered the rent twice over from any of the tenants and the tenants could not have obtained a refund of the rents from Baijnath. If Baijnath has under the present circumstances sustained any loss, it is in consequence of his laches in not bringing his suit within the period of limitation prescribed for a suit of this kind. The learned Vakil for the appellant in support of his contention that Article 97 applies referred to the case of Koji Ram v. Ishar Das (1). In our opinion that case has no bearing on the present case and its facts are wholly distinguishable from the facts of this case, as in our opinion, Article 61 is the Article applicable to the present suit and, therefore, Article 120 cannot apply. The Court below was, therefore, right in dismissing the suit on the ground of limitation, though its reasons are not the reasons for which we hold the suit to be time-barred. We dismiss the appeal with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Appeal dismissed.

KALI GOUNDAN—RESPONDENT.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), ss. 131, 192, 205--Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Order under s. 131—Revision—High Court, power of interference of - Deposit required by s. 131 not made on last day owing to absence of presiding officer--Delay, whether can be excused.

Section 192 of the Madras Estates Land Act renders section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code applicable to all suits, appeals and other proceedings under the former Act, and thus vests the High Court with the power of revision in respect of orders passed under that Act. [p. 634, col. 2.]

The exercise of this power, however, is always discretionary, and where the petitioner has already applied to the Revenue Authorities without success, the High Court will decline to exercise its power of revision unless imperatively called upon to do so to prevent a miscarriage of justice. [p. 635, col. 1.]

Where the deposit required by section 131 of the Madras Estates Land Act cannot be made on the last day of the time allowed owing to the absence of the presiding officer, a deposit made the next day will satisfy the requirements of the section. [p. 635, col. 2.]

Petition, under section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Collector, Trichinopoly, dated the 16th August 1917, in D. Dis. No. 2408 Rev. of 1917, affirming the order of the Deputy Collector, Namakkal, dated 3rd June 1917—Miscellaneous Petitions Nos. 95 and 96 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. L. S. Veeraraghava Aiyar, for the Respondent, raised the preliminary objection that no revision petition lay against an order under section 131 of the Madras Estates Land Act. Under section 205 of the Act powers of revision are granted to the Collector and the Board of Revenue. Petitioner applied to both those tribunals, but without success.

Mr. K. V. Sesha Aiyangar, for the Petitioner.—The preliminary objection cannot stand. Section 192 of the Estates Land Act makes section 115, Civil Procedure Code, applicable to all suits, appeals and other proceedings under the Act. The fact that separate powers of revision are vested in the Collector and the Revenue Board does not oust the jurisdiction of the High Court.

The respondent has not made the deposit within the time allowed. He cannot claim any indulgence. Act I of 1908 is a self-contained Act and the provisions of section 5 of the Limitation Act do not in terms apply. The absence of the Deputy Collector from the office did not prevent the respondent from lodging the money in the Sub-Treasury. Vide Government Notification No. 145 Rev., dated 27th March 1912.

There was no notice to the auction-purchaser of the intended cancellation of the sale That vitiates the whole proceedings.

Mr. L. S Veeraraghava Aiyar, for the Respondent.—The failure of respondent to deposit the amount in time was not due to any wilful default on his part. If the Deputy Collector was absent and money could not be received, the default was due to an act of Court. Under the Act the payment is to be made to the Collector and petitioner was not bound to adopt any other course.

Absence of notice to the auction-purchaser is only an immaterial irregularity. It does not vitiate the proceedings.

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, J.—This petition arises out of an order of the Deputy Collector of Namakkal under section 131, Madras Estates Land Act, setting aside a sale for arrears of rent.

The preliminary objection is taken that this Court has no power to revise such an order. I do not think this objection can be upheld. It is true that section 205 of the Act (read with the Schedule, Part B, No. 19) gives a power of revision to the Board of Revenue or the District Collector in the case of such an order and in the present case, petitioner has invoked the interference of both the authorities named without success. But section 192 renders section 115 of the present Code of Civil Procedure (old section 622) applicable to all suits, appeals and other proceedings under the Madras Estates Land Act. It may seem undesirable that the power of revising the same order should vest in two authorities so different in their constitution and ordinary procedure as this Court and the Board of Revenue, and one may wonder whether such a result was deliberately intended by the Legislature or arrived at by inadvertence. Nevertheless we have to interpret the Act as it stands. It is impossible to say that the grant of the power of revision to this Court is inconsistent with the grant of similar power to the Collector and Board of Revenue: and I think it must be held that section 192 vests this Court with the power of revision, which petitioner invokes.

Its exercise is, of course, always discretionary, and where, as in the present case, the petitioner has previously applied to the Revenue Authorities under section 205 without success, I think this Court might reasonably decline to exercise it unless imperatively called upon to do so to prevent a miscarriage of justice.

The facts of the case are clearly set forth in the order of the District Collector declining to interfere, which runs thus:

"On the 24th May, the last day open to him, the counter petitioner appeared with the deposit and applied to have the sale set aside. The Divisional Officer was absent on casual leave; the clerk, therefore, told him to come on the 26th which he did. In the circumstances, I cannot say that the sale was improperly cancelled even though no notice was given as it ought to have been to the purchaser.

"I decline to interfere on revision and dismiss the petition."

Petitioner's main contention is that the deposit of the amount by the defaulting ryot within the period of 30 days from the sale is a condition precedent to the passing of an order setting aside the sale, and that unless it is strictly complied with, no matter what the circumstances may be, an order setting aside the sale is ultra vires and illegal. The admitted failure to give notice to the auction-purchaser before passing the order is also said to be an infringement of Order XXI, rule 92, and to equally invalidate the order.

As regards the first objection, however strict the wording of section 131 may seem to be, and although section 5, Indian Limitation Act is not in terms applicable, authority is not wanting for a more reasonable and liberal interpretation of the section. Shooshee Bhusan Rudro v. Gobind Chunder Roy (1) was a precisely similar case to the present one under the Bengal Tenancy Act; the learned Judges held that, on general principles, when a fixed period is given to do a certain act, and the person bound to perform it is, from no act of his own, but from some act or order of the Court, prevented from carrying it out, he gets the advantage of the next open day. This ruling was followed and the same principle applied in other cases in the same Court [vide Peary Mohun Aich v. Anunda Charan Biswas (2) and by a Bench of this Court in Sambasiva Chari v. Ramasami Reddi (3)] to a case under the Rent Recovery Act. It has been embodied in a statutory rule in section 10 of the General Clauses Act as regards cases where the Court or office is actually closed. In the present case it may be said that the office or Court of the Deputy Collector was not closed on the last day of performance, but only the presiding officer, the Deputy Collector himself, was absent on leave. This makes no difference. In consequence of his absence respondent found it just as impossible to get his deposit received as if the office or Court had been shut up, and his failure to perform the act required of him within the time specified was equally occasioned by the act of the Court and by no act of his own.

I find nothing inconsistent with this in Chundi Charan Mandal v. Banke Behary Lal Mandal (4). In that case it was not shown that the judgment debtor's failure to deposit the full amount within the prescribed period was due to any act or mistake of the Court: and the learned Judges are at pains to make it clear that, if it had been, their decision might (not to say, would) have been different. In another case quoted as Bibi Sharofan v. Mahomed Habibuddin (5), there is nothing to indicate that the failure to deposit within the prescribed time was due to any act of the Court: and the learned Judge whose judgment is relied on (Mookerjee, J.) had subscribed to the general principle laid down in

(1) 18 C. 231; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 154.
(2) 18 C. 631; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 421.

(5) 10 Ind. Cas. 148; 13 C. L. J. 535; 15 C. W. N. 685.

Shooshee Bhusan Rudro v. Gobind Chunder Roy (1): vide his judgment in Mahomed Akbar Jaman Khan v. Sukhdeo Panday (6).

Appellant's Vakil drew our attention to Government Notification No. 145, Revenue, dated the 27th March 1912, under which a deposit under section 131 is allowed to be paid into any Sub Treasury; and suggested that, as this alternative course was open to him, respondent should not be allowed the benefit of the general principle. The course prescribed by the Act is payment to the Collector, and we are in no position to say that when respondent found the latter's office closed against him, he was in a position to avail himself of the alternative course.

In my opinion it was competent to the Deputy Collector to set aside the sale in the circumstances, although the deposit was not made within the prescribed time.

Coming to the second point, whether failure to give notice is a mere irregularity, or vitiates the whole proceedings is open to argument. But taking the view most favourable to appellant, I should not be prepared to exercise our revisionary powers in this case on that ground alone. If the objection were allowed, our only course would be to set aside the Deputy Collector's order, and remand the application for disposal after due notice to appellant. But we have now had the advantage of hearing the case fully argued in all its aspects; and it is clear that appellant could bring forward no tenable objection to the setting aside of the sale, and that the Deputy Collector's order was a perfectly just, reasonable and proper one (apart from the omission to give prior notice). To remand the case in such circumstances would be futile.

I would dismiss the petition with cost.

KRISHNAN, J.—I agree and have nothing further to add, except that I have already dealt with the revisional power of the High Court in my judgment in Paramaswami Ayyangar v. Alamu Nachiar (7) which may be referred to.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 456—Guardian ad litem, appointment of—Notice to minor, whether necessary—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 4—Guardian ad litem —Adverse interest, what is—Suit attacking mortgage—Father mortgagor, interest of, whether adverse to minor son.

Where a suit was instituted and a guardian ad litem appointed of the minor defendants when the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 was in force, objection cannot be taken to the appointment of the guardian on the score of want of notice to the minors, as section 456 of that Code did not require that notice should go personally to, and be served personally upon, the minors [p. 637, col. 1.]

Where the guardian ad litem of minor defendants is their father and is also the mortgagor of the suit property, it does not necessarily follow that his interests are adverse to the minors who with him form a joint family of which he is the managing member. [p. 637, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal against the decision of the Officiating First Additional Judge, Aligarh, dated the 17th April 1915.

The Hon'ble Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Appellant.

Messrs. J. K. Mukerjee and Kanhaya Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this appeal arises are these:—One Yad Ram made a mortgage of joint ancestral property in favour of Ganeshi Singh appellant on the 8th of February 1897. On the 7th of February 1908 a suit was brought by the mortgagee to enforce the mortgage and the defendants to the suit were Yad Ram and his four sons, two of whom, Shib Dayal and Shib Singh, were of full age and the other two, namely, Shyam Singh and Sheo Dan Singh were minors. An application was made to the Court, supported apparently by an affidavit, praying that Yad Ram should be appointed guardian ad litem of the two minor defendants. This application was granted by the Court and Yad Ram was appointed guardian of the minors for the suit. This proceeding took place under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure which was in force at the time when the suit was filed. The suit was not defended and an ex parte decree was made in favour of the mortgagee on the 10th of March 1909. The present suit was brought on the 5th of November 1914 by the four sons of Yad Ram for a declaration that the decree obtained by the mortgagee, Ganeshi Singh, on the 10th of March 1909 was not binding on them. The grounds upon which they brought the suit were that the decree was obtained fraudulently: that the minors were not properly represented in the suit. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, finding that there was no fraud and that the minors were properly represented by their father, who was the manager of the joint family of which he and his sons were members. The lower Appellate Court agreed with the Court of first instance in finding that there was no fraud and that the allegation of fraud was not established. It dismissed the appeal of the two adult sons of Yad Ram but decreed the appeal and the suit of the minors on two grounds, first, that the appointment of the guardian was in contravention of the provisions of Order XXXII, rule 3, of the present Code of Civil Procedure, and, secondly, that Yad Ram was not a fit and proper person to be appointed guardian of the minors.

As regards the first ground of the lower Appellate Court's decision it seems to us to be erroneous. As we have stated above, the suit was filed and the guardian was appointed when the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 was in force. Section 456 of the Code provided the procedure for the appointment of a guardian ad litem. It did not require that notice of the application for the appointment of such a guardian was to go to the minors personally and was to be served on them personally. Therefore, the procedure adopted by the Court was in accordance with the provisions of section 456. Then remains the question whether the guardian appointed was a fit and proper person to be appointed having regard to the provisions of section 457. It is contended that Yad Ram had an interest adverse to that of the minors. It does not necessarily follow that because he was the mortgagor, his interests were adverse to those of his sons who with him formed a joint family of which he was the managing member. It is not suggested in the plaint that the debt was incurred for immoral purposes. All that is said is that it was not a lawful debt. By this we suppose it is meant that the debt was not incurred for family necessity. If that had been a true defence to the suit of the mortgagee, one would have expected the adult sons of Yad Ram to have appeared and put forward that defence. They did not do so but allowed a decree to be passed against them. Upon the findings of both the Courts below the service of summons was duly effected and the allegations of the plaintiffs that they had no notice of the suit is untrue. We think that the learned Additional Judge was not right in holding that because Yad Ram was the mortgagor his interest was necessarily adverse to that of his minor sons. The proceedings in the previous suit were not, therefore, vitiated by any defect in the appointment of the guardian ad litem of the minor plaintiffs to this suit and their claim was rightly dismissed by the Court of first instance. We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts.

We may mention that the respondent No. 2, Sheo Dan Singh, who has not appeared in this appeal was at the front when the appeal was filed, but he was subsequently served when he was in this country but has not chosen to appear. The appeal was, therefore, heard in his absence.

Appeal allowed.

Messrs. K. R Gurusami Aiyar and Mr. A. Subbaram Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. D. Devadass, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We agree with the lower Court that the suit is barred by limitation, although in our opinion the appropriate Article is Article 142, and not Article 131 of the Limitation Act. The suit is in effect for possession of the temple and the value of the temple itself is specifically included in the plaint valuation of the suit. The judgment in Eshan Chunder Roy v. Monmohini Dassi (1), which is relied on by appellants' Vakil, proceeds on the basis that no interest in immoveable property was involved and Ramanathan Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (2), Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (3) and Charapattada Siddalinga Swamulu v. Sondur Ramachandra Charlu (4) all support the view that Article 142 is the proper article to apply in the present case.

But this makes the case of plaintiffs worse, for under Article 142 the burden of proof must rest on plaintiffs, and on the meagre evidence on record we have no hesitation whatever in holding that they have not discharged it.

The appeal is dismissed with costs as also the memorandum of objection.

Allahabad High Court Rules, Part II, r. 26—Carrying on family business, whether amounts to entering into trade or business.

The carrying on of a family business by a Vakil, which has been in existence for a long time, does not amount to entering into any trade or business within the meaning of the second paragraph of rule 26, Part II, of the Allahabad High Court Rules. [p. 639, col. 1.]

Before a Vakil embarks on any commercial transactions he should give notice to, and obtain the permission of, the High Court. [p. 639, col. 1.]

Civil Miscellaneous under rule 26, Part II, of the High Court Rules.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by one Ram Sarup praying that notice be taken of the conduct of Babu Tika Ram, a Vakil of this Court, now practising at Agra, it being alleged that he is guilty of professional misconduct. The misconduct imputed to the Vakil is a violation of rule 26, Part II, of the High Court Rules. The first paragraph of that rule provides that if an applicant for admission as a practitioner holds any appointment or carries on any trade or other business the High Court may refuse to admit him, or pass such orders on his application as it thinks proper. That paragraph has no bearing on the present case, inasmuch as in the petition before us it is not asserted that at the time when the Vakil applied in 1894 for admission, he was carrying on any trade or business. It is the provision of the second paragraph of the rule which the Vakil is alleged to have contravened. That paragraph requires that any person who, having been admitted as a legal practitioner, shall accept any appointment or shall enter into any trade or other business, shall give notice thereof to the High Court. It is said that this Vakil has, since his enrolment, been carrying on business in grain and other articles and has not given notice of his having entered into such business to this Court. The Vakil has filed an explanation and in this explanation he states that there was a joint family business which used to be carried on from the time of his grandfather, that he and his father and uncle were members of the joint family and that he as a member of that faimly had an interest in that business. That business, according to his allegation, has long been closed and this is not denied by the applicant. We do not think that the carrying on of a family business, which has been in existence for a long time, may be regarded as entering into any trade or business within the meaning of the rule. The Vakil has admitted that from time to time he entered into transactions for the sale of grain, salt, cotton, seeds, etc., by way of speculation, but he has not done so habitually. He has mentioned eight instances, seven of which were instances of business carried on in the years 1915, 1916 and 1917. It does not appear that he has habitually or systematically exercised the profession of a trade in addition to his work as a Vakil. We do not think, therefore, that he can be held to have violated the provisions of the rule to which we have referred. We think, however, that it was not proper for him to have entered into the alleged transactions while he was carrying on the business of a Vakil, although those transactions were only isolated ones. We do not think that the fact that he helped his son in borrowing money for the business which his son is alleged to have carried on on his own account would amount to a violation of rule 26. Under those circumstances we are of opinion that further action is not called for in this case. At the same time we think that the Vakil should give an undertaking to the Court that he will not enter into any business or trade without giving notice to the Court and obtaining its permission. Such undertaking has been given to us by Mr. Nehal Chand who appears on behalf of the Vakil and by the Vakil who is himself present in Court. The Rule issued to the Vakil is accordingly discharged.

Rule discharged.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 9 —Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 83 —Probate application—Dismissal for default—Restoration, application for, maintainability of.

Order IX, rule 9, of the Code of Civil Procedure is applicable to the dismissal of an application for Probate which has, under section 83 of the Probate and Administration Act, been treated as a suit. The applicability of the latter portion of rule 9 is not conditional on that of the former. [p. 640, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Court, Godaveri at Rajahmundry, in I. A. No. 275 of 1918, in Original Petition No. 55 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. P. Somasundram, for the Appellant.—Order XXI, rule 9, governs proceedings under the Probate Act. Section 55 of the latter Act lays down generally that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code shall, as far as possible, govern proceedings under the Act. Under section 83 of the Act the application has to be treated as a suit. Applying the 2nd part of Order IX, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code, the order of dismissal of the probate application may be set aside.

Mr. A. Vencatachellam, for the Respondents.—The latter part of Order IX, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code, can be applied only when the first part debarring plaintiff from a second suit can be applied, otherwise not. See Ramani Debi v. Kumud Bandhu (1).

JUDGMENT.—The question is whether Order IX, rule 9, of the Code of Civil Procedure, is applicable to the dismissal of an application for probate which has under section 83 of the Probate and Administration Act, V of 1881, been treated as a suit. That section directs that the proceedings shall take, as nearly as may be, the form of a suit according to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 55 of the same Act also applies these provisions to proceedings in relation to the grant of probate so far as the circumstances of the case admit. And we cannot find anything in the latter part of Order IX, rule 9, which is the relevant provision in the present connection, which cannot be conveniently applied.

(1) 7 Ind. Cas. 126; 14 C. W.N. 924; 12 C. L. J. 185.

Respondents, however, argue, firstly, that that part of the rule can be applied only when the first part debarring the plaintiff from a second suit can be applied also, and they rely on Ramani Debi v. Kumud Bandhu (1) for the position that it cannot. This decision met with some criticism in the referring order of Beaman, J., Kalyanchand Lalchand v. Sitabai Dhanasa (2), but we do not think it necessary at present to consider whether it is correct. For we can see no reason for treating the applicability of the latter portion of Order IX, rule 9, as conditional on that of the former or refusing effect to section 55, Probate and Administration Act, on account of it. We, therefore, set aside the decision under appeal and remand the petition for re admission and disposal on its merits. Costs to date will abide the result and be provided for in the order to be passed.

An order made by an Assistant Collector rejecting an application for restitution, however erroneous, is not open to revision by the High Court. [p. 640, col. 2.]

Civil revision against an order of the Assistant Collector, First Class, Muttra, dated the 16th April 1918.

Mr. S. N. Mukerji, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision from an order of an Assistant Collector rejecting the application of the applicant for restitution. It appears that a suit was brought against the applicant for recovery of profits. The learned Assistant Collector, in whose Court the suit was filed, decreed the claim of the opposite party for about Rs. 700. On appeal the decree in favour of the plaintiff was increased by a few hundred rupees on account of interest. In second appeal to this Court the decree was reduced to about Rs. 200. In the meantime the opposite party had executed the decree of the first Appellate Court. After the decision of the case in this Court, the applicant before us presented a petition to the Assistant Collector for restitution, namely, for the recovery of the difference between the decree of the first Appellate Court and the decree of this Court. The Assistant Collector rejected the application and directed the applicant to file a regular suit. There can be no doubt that the order of the Assistant Collector is erroneous and must have been passed under a misapprehension. No remedy is open by way of a regular suit to the applicant to recover the balance of the money that was realised by the opposite party in execution of the decree of the first Appellate Court. A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the opposite party to the application in revision to this Court on the ground that no revision lies. This objection is supported by authority and we need only mention one case, vide Damber Singh v. Sri Kishun Das (1). On behalf of the applicant great stress is laid on the fact that if the present application is rejected, he, the applicant, has no remedy anywhere. We think that the application for restitution made by the applicant, though rejected by the learned Assistant Collector, does not prevent him, the applicant, from making another application before the Revenue Court. We have no doubt that if the matter is properly put before the learned Assistant Collector he will take action upon it. In any case the present application is not maintainable. We, therefore, dismiss it but in the circumstances of the case make no order as to costs.

Application dismissed.

Mr. R. Narasimham, for the Petitioner.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioner purchased the property privately from the judgment-debtor. Other persons had purchased portions of the property before him; the 2nd counter-petitioner is an auction-purchaser. The contention of the petitioner is that as he himself and the previous vendees have paid the full amount of the decree the sale should be set aside. The lower Appellate Court held, following the decision of this Court in Karunakara Menon v. Krishna Menon (1), that as the petitioner paid only a portion of the amount he is not entitled to ask that the auction should be set aside. That decision has been sought to be distinguished before me. In my opinion the lower Appellate Court is right in holding that the present case is covered by the authority cited by the lower Appellate Court. Even apart from this view I fail to see what question of jurisdiction there can be for interference under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. As was pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (2), the mere fact that a wrong decision has been given on a question of law would not enable an Appellate Court to interfere with the order of the Court below under section 115. For both these reasons I uphold the judgment of the Court below and dismiss the petition with costs of the 2nd respondent.

Where, during the pendency of an application for review, the applicant files an appeal against the order of which he is seeking a review, the fact that such appeal is pending is no bar to the disposal of the application for review. [p. 643, col. 1.]

Civil revision against the order of the District Judge, Farrukhabad, dated the 9th of May 1918.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Applicants.

Mr. J. N. Mukerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision from an appellate order of the learned District Judge of Farrukhabad setting aside an order of the Munsif passed on an application for review. It appears that the opposite party obtained a decree against the applicants on the 3rd of August 1911. The first application for execution was made on the 26th of August 1914. It was obviously time-barred. Notice was issued on the application to the judgment-debtors but nobody appeared. The judgment-debtors were minors then and are minors still. Notice was issued to their guardian. No steps were taken on that application. Subsequently other applications were put in and the execution of the decree was allowed. The property of the judgment debtors, the applicants before this Court, was attached and was advertised for sale. They object to the execution proceedings on the ground of limitation. Their objection was disallowed on the 9th of January 1917 and again on the 24th of March 1917. On the 2nd of April 1917 they filed an application for review before the Court executing the decree. Before the application for review could be disposed of, they preferred an appeal on the 9th of May 1917. Before the disposal of the appeal, the learned Munsif who was executing the decree disposed of the application for review. Thereupon the appeal was withdrawn. On the review application the learned Munsif allowed the objection of the judgment-debtors with regard to limitation, holding that the decree sought to be executed was barred. The decree-holders preferred an appeal from the order of the learned Munsif passed upon the review application. The learned District Judge held that the application for review could not be made when an appeal had been filed, though subsequently, to his Court. He allowed the appeal and set aside the order of the Munsif passed on the application for review. The judgment-debtors have come up in revision to this Court. They contend that the learned District Judge could only set aside the order of the first Court that was passed on the application for review for reasons given in Order XLVII, rule 7, on the ground of want of jurisdiction. No case was put forward by the decree-holders under Order XLVII, rule 7. They, however, objected to the order of the first Court on the ground that it was passed without jurisdiction inasmuch as an appeal was pending at the time the Munsif disposed of the application for review. The view taken by the learned District Judge that the application for review could not be entertained as an appeal was pending in his Court, is challeged by the judgment-debtors who say that under the law their application could be entertained by the Munsif. They contend that the application was made before the filing of the appeal and that the reasoning of the learned District Judge does not cover their case. The learned Judge relies upon the language of Order XLVII, rule 1 (a), which is to the effect that any person considering himself aggrieved by a decree or order from which an appeal is allowed, but from which no appeal has been preferred, may apply for a review of the decree or the order. The application of the judgment-debtors was made before the appeal was filed, and, therefore, it is contended that the words of Order XLVII, rule 1 (a), do not cover their case. The contention for the applicants before us is supported by the cases of Chenna Reddi v. Pedda Obi Reddi (1) and Narayan Pur-

The appellant, who filed objections in a partition case instituted by the Court of Wards, was on 4th March 1918 ordered, under section 111 of the Land Revenue Act, to institute within three months a suit in the Civil Court for the determination of the question in dispute. On 20th May 1918 he gave notice to the Collector as required by section 54 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act and nine days later instituted the suit in the Civil Court:

Held, that there was no reason for dispensing with the express provisions of section 54 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act, and as it was in no way impossible for the appellant to have complied with that section and yet have brought his suit within the time allowed, the suit was rightly dismissed. [p. 644, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 2nd September 1918, upholding the decree of the Additional Munsif, Sultanpur, dated the 1st July 1918.

Mr. Rudra Datta Sinha, for the Appellant.

Rai N. N. Ghoshal Bahadur, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal in a suit against the Court of Wards, which has been dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff-appellant failed to comply with the provisions of section 54 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act of 1912. The facts are admitted. The appellant filed objections in a partition case instituted by the Court of Wards. On 4th March 1918 an order was passed by the Assistant Collector, under section 111 of the Land Revenue Act of 1901, requiring the plaintiff to institute within three months a suit in the Civil Court for the determination of the question in dispute. On 20th May 1918 he gave notice to the Collector as required by section 54 of the Court of Wards Act. On 29th May, nine days later, he filed a suit out of which this appeal arises, instead of waiting for two months as required by the section. The case is a hard one, as, if the plaintiff had waited for the expiry of two months after he gave notice, his suit would have been beyond the period of three months allowed in the order passed under section 111 of the Land Revenue Act. In fact where such a suit is brought against the Court of Wards, the effect of section 111 read with section 54 of the Court of Wards Act is to compel the plaintiff to give notice to the Collector within one month of the order being passed. It is true that there is no reason why he should not give notice promptly, as he knows that he has only three months within which to bring the suit and that if he fails to bring it within that time the objection will be decided against him. At the same time we think that this was a result not contemplated when section 54 was enacted and that an amendment of the section to provide for special cases like this is urgently needed. Section 15 of the Limitation Act does not apply to the case, as the period of limitation is not one prescribed by the Limitation Act itself and, therefore, section 29 of the same Act excludes its application. The lower Courts have cited certain cases in which the requirements of section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure have been dispensed with in the case of a suit for an injunction. These cases are not, however, analogous, as they were all cases in which there was an imminent danger of the subject matter of the suit being destroyed or of irreparable injury being done to the plaintiff if the suit was not brought at once. We are unable in this case to find any reason for dispensing with the imperative provisions of section 54, and, as we have pointed out, it was in no way impossible for the appellant to have complied with that section and yet to have brought his suit within the three months allowed by the order of the Assistant Collector.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal but under the circumstances we direct that the parties bear their own costs in this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 75—Liability of Railway Company, extent of—Exemption from liability—Burden of proof—Interpretation of Statutes—Legislative discussions, whether can be looked at.

In order to avoid liability under section 75 of the Railways Act, a Railway Company must establish, first, that the articles composing the consignment were articles mentioned in the Second Schedule to the Act, and secondly, that the total value of the consignment exceeded Rs. 100. There is no justification for reading the section as though it meant "when any articles mentioned in the Second Schedule are articles of intrinsic value and contained in a parcel or package delivered to a railway administration for carriage by railway" [p. 645, cols. 1 & 2.]

In interpreting the meaning of a word in a legislative enactment, it is the duty of the Court to refrain from examining the discussion and the views of the legislative authority which enacted the Statute. It has to look at the meaning of the word only. [p. 645, col. 1.]

Civil revision against the order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Cawnpore, dated the 19th December 1919.

Mr. K. N. Katju, for the Applicants.

Mr. C. U. Sastry, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This application raises a point of some little interest. The plaintiff sued the East Indian Railway Company for damage done to a consignment containing machine made lace. The consignment was of over the value of Rs. 100, but the value and the contents had not been declared and no extra freight had been paid by way of compensation for increased risks.

The Railway Company pleaded that under the provisions of section 75, Act IX of 1890, it was not liable

The contention on the other side is that the word "lace" in the Second Schedule of Act IX of 1890 means hand made lace and not machine made lace. In support of this contention their learned Counsel has referred to 28 and 29 Victoria, Cap. 94, section 1. This was an Act to amend the Carriers Act in England and this section laid down that where the word "lace" was used in the Carriers Act it was to be construed as not including machine made lace, but the fact that this Amending Act was passed is no authority for an interpretation that the word "lace" standing by itself does not include machine made lace. As I interpret the Amending Act, it simply excludes from the provisions of the Carriers Act machine made lace. Had the Act not been passed, machine made lace would have been included in the provision. The passing of the Amending Act excludes machine made lace from the operation of the Carriers Act in England, but in the Indian Railways Act the word "lace" must necessarily include both hand made lace and machine made lace. If the Act contained the word "boots", it could hardly be contested seriously that the word "boots" means only hand made boots and excludes machine made boots. Applying the ordinary meaning of the word "lace" both in colloquial and in business and technical senses, machine made lace is as much lace as hand made lace.

The learned Counsel for the applicants has further pressed that his clients should succeed unless it be found that the lace in question is of exceptional value. In support of his argument he relied on the decision in Sarat Chandra Bose v. Secretary of State for India (1), in which a Bench of the Calcutta High Court laid down that the word

(1) 14 Ind. Cas. 726; 39 C. 1029.

"shawls" in the Second Schedule of Act IX of 1890 could only refer to Indian shawls of special value and could not be taken to apply to shawls of inferior value. If the principle in that decision be accepted, it would be possible by analogy to infer that the word "lace" in the Second Schedule meant only lace of high value. But I regret that I am unable to accept either the reasoning or the conclusion of the learned Judges who formed that Bench. They had to interpret the meaning of the word "shawl". They found what the interpretation of the word "shawl" was in the English language, but they proceeded to consider what was the probable meaning which the Legislature intended to apply to such a term when the schedule was first drawn up and how far its meaning was to be determined by reference to the other items in the schedule. With due respect to the learned Judges who decided that appeal, I would point out that their first principle of interpretation is not in accord with the principles of interpretation known to the law. It is the duty of a Court interpreting the meaning of a word in a legislative enactment to refrain usually from examining the discussions and the views of the legislative authority which enacted the Statute. It has to look at the meaning of the word only. In the next place, I cannot find the slightest authority for supposing that those who enacted the Statute intended the word 'shawls' to mean only expensive shawls. It is quite clear from the schedule that many articles were included which were necessarily of small intrinsic value, for example, watches, clocks and time-pieces of any description. This must include the cheapest watches, clocks and time pieces. Government stamps will equally include a Government stamp valued at half anna and a Government stamp valued at Rs. 1,000. In order to avoid liability under the provisions of section 75, Act IX of 1890, a Railway Company has to establish two conditions. The first is that the articles composing the consignment are articles mentioned in the Second Schedule. The second is that the total value of the consignment exceeds Rs. 100. There is nothing from which an inference can be drawn that each article in the consignment must be of value. The railway would be equally protected in the case of a consignment of Rs. 150 worth of half-anna stamps as it would be in the case of a consignment of one stamp worth Rs. 150. There is no justification for reading section 75 as though it meant "when any articles mentioned in the Second Schedule are articles of intrinsic value and contained in any parcel or package delivered to a railway administration for carriage by railway." That is how the Calcutta High Court have read the section. I regret that I am unable to adopt the same interpretation. I accept the view of the learned Small Cause Court Judge and dismiss this application with costs.

Application dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 73, O. XXXIV, r. 14—Attachment of property—Mortgage executed during pendency of attachment—Simple money decree obtained by mortgagee—Rateable distribution.

Where a mortgagee under a mortgage, executed while the property was under attachment, claimed rateable distribution under section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code, in respect of a simple money decree for interest due on his mortgage:

Held, that the disability imposed by Order XXXIV, rule 14, of the Code did not apply to him, and that he was entitled to rateable distribution. [p. 646, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Sitapur, dated the 31st October 1917, upholding the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, Tahsil Biswan, dated the 19th August 1917.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant filed certain suits against Tikadas and Khushaldas for the recovery of money and obtained an attachment before judgment of certain property belonging to the debtors.

Subsequently he obtained decrees against those persons. During the pendency of this attachment Tikadas and Khushaldas made a simple mortgage of the property attached in favour of the defendant-respondent, who subsequently obtained a decree for money on account of the interest due on the said mortgage, relinquishing his lien over the mortgaged property. Meanwhile the plaintiff-appellant proceeded with the execution of his decree, but before the property attached by him could be brought to sale the defendant respondent obtained an attachment of the property and applied for a rateable distribution of the sale-proceeds under section 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure The Court which realized the sale-proceeds allowed a rateable distribution to be made. The validity of that order is challenged in the suit which has given rise to this appeal.

The Court below dismissed the claim, holding that Order XXXIV, rule 14, of the Code of Civil Procedure did not debar the defendant-respondent from claiming a rateable distribution of the sale proceeds.

Order XXXIV, rule 14, is intended for the protection of the mortgagor. It does not absolutely forbid a sale of the mortgaged property at the instance of the mortgagee. It merely indicates the method in which the sale can be effected in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage. Section 73 provides a possible substitute for the method prescribed for proceeding with the sale. It aims at preventing an unnecessary multiplicity of proceedings, or as observed in Mohan Lal v. Humayun Jah (1) to secure an equitable administration of the property by making the sale-proceeds divisible in a particular manner. A mortgagee occupies for the purposes of rateable distribution a privileged position. The defendant-respondent, however, claims no privilege. He wants to be placed on the same footing as the execution creditor. In fact qua the execution creditor, he is not a mortgagee at all.

Section 64 of the Code of Civil Procedure lays down that where an attachment has been made, any private transfer of the property attached or of any interest therein shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment. So far as the execution creditor who had made the attachment is concerned, the mortgage made by Tikadas and Khushaldas in favour of the defendant-respondent is a void transaction. The defendant-respondent cannot enforce his rights as a mortgagee on the basis of that mortgage or obtain a decree for sale so as to bind the execution creditor, so long as the attachment obtained by the execution creditor subsists. The disability imposed by Order XXXIV, rule 14, of the Code does not, therefore, apply to him.

On behalf of the plaintiff-appellant reliance is placed on certain observations in Bithal Das v. Nand Kishore (2) emphasizing that section 295 of the old Code, corresponding with section 73 of the present Code, was not designed to enlarge in any way the rights of the decree holders or place at their disposal the proceeds of property which they could not have themselves attached and sold. But as explained in Ram Das v. Munna (3), Gouri Sunker Panday v. Abhoyeswari Dabee (4) and Nathubhai Motilal v. Bai Ujam (5) Order XXXIV, rule 14, does not prevent an attachment being made, though the property may not be capable of immediate sale. Section 73 recognises the right of the prior and subsequent incumbrancers to share in the sale-proceeds in certain circumstances.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

The suit was dismissed as barred by limitation, the trial Court holding that the cause of action accrued to the plaintiff on the date the mortgage was made, i. e., on the 20th September 1907. On appeal to the High Court:

Held, that the fact of the mortgage having been made did not affect the plaintiff so long as no effort was made to sell the property in enforcement of the mortgage, and that the cause of action accrued to the plaintiff on the date on which the defendant attempted to sell the property, and that as the suit was instituted within six years of that date, it was not time-barred.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Moradabad, dated the 3rd of April 1917.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble S. Raza Ali, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The judgment of the Court below cannot, in our opinion, be supported. The learned Judge has dismissed the suit on the ground that it is barred by limitation. The facts of the case are set forth in his judgment. It appears that Muhammadi Begam and one Agha Meer mortgaged the property in suit on the 20th of September 1907 to the respondents. After this mortgage the plaintiff brought a suit on the 14th of December 1907 against the respondents' mortgagors to recover possession of the property mortgaged. She obtained a decree from the Court of first instance and that decree was affirmed by the High Court. To that suit the present respondents were not parties, and, therefore, the decree in that suit is not binding on them. They brought a suit on the basis of their mortgage and obtained a decree against the mortgagors on the 5th of August 1912. They made the present plaintiff a party to that suit but the suit was dismissed against her with costs. However, in execution of that decree they have applied for sale of the mortgaged property which the plaintiff claims to be her own property. The plaintiff has brought this suit for a declaration that the property is hers and is not liable to sale in execution of the defendants' decree. The learned Judge holds that the plaintiff's cause of action arose on the 20th of September 1907 when the mortgage in favour of the defendants respondents was made. This view is clearly erroneous, The fact of a mortgage having been made did not affect her so long as no effort was made to sell the property in enforcement of the mortgage. This has now been done and the plaintiff's cause of action accrued on the date on which attempt was made by the defendants to sell the property. The suit is admittedly within six years from that date and, therefore, is not time-barred. We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and remand the case to that Court with directions to re-admit it under its original number in the register and to dispose of it on the merits. The appellant will have her costs of this appeal, including fees on the higher scale. Other costs will abide the event.

Revision against the decree of the Officiating District Judge, Rae Bareli, dated the 8th February 1919, setting aside the decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, dated the 2nd November 1918.

Mr. J. P. C. Bhattacharji, for the Applicant.

Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—On the 13th February 1913 the opposite parties obtained an ex parte decree against the applicant, who is a resident of the Mirzapur district, for Rs. 92 and costs. The decree was passed by the Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh, exercising the powers of a Small Cause Court. The decree was sent for execution to Mirzapur, with the result that the judgment-debtor was brought under arrest. On the application of the judgment-debtor time was granted to him by the Court executing the decree to get the ex parte decree set aside. He filed, it is said, security in that Court for complying with the decree in case he was not successful.

On the 12th July 1916 he applied to the Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh, exercising Small Cause Court powers, to have the ex parte decree set aside. The Subordinate Judge directed him to file security as required by section 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887). The judgment-debtor filed that security on the 9th August 1916. His application was thereupon admitted but before the learned Judge could proceed with the hearing of the application, he was transferred and was succeeded by another Subordinate Judge who, in his capacity as a Subordinate Judge, possessed no Small Cause Court powers. The latter proceeded to hear the application on the merits, though there was a Munsif possessing Small Cause Court powers in the district, who had jurisdiction to hear the application under section 35 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act. He eventually dismissed the application on the merits. On appeal his order was set aside by the District Judge, who directed the judgment-debtor to take the application and present it to the proper Court.

It is argued on behalf of the opposite parties that the application made by the judgment debtor to have the ex parte decree set aside ought to have been summarily rejected, as it was not accompanied by the security required by section 15 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act. But it is not necessary to go into that matter at this stage. The question at present for consideration is whether the successor of the Subordinate Judge who passed the decree had jurisdiction to hear the application, when he did not possess any Small Cause Court powers and a Munsif who had jurisdiction over the cause had it. Where there is a Court possessing Small Cause Court powers, all pending proceedings which are within the cognizance of that Court should be transferred to it. This was not done in this case. The Subordinate Judge who succeeded proceeded to hear the matter as if it was proceeding on the regular side. His order was clearly ultra vires and was rightly set aside.

The next question is whether the hearing of the application should now proceed in the Court of the Munsif of Kunda which, on the Small Cause Court side, had jurisdiction to hear the application when the Subordinate Judge who exercised the Small Cause Court powers and before whom the application was pending was transferred, or whether the proceeding should be continued in the Court of the present Subordinate Judge who has been invested with the Small Cause Court powers since the 5th March 1919.

It seems to me that the Munsif of Kunda, in the exercise of his Small Cause Court powers, has jurisdiction to hear the application, but it would be better that it should be transferred for disposal to the Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh, who now exercises Small Cause Court powers, so that the Court which originally passed the decree may decide the application on the merits. No application has yet been made by either party for the transfer of the proceeding, but it is open to this Court to do so under section 24 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Counsel for the parties do not deny that the conclusion at which the learned District Judge has arrived is correct, although they are not agreed as to his right to entertain the appeal. This Court can, however, discharge the order passed by the Subordinate Judge, refusing to set aside the ex parte decree on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to hear it.

The application is, therefore, disallowed, except in so far that the order passed by the Subordinate Judge on the 2nd November 1918 is set aside. The application pending before the Munsif of Kunda in the exercise of Small Cause Court powers is transferred for disposal to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh on the Small Cause Court side. No order is made as to the costs of this proceedings.

Application disallowed.

Where a plaintiff sues for a decree declaratory of his right to a half share in a cultivatory holding he is also entitled to ask for mesne profits, and it is open to the Court in granting a declaratory decree to also decree mesne profits.

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Meerut, dated the 17th May 1917.

Mr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellant.

Messrs. G. Agarwala, P. L. Banerji and H. S. Gupta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to a half share of certain cultivatory holding. He alleged that he and the defendant were each entitled to a half share of the holding and that the defendant had taken possession of a larger share than that to which he was entitled. The plaintiff, therefore, claimed a declaration that he was entitled to a half share. He also claimed possession and mesne profits. The Court below has granted him a decree declaring him entitled to a half share, but in view of the provisions of section 32 of the Agra Tenancy Act has refused to grant him possession of a half share as this might amount to a partition of the holding. A decree for mesne profits has also been granted. In this appeal, which has been preferred on behalf of the defendant, it is not urged that the declaratory decree passed in the plaintiff's favour is not a proper decree, but it is contended that a decree for mesne profits should not have been granted in a suit for a declaratory decree. We think that this contention is without force. According to the findings of the Courts below the defendant was in possession of a larger share than that to which he was entitled and he appropriated the profits of that share, thereby excluding the plaintiff from such profits as he was entitled to get from the property. The plaintiff has the right to recover from the defendant the profits which the defendant, who was wrongfully in possession, had appropriated; that is to say, he has the right to get mesne profits as defined in the Code of Civil Procedure. There is no reason why the plaintiff should not be compensated for the loss of the profits which the defendant has appropriated. Such profits could not have been claimed in the Revenue Court under any of the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act. The parties are not co sharers in the Zemindari, but are co-sharers in a cultivatory holding only. In our opinion there is no bar to a suit of this description. We see no reason to differ from the view taken in Ashiq Husain v. Asghari Begam (1), to which one of us was a party. We dismiss the appeal with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114, ill. (i)—Pro-note in possession of maker—Presumption—Allegation of theft—Burden of proof.

If a pro-note is in the hands of the maker, there is a presumption that it has been paid off. If the drawee alleges that the maker came into possession of the note unlawfully, the onus is on him to prove it.

Mr. N. N. Burjorjee, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. E. Lambert, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 10th July 1915 the defendant executed a pro-note for Rs. 1,000 with interest in favour of the two plaintiffs and Ma Sai deceased. Ma Sai died on the 21st July 1916. The plaintiffs sued on the note and alleged that the defendant had stolen the note shortly after the death of Mai Sai. It is admitted that Ma Sai had at one time possession of the note. The defendant in her written statement admitted execution of the note and pleaded payment to Ma Sai about six or seven months before her death and denied the theft. The Sub-Divisional Court found that the plaintiffs had not proved the theft and decreed the suit because the defendant had not proved payment. On appeal the Divisional Court also found that the plaintiffs had not proved the theft, and the learned Judge says, "although it (the evidence of the defendant's three witnesses as to payment) would not be sufficient by itself, it should, I think, be held sufficient to shift the burden of proof to the plaintiffs in view of the fact that they admit that the pro-note passed into the possession of the appellant." And he set aside the decree of the lower Court and dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs now appeal.

It is clear that both the Courts are satisfied that the plaintiffs have not proved the theft; and if we assume that both Courts are also satisfied that the defendant has not proved payment, it is purely a question of presumption or onus. Mr Burjorjee for the appellants refers me to the case of Chuni Kuar v. Udai Ram (1), which is a case very similar to the present case. The plaintiff there alleged that the defendant had surreptitiously abstracted the bond. The defendant alleged that he had paid up the bond and that it had been returned to him; but that the bond was with a third party who refused to give it up and who was colluding with the plaintiff. In that case the learned Judges held that the defendant having admitted execution, the onus lay on the defendant to prove payment or to produce the note. Section 114, illustration (i), of the Evidence Act shows that if the pro note is in the hands of the maker, there is a presumption that it has been paid off. The presumption arises from the fact of possession of the note by the maker. It is clear from the cases of both parties that the defendant was in possession of the note before suit. The presumption, therefore, arises that by that time the note had been paid off. The learned Judges in Chuni Kuar's case (1) did not go into that aspect of the case; and although the plaintiffs allege that the defendant only came into possession of the note after Ma Sai's death and then by means of a theft, the onus is shifted on to the plaintiffs to prove these facts; and they have failed to do so in the opinion of both the lower Courts.

I think this suit was rightly dismissed by the lower Appellate Court and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

AZMAT v. BISHAN PRAKUS.

land—Burden of proof—Settlement records, entry in, value of—Rebuttal of entry—Adverse possession of tenant, effect of—Rent, assessment of, suit for—Remedy of landlord.

Plaintiff, the proprietor of an estate within which were situated certain lands in the occupation of the defendants, brought a suit to recover possession thereof, alleging that they formed his zerait lands. The defendants resisted the claim on the ground that the disputed lands were not the zerait lands of the proprietor, but were part and parcel of the raiyati holding for which they paid rent to the landlord. The entries in the Settlement khatian, by which the plaintiff was not bound, were against the plaintiff and he failed to prove that the lands were zerait as alleged by him. The lower Appellate Court, without considering the question of the length of the time during which the defendants were in occupation, held that, although the plaintiff had failed to establish the specific case alleged by him, he should get a decree for ejectment on the ground that he was entitled to recover possession as the defendants had failed to discharge the burden that lay upon them to establish a tenancy under the plaintiff in respect of the disputed lands. The defendants appealed to the High Court and contended, first, that the lower Appellate Court had on an erroneous ground considered the Settlement proceedings to be a nullity:

Held, that though the entries in the Settlement khatian afforded prima facie evidence in support of the defendants' case, the plaintiff had, as he was bound to do, rebutted that evidence. [p. 651, col. 2; p. 652, col. 1.]

It was next urged that the burden of proof had been erroneously thrown on the defendants:

Held, that the decision of the lower Appellate Court could not be supported and the case must be remitted to it for re-decision. [p. 652, col 2.]

Lastly, it was objected that the question of the defendant's possession ought to have been tried:

Held, that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in not considering the length and character of the defendants' possession, for if they had been in possession for over twelve years and had treated the disputed lands as part of their tenancy, the only remedy of the landlord was by a suit for assessment of rent, because the claim for recovery of actual possession had been extinguished by the adverse possession of the defendants. [p 652, col. 2.]

Where the defendants in an action in ejectment are tenants of the plaintiff and the only dispute is whether the disputed lands are within or without the boundaries of that tenancy, the burden of proof depends upon the relative situation of the land in controversy and the admitted lands of the tenancy held by the defendant. [p. 652, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Muzafferpur, dated the 18th August 1909, reversing that of the Munsif of Motihari, dated the 18th September 1908.

Babu Lakshmi Narain Singh, for the Appellants.

Babu Akshoy Kumar Banerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the defendants in an action in ejectment. The case for the plaintiff-respondent is that he is the proprietor of the estate within which the disputed lands, now in occupation of the defendants, are situated, that they form zerait lands and that consequently he is entitled to recover possession thereof from the defendants. The defendants resisted the claim, mainly on the ground that these lands were not the zerait lands of the proprietor but were part and parcel of the raiyati holding for which they paid rent to the landlord. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. Upon appeal the Subordinate Judge has made a decree in favour of the plaintiff. He has found that the Settlement Khatians, the entries wherein are admittedly against the plaintiff, are not binding upon him, but he has held that the plaintiff has failed to prove that the land is zerait as alleged by him. The Subordinate Judge has held, however, that though the plaintiff has failed to establish the specific case alleged by him, he should get a decree for ejectment on the ground that as proprietor he is entitled to recover possession, unless the defendants establish their alleged tenancy. From this point of view, the Subordinate Judge has examined the evidence on the part of the defendants and come to the conclusion that they have failed to discharge the burden that lay upon them to establish a tenancy right under the plaintiff in respect of the disputed lands. He has not, however, considered the question of the length of time during which the defendants have been in occupation, because, in his opinion, possession even for a considerable length of time does not indicate any tenancy right in the land. On the present appeal, the defendants have contended that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge is open to objection on three grounds, namely, first, that he has on an erroneous ground considered the settlement proceedings to be a nullity, secondly, that the burden of proof has been erroneously thrown upon the defendants, and thirdly, that the question of possession ought to have been tried. There is no substance in the first of these contentions but the second and third grounds must prevail.

In so far as the first ground is concerned, there can be no room for dispute that the settlement records afford prima facie evidence in support of the case alleged by the defendants. The plaintiff is bound to rebut that evidence: and although the conclusions of the Subordinate Judge upon this part of the case are not very accurately expressed, it is plain that he has found in substance that the plaintiff has rebutted that evidence. He has pointed out that there was no trial of the objection taken by the landlord; under a misapprehension the objection was treated by the Revenue Authorities as falling under a clause within which it could not be included; in other words, the Settlement Authorities treated the case as if it raised a question of the nature and amount of rent payable and did not involve any question of the status of the tenants and the true character of the land in dispute. There was, therefore, in substance no decision of the objections taken by the landlord; and the rejection of his objections by the Revenue Authorities was thus obviously erroneous. Under these circumstances, the Subordinate Judge has correctly held that the evidence furnished by the Record of Rights has been amply rebutted.

In so far as the second objection is concerned, it is clear that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge cannot be supported. He has held, upon the authority of the decision in Narsing Narain Singh v. Dharam Thakur (1), that the onus is upon the defendants to establish the tenancy as alleged by them. The case relied upon, however, is clearly distinguishable. In that case the landlord sued to recover possession of land. The defendant contended that he held a tenancy right in the disputed property. The burden, therefore, was rightly cast upon him to establish the tenancy as alleged by him. In the case before us the defendants are tenants of the plaintiff. The only dispute is whether the lands now in controversy are included within the boundaries of that tenancy or lie outside them. The plaintiff relies upon the decision in Nanda Lal Goswami v. Jaineswar Haldar (2) in support of the proposition that the onus is upon the tenants to establish the tenancy, while the defendants rely upon Rajendro Kumar Bose v. Mohim Chandra Ghose (3) in support of the view that the burden lies upon the plaintiff to show that the lands of which he seeks to recover possession are outside the tenancy held by the defendants. It may seem difficult, at first sight, to reconcile these two decisions. But the true rule is that laid down by Mr. Justice Banerjee in Sheodeni Roy v. Chowdhury Chatoorbhuj Roy (4), where that learned Judge pointed out that the burden of proof in a case of this description must depend upon the relative situation of the land in controversy and the admitted land of the tenancy held by the defendant. The Subordinate Judge has not examined the case from this point of view. The matter, therefore, must be reconsidered.

In so far as the third ground urged by the appellant is concerned, it is clearly well founded and must prevail. The Subordinate Judge has not considered the length of time during which the defendants have been in occupation of this land. If they have been in possession for over twelve years and have treated this land as part of their tenancy, the only remedy of the landlord is by a suit for assessment of rent, because the claim for recovery of actual possession has been extinguished by the adverse possession of the defendants. Ishan Chandra Mitter v. Raja Ramranjan Chakarbutty (5). The length and character of the possession of the defendants are from this point of view very important elements for consideration.

The result is that this appeal must be allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the case remanded to him in order that these two questions may be decided. As the true bearing and importance of these questions do not appear to have been appreciated in either of the Courts below, the Subordinate Judge will be at liberty to take additional evidence; such evidence may be taken either by him or under his direction by the Court of first instance. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Arbitration—Award—Costs including fee of arbitrators awarded to one party—Fee not fixed by Court before preparation of decree—Court, power of, to fix fee after preparation of decree.

Where an arbitration award provides for the payment by the plaintiff of the costs including the arbitrators' fee, but the Court omits to fix the fee before the decree is prepared, it is open to the Court to fix the fee after preparation of the decree.

Civil revision against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Mussoorie, dated the 17th August 1918.

Mr. L. M. Banerji, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The arbitration award provided that the applicant Wilson should pay the costs. The costs included the arbitrators' fees. A decree was prepared under the terms of the award. After the decree was passed according to the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge, it was discovered that the fees of the arbitrators had not been fixed. The learned Judge fixed the fees. We see no reason not to accept the conclusions that the fees had not been fixed, and that he had a right to fix the fees. We do not consider he fixed the fees too high. Thus the case stands that, if he had fixed the fees before the decree his action would have been correct and could not have been challenged; is the case altered in any way because he fixed the fees after the decree had been passed? We cannot see that there was anything to prevent him from doing this, and there is nothing upon which we can interfere in revision. We, therefore, dismiss this application with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Application dismissed.

TUN KYIN v. MA MAI TIN.

LOWER BURMA CHIEF COURT.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 117 OF 1918.
January 27, 1919.
Present:—Mr. Justice Ormond.
TUN KYIN, A MINOR BY HIS GUARDIAN MAUNG MYAT KYAW—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
MA MAI TIN—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Burmese Law, Buddhist—Minor, whether competent to enter into contract of marriage—Breach of promise of marriage—Damages, suit for, maintainability of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 11.

Under section 11 of the Contract Act the competency of a Burmese Buddhist youth under 18 years of age, to make a contract of marriage, must be determined by the Burmese Buddhist Law. [p. 654, col. 1.]

Under Burmese Buddhist Law, ordinarily, a promise of marriage by a minor is voidable and the marriage of a minor youth or of a girl under 20 years of age requires the consent of the parents, unless the parties are steadfastly determined to marry. [p. 654, col. 2.]

Where, however, a young man and a young woman have clandestine intercourse, the parents of the former are not at liberty to withhold their consent to the marriage, and if the young man repudiates the young woman, he must pay her his kobo. [p. 654, col. 2; p. 655, col. 1.]

Mr. Ba Dun, for the Appellant.

Mr. Thein Maung, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Ma Mai Tin obtained a decree for Rs. 100 as damages for breach of promise of marriage against Maung Tun Kyin, a minor, who was represented by his father as guardian ad litem. The defendant appeals on the ground that, being a minor, his contract was void under section 11 of the Contract Act.

The defendant, a boy between 15 and 16 years of age, promised to marry the plaintiff, a girl 19 years of age. He then seduced her and subsequently refused to marry her; and the plaintiff had a child by him. His parents objected to a marriage between their son and the plaintiff.

In Maung Hmaing v. Ma Pwa Me (1) it was assumed that a promise of marriage did not involve a "question regarding marriage" and must, therefore, be governed by the Contract Act rather than by Buddhist Law. But in Upper Burma it was held in Kan Gaung v. Mi Hla Chok (2) that a promise of marriage was a question of marriage and must be determined in the case of Buddhists according to the Burmese Buddhist Law. I think the validity of a contract of marriage is a question of contract, though it may involve a question regarding marriage, e.g., a contract of marriage between two persons who are within the prohibited degrees of affinity; the validity of such a marriage would be determined by the personal law of the parties, and if such a marriage would be void, the contract would be void under sections 23 and 24 of the Contract Act, because the object or consideration was unlawful or immoral.

(1) S. J. L. B. 533.
(2) 2 U. B. R. (1907-09), Contract, 5.

The Majority Act (section 2) does not 'affect the capacity of any person to act in the matter of marriage,' and to enter into negotiations for a marriage or to make a contract of marriage is to 'act in the matter of marriage' A person may attain majority for some purposes, e.g, of 'acting in the matter of marriage,' though not for other purposes. And section 11 of the Contract Act merely says:—"Every person is competent to contract who is of the age of majority according to the law to which he is subject, and who is of sound mind, and is not disqualified from contracting by any law to which he is subject." The effect of the Privy Council decision in Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (3) is not that all contracts made by a person under 18 years of age are void, but that a contract made by a person who by reason of infancy is incompetent to make such a contract is void.

Thus under the Contract Act the competency of a Burmese Buddhist youth under 18 years of age, to make a contract of marriage, must be determined by the Burmese Buddhist Law.

The consent of the parties is necessary for all Burmese Buddhist marriages and the Dhammathats (section 33 of the Digest, Volume II) enjoin parents to give their children in marriage before they attain the age of 16. It follows, therefore, that a person under 16 years of age, if physically competent for marriage, can give a valid consent to marry and can make a valid contract of marriage. But such a contract, though valid, may be voidable; in which case a suit for damages for breach of promise of marriage against the minor would not lie. And the consent of the 'minor's' parents or guardian may be necessary for the validity of the marriage of a 'minor', in which case, if such consent is refused, the 'minor' would not be liable in damages, because his promise must be taken to have been made subject to such consent being obtained: and the plaintiff would not be able to show that the failure of the marriage was due to the 'minors' refusal to carry out his promise, the parents having refused their consent. In a recent case in Upper Burma, Maung Nyein v. Ma Myin (4), Mr. Heald (A. J. C.) held that a Burmese Buddhist youth can contract a valid marriage without his parents' consent at any time after he is physically competent for marriage and is liable in damages for a breach of promise of marriage. Mr. Heald did not consider whether such a contract was voidable or not. And the reason for his decision that the parents' consent to the marriage of their minor son is unnecessary was that the Dhammathats do not specify any age above which sons can marry without their parents' consent, and that as a matter of fact Burmese Buddhist boys who are of an age to marry do habitually marry the girl of their choice without any regard to their parents' wishes. I do not think these reasons are sufficient for a Court to deprive parents of their control over their children. I am inclined to think that under Burmese Buddhist Law, ordinarily a promise of marriage by a minor is voidable; and that the marriage of a minor youth, or of a girl under 20 years of age, requires the consent of the parents unless the parties are "steadfastly determined to marry": See Crown v. Chan Mya (5) It is, however unnecessary to decide these questions in the present case, because the plaintiff had a child by the defendant. The Manugye says:—"If a young man and a young woman have clandestine intercourse, the parents of the former are not at liberty to withhold their consent to the marriage, and if the young man repudiates the young woman, he shall pay her his kobo"—Section 149 of the Digest, Volume II. This shows that in such a case the parents' consent is unnecessary to the marriage and that the promise is binding on the youth who has to pay the girl his kobo. And apparently it makes no difference whether the clandestine intercourse takes place before or after the promise of marriage.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 20 (c)—Place of suing—Partnership—Suit for taking accounts—Court, proper.

In the absence of proof of an agreement that accounts should be taken elsewhere, a suit for the taking of accounts of a partnership should be instituted in the Court within whose jurisdiction he business of the partnership was carried on.

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Jhansi, dated the 20th November 1918.

Mr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. N. Ohadha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this appeal is whether the Subordinate Judge's Court at Jhansi had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The parties entered into a partnership to carry on business at a place called Jwalagunj in the District of Jalaun, which is within the jurisdiction of the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Jhansi. The partnership came to an end before the institution of the suit. The claim was that an account of the partnership be taken and the balance which might be found due may be awarded to the plaintiffs. The first defendant, who is the principal defendant in the suit, contended that there was a contract between the parties that the final accounts should be rendered at Cawnpore and payments should be made there and that the Jhansi Court had, therefore, no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The Court of first instance found in his favour and dismissed the suit. The learned Judge set aside the order of dismissal on appeal and remanded the case. The learned Judge was, in our opinion, right in holding that as the partnership business was carried on within the jurisdiction of the Court at Jhansi, the cause of action arose within that jurisdiction and the suit was maintainable in that Court. No doubt if there was a specific contract between the parties that the rendition of accounts and the final settlement thereof should take place at Cawnpore and that payments should be made there and not at the place where the business was carried on, the Court at Jhansi would not have jurisdiction. But in the present case it has not been satisfactorily established that there was a contract of the description alleged by the defendant. The learned Judge came to no definite finding on the point, though it seems from his remarks that he was not inclined to accept the view of the learned Subordinate Judge. We have looked into the evidence and we are unable to say that the evidence is so clear and satisfactory as to warrant the conclusion that the contract between the parties was that accounts should be taken at Cawnpore and Cawnpore only and that payments should be made there. In this view we think the order of the Court below remanding the case is correct. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182 (5)—Execution of decree—Oral application to enter up partial satisfaction, whether step-in-aid of execution—Application, whether can be presumed.

An oral application to the Court to enter partial satisfaction of the decree is a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of clause (5) of Article 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act.

Even where there is no actual application on the record, such an application may be presumed in cases where the order made in execution is of such a nature that the Court would not have made it except upon an application for that purpose.

Mr. J. R. Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. N. Palit, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

PRATT, J.—The only point for consideration is whether on the 13th June 1911 there was an application in accordance with law for execution, or to take some step-in-aid of execution, within the meaning of clause 5 under Article 182 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act.

On that date a petition was put in by the plaintiff's agent, which purported to be with consent of and signed by the 2nd defendant, to the effect that Rs. 1,000 had been paid to plaintiff in partial satisfaction of the decree from the proceeds of a consent sale of the mortgaged premises, and prayer was made that a final decree for the balance might be drawn up.

The Court on receipt of the application passed the following order:—"Enter up satisfaction to that extent (i.e, Rs. 1,000) and make out final decree for the balance."

It was held by the lower Courts that an application for drawing up a final personal decree, not being a proper application, could not rank as an application for a step in aid of execution.

Mr. Das for appellant admits that this finding is correct but he contends that there was an application to enter up partial satisfaction as evidenced by the fact that an order to that effect was made, and that application would rank as an application for a step in aid.

There is ample authority for holding that even where there is no actual application on the record, such an application may be presumed in cases where the order made in execution is of such a nature that the Court would not have made it except upon an application for that purpose.

In Trimbak Bapuji Patvardhan v. Kashinath Vidyadhar Gosavi (1) the authorities on the subject were fully considered and it was laid down that the application need not be in writing and that where the law does not require a writing, an oral application satisfies its requirements.

After citing cases the judgment proceeds: "And where an order made in aid of execution is of such a nature as that the Court would not have made it without an application by the judgment-creditor, it may be presumed that due application has been made for it."

Following that ruling it is a legitimate inference from the fact that the Judge ordered the entry of partial satisfaction that the decree-holder expressed a verbal desire to have such entry of satisfaction, although in his written petition he did not expressly ask for this to be done.

It seems clear the Court would not have entered up satisfaction, unless the decree-holder expressed a desire that it should do so.

On this view there was an application for a step-in-aid of execution on the 13th June 1911 and the application of appellant was not barred by limitation.

I would set aside the judgment and order of the lower Courts and direct that the application for execution be allowed with costs throughout.

ORMOND, J.—I agree.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 579 OF 1919.

July 30, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Wallach.

JABRUDDIN—ACCUSED—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 110, 117, 439—Proceedings under s. 110—Magistrate, powers of—Evidence, character of—Revision—High Court, power of interference of.

The High Court is not a Court of Appeal for cases under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and it is only in very rare cases that it will interfere [p. 657, col. 2.]

Section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, coupled with section 117 of the Code, gives very extensive powers to Magistrates and should be administered with scrupulous care, and materials ought not to be brought on to the record which are not legally admissible in evidence and which are liable, if on the record, to prejudice the accused. [p. 657, col. 2]

Specific instances of crime in which the accused is suspected, are not good evidence and do not fall within the meaning of "general repute" under section 117, because suspicion cannot take the place of proof that a man has committed an offence Similarly, history sheets are not evidence, especially where the official who produces them is not himself responsible for all the entries thereon [p. 658, cols 1 & 2.]

Where a Court disbelieves the evidence adduced by an accused person, it ought to record specific reasons for such disbelief; the mere fact that, assuming the accused is guilty, it was easy for the accused to get witnesses of fairly good status to give evidence on his behalf, is no ground for disbelieving the witnesses. [p. 659, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Moradabad, dated the 14th June 1919.

Mr. Nehal Chand and Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT:—Jabruddin, the applicant in this revision, has been bound over for three years under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by a Magistrate of the first class in Moradabad and, on reference under section 123 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the learned Sessions Judge of Moradabad has confirmed this order. The applicant has come to this Court in revision, and I have been asked by his learned Counsel to take into consideration the evidence which has been produced on behalf of the prosecution as well as that produced on behalf of his client. It has been remarked more than once by learned Judges of this Court that the High Court is not a Court of Appeal for cases under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The responsibility of administering that section rests primarily with the District authorities. That section coupled with section 117 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, gives very wide powers, and necessarily so, to the trying Magistrate and it is only in very rare cases that this Court interferes with his decision, when it has been upheld either on appeal by the District Magistrate or on reference, under section 123 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, by the Sessions Judge. Seeing how extensive the powers of the trial Court are, it is all the more necessary that Magistrates ought to administer it with scrupulous care and ought not to allow materials to be brought on the record which are not legally admissible in evidence and which are liable, if on the record, to prejudice the accused before the Court. In this case unfortunately we have materials on the record which the learned Assistant Government Advocate frankly admits are not admissible in evidence, according to the rulings of this Court by which I am bound. The learned Sessions Judge states that the applicant is apparently a man of some substance, has a considerable amount of cultivation and is also a money lender. It appears that in October 1914 the applicant was acquitted in a dacoity case. On the 6th November of the same year proceedings were instituted against him under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. He was bound over by a Magistrate of the first class on the 19th December 1914, but the learned Sessions Judge, to whom the proceedings were referred for confirmation under section 123 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, came to the conclusion that the applicant should not have been bound over and discharged the order which had been passed against him. The learned Sessions Judge, from whose order this revision has been filed, says that there are two parties in the village where the accused resides, one of them being headed by Muhammad Zahur and the other by the accused, that these two parties are hostile to each other and that many of the prosecution witnesses seem to be connected with Muhammad Zahur. This is a further reason why the evidence for the prosecution has to be carefully scrutinized. There is on the record a certified copy of a complaint, dated the 31st January 1919, by the present applicant charging Muhammad Zahur of an offence punishable under section 323, Indian Penal Code. It does not appear what the result of those proceedings was, but very few days after, namely, on the 5th February 1919, the applicant was arrested on a charge under section 397, Indian Penal Code. There appear to have been two dacoities at Maheshpur and Bhawanipur. The applicant was not named as having participated in either of them, but some time in the month of February he was identified with reference to both the dacoities by one witness regarding each of these two dacoities. This was apparently all the evidence that the Police secured against the applicant, because we find that they dropped the charges under section 397, Indian Penal Code, against him and, in lieu of those, instituted proceedings on the 1st March under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code. These resulted in an order, dated the 16th May 1919, binding him over for three years. This order was confirmed by the Sessions Judge on the 14th June 1919. Against these orders the present revision has been filed. The learned Sessions Judge says that the chief point for the prosecution is that the accused was identified, as already mentioned by me, as having taken part in two dacoities. The two persons who identified him, were prosecution witnesses in this case. Then the learned Sessions Judge proceeds: "Most of the other witnesses refer to him as having been suspected in these or other dacoities of recent occurrence, but the reason they give for their suspicions is that he was mentioned to them by the complainants. The complainants usually say that they did not mention their suspicions to anybody." In the case of Raham Ali v. Emperor (1) Rafique, J., has held that specific instances of crime in which the applicant was suspected were not good evidence and could not be said to fall within the meaning of "general repute" under section 117 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The same view was also taken by Chamier, J., in Bechai v. Emperor (2). Chamier, J., says: "The so-called evidence which is supposed to connect him with various offences consists of (1) Police lists of cases in which he is said to have come under suspicion, (2) the statements of witnesses each of whom says that he suspected the applicant of complicity in this or that isolated offence, (3) a list of cases in which the applicant's house has been searched on suspicion that he had committed some offence. Police lists of the kind here referred to have been repeatedly held to be inadmissible and suspicion cannot take the place of proof that a man has committed an offence." In the case with which I am dealing in revision, the learned Sessions Judge observes as follows:—"It should be noted that the accused has been recorded on a history sheet as a dacoit for some years." History sheets are not evidence against the accused. This history sheet was produced by an official who is not himself responsible for all the entries on the history-sheet and it was a piece of paper of the kind which was held by Chamier, J., not to be evidence in a section 110 case. In my opinion, therefore, a considerable amount of inadmissible evidence has been allowed to be brought on the record by the trial Magistrate, and, having regard to the evidence given, I am of opinion that this inadmissible material has seriously prejudiced the applicant.

To satisfy myself as to whether the admissible evidence on the record is sufficient to justify an order under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure I have gone through the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution. Almost throughout the evidence I find such a quantity of inadmissible material in the statements of witnesses that I am not prepared to say that that evidence is sufficient when contrasted with the evidence produced on behalf of the defence. Regarding the defence evidence the learned Sessions Judge says: "It is true that of the witnesses for the defence many are of higher status than those for the prosecution, but a man of the position of the accused has usually little difficulty in procuring witnesses to speak for him and the defence witnesses are not in a position to know much about his real character." I fail to see why the learned Judge says that the defence witnesses are not likely to know much of the applicant's character. They are in as good a position to know of the applicant's real character as many of the prosecution witnesses were. The reason here suggested by the trying Magistrate for discrediting those defence witnesses, who were of a higher status than the prosecution witnesses, was that a man of his position, that is a man who had the assistance of badmashes at his back, would find little difficulty in procuring witnesses to speak for him. In the words of Richards, C. J., in the case of Miharban Singh v. Emperor (3), it seems to me that the Magistrate disbelieved the evidence adduced by the accused because he had decided before hearing them that he was guilty. That is not a fair way of dealing with the evidence of the witnesses for the defence. Specific reasons should have been given for disbelieving them and not merely the reason that, assuming that the accused was guilty, it was easy for him to get witnesses of fairly good status to give evidence on his behalf. In my opinion the Courts below did not proceed to the consideration of the case from the proper point of view, and, for the reasons already stated, I think the order ought to be set aside. I accordingly allow the application in revision, set aside the orders of both Courts below and direct that the applicant's bail bond be cancelled.

Application allowed.

SRIPAL SINGH AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—APPELLANTS

versus

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 266—Oudh Criminal Digest, para. 49—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 395, 396—Dacoity with murder—Offence, whether triable by Jury—Trial under s. 395—Acquittal—Conviction under s. 396, legality of.

An offence under section 396 of the Penal Code is not one of the offences made triable by a Jury under the Government order which is embodied in paragraph 49 of the Oudh Criminal Digest. [p. 659, col. 2.]

Accused were charged with an offence under section 396 of the Penal Code and were tried by a Jury. The Jury acquitted them of the offence under section 396 of the Code but returned a verdict of guilty under section 395 of the Code:

Held, (1) that the offence with which the accused were charged being an offence which was not triable by Jury, the trial should not have been by Jury at all; [p. 660, col. 1.]

(2) that the accused, having been acquitted of the offence with which they were charged, could not be convicted of another offence on the same charge. [p. 660, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Lucknow, dated the 19th March 1919.

Mr. N. N. Sinha, for the Appellants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Sripal Singh, Badal and Chhabile have been convicted and sentenced to death under section 396, Indian Penal Code, subject to confirmation by this Court. In the case of Badal the conviction is under section 396, read with section 107, Indian Penal Code. It should have been section 396, read with section 109, as the latter is the section which prescribes the penalty. They have appealed and their appeals and reference for confirmation are before us.

Six people in all were tried on the charge under section 396, Indian Penal Code. The remaining three—Ram Sarup, Ram Pal and Lachhman—have been acquitted by the learned Sessions Judge. At the same time the Judge has submitted a reference under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code, differing from the verdict of a Jury who were for convicting them under section 395, Indian Penal Code. As no charge under section 395, Indian Penal Code, was framed against any of the accused, it is not apparent why a Jury should have been impanelled at all. The only offence with which the accused were charged was one under section 396, Indian Penal Code, which is not one of the offences made triable by a Jury under the Government order which is embodied in paragraph 49 of the Oudh Criminal Digest. If there was any doubt as to which offence had been committed, the accused should have been charged in the alternative, but they were not so charged.

There is in fact no dispute that two persons, Sarju and his wife Musammat Kailasa, were murdered in the commission of the dacoity with which the case is concerned, and the accused were either guilty of an offence under section 396, Indian Penal Code, or of no offence at all. The question whether we agree or disagree with the verdict of the Jury does not, therefore, arise. They have been acquitted of the only offence with which they were charged, or of which they could properly have been convicted. Under these circumstances we accept the Sessions Judge's reference and, acquitting Ram Sarup, Ram Phal and Lachhman of the offence under section 395 of which the Jury convicted them, we direct that they be set at liberty. We can only suppose that a Jury was impanelled under the idea that, because the commission of a dacoity is an element of the offence under section 396, and as the offence of simple dacoity under section 395 is in the Lucknow District triable by a Jury, every charge under section 396 must be tried by the procedure described in section 269 (3), Criminal Procedure Code. This is an error. Section 396 describes a distinct offence, namely, the offence of taking part in a dacoity in the commission of which murder is committed, and it is so treated in the Oudh Criminal Digest, which includes section 395 but omits section 396 in enumerating the offences which are made triable by a Jury. In this respect we agree with the observations of the Madras High Court in Queen-Empress v. Anga Valayan (1).

The facts of the case are that on the night of 10th December 1918 the house of Sarju, headman of Suryamau, was entered by a number of men who climbed over the roof. Sarju and his wife Musammat Kailasa were both strangled. Musammat Kailasa was also stripped of her ornaments. The medical evidence leaves no doubt as to the cause of death. Sarju's three little daughters, of ages ranging from nine to four and a baby boy of two, were in the house. These were not seriously molested, though the eldest child Musammat Kunjan was robbed of the bracelets and earrings (karanphul) which she was wearing. In the morning she went to the chaukidar, told him what had happened and asked him to call her elder brother Swami Dayal, a youth of 18, who was at school at Amethi. The chaukidar came to the house, saw the two bodies and saw that locks had been broken, and, sending off a woman to call Swami Dayal, went in haste to the Thana and reported the occurrence. The report itself states that he had come in a hurry without stopping to ascertain the full facts. The report was lodged at 8 A. M. on the morning of the 11th. The second officer of the Thana arrived on the scene about 11. In the course of his inquiry on the same day the eldest girl Musammat Kunjan mentioned the name of the accused Sripal Singh. Musammat Kunjan and her sister state in their evidence that they recognized his voice at the time of the dacoity, and in view of the fact that it was Musammat Kunjan's statement to the Sub Inspector which led to Sripal Singh's arrest, there is no reason to doubt the truth of this statement. The Thanedar, Sheikh Tauqirul Islam (P. W. No. 20), arrived in the afternoon. Finding that Sripal Singh's name had been mentioned he searched for him. Sripal Singh was brought in about 1 P. M. on the following day. He asked that Badal might be sent for and on this being done he made, in presence of the latter, a statement the contents of which could not, of course, be proved. What could be proved and was proved is that he took the Police to a place behind his house where there are nim trees, and digging below the garden wall produced a bangle (Exhibit 1) which has been amply identified as having belonged to the deceased Musammat Kailasa and been worn by her at the time of the murder. Badal's house was then searched. A lota was found under a corn bin, and buried in the ground in an inner room were found a pair of pachelas and a pair of nigrohis, which are also proved beyond doubt to have been worn by the deceased woman. Rs. 49 were also found in the same room, Rs. 40 in one place and Rs. 9 in another. Chhabile was arrested on 14th December and was found to be wearing a sheet (dohar) which was part of the property taken from the house of Sarju deceased. Two lotas and a bag containing a sarauta were also recovered from his house. As to the lotas there may be some doubt, but the bag containing the sarauta was found on the top of the wall just below the thatch, above the height to which a man could reach standing on the ground, and it was, as the Judge has stated, an article which could readily be identified and which has been identified by the prosecution witnesses as belonging to Sarju deceased. It is true that it was omitted from the list of stolen property given by the deceased's son, but an article of small value like this is very likely to be omitted. In preparing a list attention is naturally concentrated on the valuable ornaments, money, etc. We agree with the learned Judge and the assessors that it is amply proved that articles forming part of the proceeds of the dacoity were found in the possession of all three appellants.

On 14th December Sripal Singh made a confession which was recorded by the City Magistrate Dr. S. S. Nehru. This confession was afterwards retracted, but the Magistrate who recorded it took great pains, as his evidence shows, to satisfy himself that it was voluntarily made. The contradictions and inconsistencies into which the accused fell when retracting the confession go to confirm our impression that the confession was genuine and the retraction false. The matter is very well summed up in the following passage in the judgment of the Sessions Judge:—

"Sripal has retracted his confession and says that he made it because he was beaten and tortured by the Thaneder. He told the Committing Magistrate also that the Thanedar had given him bhang and liquor before the confession was made. Before the Committing Magistrate he stated that he did not hand over the kara (Exhibit 1) to anybody and had never seen it before that date. Before this Court he also retracted the confession and says he made it because he was tortured by the Thanedar. It is significant that the Thanedar was not asked a single question in cross-examination in regard to any torture or ill treatment of Sripal, nor was any of the witnesses asked a single question on this point. Sripal has produced only one witness in defence, his mother, who says that during the whole of the Tuesday night Sripal was present with her in their house. This witness also was not asked a single question as regards any torture or ill-treatment. There is the evidence of Mr. Nehru to the effect that no signs of ill-treatment were visible, nor any signs that Sripal had been kept without sleep or had been drugged or intoxicated. Sripal was given an opportunity of making a complaint, but as a matter of fact made no complaint of any sort to Mr. Nehru. There is also the fact that on the same day that Sripal made his statement before Mr. Nehru, he was produced before the Committing Magistrate for remand. The Committing Magistrate asked him whether he ever made any complaint of Police torture to him, the Committing Magistrate, and Sripal replied that he made no such complaint.

"Before the Committing Magistrate Sripal stated that he had never seen the kara (Exhibit 1) before and had certainly not handed it over to any one. Before this Court he says that the Sub-Inspector gave the kara (Exhibit 1) with instructions to place it in his house and produce it from his house when the Sub-Inspector asked him to do so. He says that in compliance with these instructions he hid the kara under the nim tree in the ground and then took the Sub-Inspector and the other persons to the spot and handed over the kara to the Sub-Inspector."

Sripal states that for two months previously Badal had been contemplating the murder of the deceased headman, who had threatened to get him challaned for badmashi. On Sunday, two days before the murder, Badal's brother-in law the accused Chhabile came to his house and told him that he had engaged the men. Sripal himself and two of the other accused were present. On Tuesday, the day of the murder, Badal himself went off to Lucknow to get takavi. At 11 P. M., Chhabile brought with him six other men who were strangers to Sripal and having fetched the remaining three accused, of whom Lachhman is Badal's son-in-law, came to Sripal's door. At midnight they started for Sarju's house, climbed over the roof, went into the room in which Sarju was sleeping and dragged him out. They then proceeded to press his neck and to beat him with their hands. Finally, finding that he was still able to cry out faintly, one of the Pasis tied his dhóti round his neck and so strangled him. While this was being done, Musammat Kailasa came out and asked what they were doing,

She was also throttled lest she should give information of the murder. She was then stripped of her ornaments. A box of money, a lota and various brass vessels were taken and the dacoits then decamped, departing as they had come over the roof. Sripal does not minimise the part which he took in the murder. He admits that he was one of the two who seized Sarju and dragged him out in the first instance and that he also assisted in robbing Musammat Kailasa of her ornaments. He got a silver bangle as his share. Badal's share, consisting of a pair of nigrohis, a pair of pachelas and two other ornaments, was taken by his son-in-law Lachhman.

Sripal's confession is corroborated on a number of points:—

(1) His own participation is proved both by his giving up of the bangle and by the fact that he was recognised and named by Musammat Kunjan, a circumstance which led to his arrest.

(2) There is independent corroboration of the motive which he assigns for the crime. It is proved by the Sub-Inspector that Sarju deceased had given information that Badal was on friendly terms with bad characters. Badal was at that time one of the chaukidars of the village and the Sub-Inspector had, on Sarju's information, recommended Badal's dismissal. The Deputy Superintendent of Police thereupon sent for Badal and warned him. Badal had taken leave at the time of the occurrence. It is further proved that two nephews of Badal had been challaned for badmashi in June 1918 and that Sarju was one of the witnesses against them.

(3) Sripal's account of the manner in which the murder was committed is corroborated by the medical evidence and by the fact that when the chaukidar came on the scene in the morning a cloth was still tied in a noose round Sarju's neck. This fact was mentioned in the first report.

(4) A neighbour of Badal named Pancham, whose house is separated from his house only by a lane, deposes to having seen the accused assembled at Badal's door conversing on Sunday morning preceding the murder, and having heard them mention the word "Tuesday" several times.

(5) His account of the manner in which the murder was committed is corroborated generally by the evidence of Musammat Kunjan. The latter was pushed back by the murderers into the kothri in which her sisters were and, therefore, did not see everything. Her tender age and the length of time which elapsed between the occurrence and the trial combined to render her statement less complete than that given by the accused. As the case was committed to the Sessions on 23rd January, it is to be regretted that the trial could not be commenced earlier than 6th March.

(6) There is also independent corroboration of the part assigned to each of the other two appellants As we have already noticed, it is proved beyond doubt that articles forming part of the stolen property were recovered from both Badal and Chhabile. That Badal did not take part in the actual dacoity is admitted. It is stated by Sripal and proved by other evidence that on that date he went to Lucknow to get takavi. He has, therefore, been convicted of abetment under section 396 read with section 107, Indian Penal Code. The recovery of the nigrohis and pachelas, articles readily susceptible of identification from his house is of the highest possible, significance. Accused does not allege that these articles were planted on him. He claimed them as his own but failed to produce any evidence whatever to support his assertion. It was known, and was reported at the Thana on the morning of December the 11th, that Sarju and his wife had been murdered. It is hardly conceivable under these circumstances that Badal should have consented to receive property which was part of the dacoity unless he had in reality been, as Sripal says he was, privy to it and one of the instigators of it. Badal had a very strong motive for wishing to injure Sarju, and the circumstances of the dacoity lend support to Sripal's statement that the theft was only subsidiary and that the primary object of the assailants was the murder of Sarju. The truth of Sripal's story has been thoroughly tested and taking into account the various items of corroboration which have been mentioned we are fully satisfied that the dacoity was planned and instigated by Badal with the deliberate intention of getting rid of Sarju whom he regarded as his enemy.

NIRMAL SINGH v. EMPEROR.

The learned Counsel who represented Sripal admitted his participation in the murder and addressed us only on the question of sentence. He pleaded on his behalf his youth (his age is 20 or 22) and the fact that the principal evidence against him is his own confession. If the accused had stuck to his confession in the Sessions Court, the latter plea might have been entitled to some consideration, but as he retracted it at the earliest opportunity it can hardly be pleaded on his behalf as a reason for mitigation of sentence. The murder was organised and deliberate, and the principal motive for it was that the deceased Sarju had done his duty as headman of the village. When we consider also that his innocent wife was murdered in cold blood merely to prevent the possibility of her giving evidence against the accused, we can find no reason whatever for interfering with the sentence of death in the case of any of the accused.

We, accordingly, dismiss the appeals of Sripal Singh, Badal and Chhabile. We alter the conviction of Badal to one under section 396 read with section 109, Indian Penal Code. Subject to this amendment we affirm the convictions. We confirm the death sentence in the case of all three appellants and direct that it be carried into effect in accordance with law.

Appeals dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 103—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 332—Search, whether can be conducted without warrant—Witnesses, absence of, effect of—Search, legality of—Deterring public servant from doing duty.

An officer of Police who is empowered to conduct an investigation, is entitled to carry out a search without a warrant, but in carrying out such search he is bound, under section 103 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to call upon two or more respectable inhabitants of the locality to attend and witness the search, and if he omits to do so, a householder would be justified in closing his door and refusing ingress into the house, and would not be guilty of an offence under section 332 of the Penal Code. [p. 664, cols. 1 & 2.]

While it may be necessary to oppose a Police Officer from forcing his way into a house in order to honestly prevent an illegal search, there would be no justification for compelling him to do something illegal. [p. 664, col. 2.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge of Shahjahanpur, dated the 26th June 1919.

Mr. J. M. Banerji, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—A Magistrate of the first class convicted eleven persons under sections 147 and 332, Indian Penal Code, for rioting and causing hurt to a public servant in discharging his duties, and sentenced them to varying terms of imprisonment and to fines. On appeal, the learned Sessions Judge of Shahjahanpur allowed the appeal of one Sukhdeo Singh but dismissed the appeal of the other ten appellants, upholding the sentences passed on them. These ten persons have filed revisions in this Court against their convictions and sentences and were released on bail by the learned Judge who admitted their applications. The facts of the case are somewhat singular. It appears that a burglary was committed on the night of the 30th September 1918 in the house of one Bhujai in the village of Kandar, in which, besides other property, a brass "thal" and a "lota" were lost. A report was made in the ordinary course and Sub-Inspector Godhan Lal, second officer of the Police Station, Jalalabad, within whose circle the offence was committed, took up the investigation. He suspected one Harsahai Bhangi, and on the 5th October he first searched his house and finding nothing, he proceeded, on information received that the stolen property was in the possession of one Nirmal Singh of Kateli, a village some two furlongs away from Kandar, to Kateli and at once wanted to search his house. Chunna and Partil, chowkidars, had, in the meantime, come up and were with him at the time. According to the facts as found by the Courts below, he informed Nirmal

Singh that he suspected that the stolen property was in his house and wanted to search it. Nirmal Singh and the other applicants resisted his doing so, and, whilst thus resisting, they are alleged to have caused simple injury both to him as well as to the chowkidars. They are further alleged to have snatched his pagri and revolver from him, and are alleged, further, to have compelled him under threats to draw up a search list saying that a search had been made and that nothing had been found. These facts are contested by the petitioners, but I am not prepared to go behind the findings of fact in revision. Several points of law have been raised by the petitioners. It is claimed that the search was wholly illegal on two grounds:—

(1) It is argued that the Sub Inspector was not empowered to proceed on the search without a warrant. I am not prepared to accept this contention. The Sub Inspector was undoubtedly empowered to investigate. Being empowered to investigate the charge he had, in my opinion, the right to search, which is incidental to his right to investigate.

(2) It is further argued in support of the petitioners' application that the officer conducting the search was bound under section 103 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to call upon two or more respectable inhabitants of the locality to attend and witness the search. That section further provides that the search shall be made in the presence of search witnesses. It is admitted on behalf of the Crown that the provisions of this section were totally ignored by the Sub-Inspector, but it was argued in support of the conviction that the provisions of that section were purely formal and that non-compliance with the same would not invalidate the search and that, therefore, the officer conducting the search, in spite of his ignoring the provisions of that section, was acting in the discharge of his duties, and that the interference with him would constitute an offence under section 332, Indian Penal Code. In the absence of any authority in support of the learned Government Advocate's contention I am not prepared to uphold it. Police Officers must be protected when acting in the exercise of their duties. The public have also rights, and it is very important that those rights of the householder should be safeguarded. Section 103 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was introduced into the Act in order to safeguard the rights of a householder and also to ensure that the search conducted by the Police Officials should be an honest search and a genuine one. I am prepared to go so far as to hold that when the provisions of that section are ignored, a householder is justified in closing his door and refusing ingress into his house. Holding this view I am of opinion that no offence under section 332, Indian Penal Code, has been made out. On the other hand, it is quite clear, on the facts as found, that the applicants were absolutely unjustified in the further action taken by them beyond merely preventing the Police Officer from entering the house. This further action consisted in compelling the Police Officer to draw up a document setting out that a search had been made and nothing was found. The petitioners, through their Counsel here, deny that such action was taken by them and the learned Counsel asks me to look into the evidence in order to satisfy myself on that point, but I am not going to look into the evidence in a revision. It may have been necessary, for the purpose of honestly preventing the Sub-Inspector from forcing his way into the house and conducting the illegal search, to snatch away his revolver but there can be absolutely no justification for the further action of compelling him to write out the false statement that the search had actually taken place. Whilst being, therefore, of opinion that the petitioners should be acquitted of the charges under sections 147 and 332, Indian Penal Code, I am of opinion that they are guilty under section 503 read with section 149 of the Indian Penal Code.

The applicants have been sentenced to heavy terms of imprisonment and also to heavy fines. I am informed that each of them has undergone ten days' rigorous imprisonment. They have served sufficient terms of imprisonment and I reduce the periods of their imprisonment to the periods already served. It is further submitted, and not contested, that the ten petitioners are members of one and the same family. The combined fines to which they have been sentenced amount to an aggregate sum of Rs. 1,900. I sentence each of the petitioners to a fine of Rs. 50 in addition to the imprisonment under the section under which I have convicted them. In case of non-payment of fine, each accused, who does not pay such fine, will serve a term of three months' rigorous imprisonment.

Sentences reduced.

Cantonment Code, 1912, r. 97—Building in ruinous condition—Removal or repairs—Owner, whether has choice.

The option given by rule 97 of the Cantonment Code of deciding, when any building is in a ruinous condition or in any way dangerous to the occupier, whether the owner shall be required to remove the same, or be required to cause repairs to be made, is an option given to the Cantonment authority and not to the owner of the building. [p. 665, col. 2; p. 666, col. 1.]

Mr. Velinkar (with him Mr. Payne & Co.), for the Applicant.

Mr. P. Bunter, for the Complainant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—The only point, as to which it is necessary for us to express an opinion, is the meaning of rule 97 of the Cantonment Code of 1912. Rule 97 runs as follows:—

"Where any building, wall or structure, or anything affixed thereto, or any bank or tree, is, in the opinion of the Cantonment authority, in a ruinous state or in any way dangerous either, in the case of an occupied building, to the occupier or to the public, the Cantonment authority may, by notice in writing, require the owner or occupier thereof forthwith either to remove the same or to cause such repairs to be made as it may think necessary for the safety of the occupier or of the public, etc."

The point arises in this way: The Cantonment authority sent a notice under this section to the applicant to remove a building, and the applicant says that the notice was not a legal notice, because under the section it had to be a notice to him, he argues, either to remove or to cause repairs to be made. So we have to choose between two alternative meanings of these words. Do the words describe the notice and must the notice always be in the alternative either to remove or to repair, the choice lying with the owner; or do the words describe a power given to the Cantonment authority: who may choose whether the notice shall be to remove or shall be to make repairs? I hold that the latter is the true interpretation. I do so, because, firstly, I think that the words themselves, apart altogether from any extraneous considerations, mean this. And secondly, if we take extraneous matter into account, they seem to me to lead to the same conclusion. I gather that the meaning of the framers of this Code was to give the choice not to the owner, but to the Cantonment authority. If the framers of the Code had in view the interests of the public, the requirements of safety and of sanitation, it seems to me that it inevitably follows that the intention was to give the power to the Cantonment authority and not to leave the choice to the owner of the property.

I think, therefore, that the Magistrate's order was correct and that the Rule should be discharged.

SHAH, J.—I agree. I desire to add that at one stage of the argument I was impressed with the contention urged by Mr. Velinkar that under the rule an option of removing the building or of effecting the repairs which may be specified by the Cantonment authority should be given in every notice to the owner. But, on a further consideration, I feel satisfied that the argument is more plausible than sound, and that the words of the section convey the meaning that the option is given to the Cantonment authority of deciding, when any building is in a ruinous state or in any way dangerous to the occupier, whether the owner shall be required to remove the same or whether he shall be required to cause such repairs as may be necessary for the safety of the occupier or the public. It is also clear that, if due regard is had to the object and the scope of this Rule, that is the interpretation which ought to be accepted. I am unable to see any force in the suggestion made on behalf of the accused that if it were intended that the option was not to be given to the owner in every notice given under this rule, the expression "require the owner or occupier thereof forthwith either to remove the same or to cause such repairs to be made as it may think necessary for the safety of the occupier" would not be appropriate. I think that if the framers of the Code intended to give to the Cantonment authority the power of deciding whether under certain circumstances the building should be removed or whether it should be repaired in a particular manner, the expression used would be appropriate.

Rule discharged.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 209, 210—Dishonestly making false claim—Fraudulently obtaining decree—Court not having jurisdiction, effect of—Offence.

In order to bring a case under section 209 of the Penal Code, it is immaterial whether the Court in which the false claim was instituted had jurisdiction to try the suit. The words in the section are "a Court of justice," and not "a Court of justice having jurisdiction." Similarly, if a person obtains a decree fraudulently for a sum not due, the case would fall under section 210 of the Code, whether the Court had, or had not, power to pass the decree. Civil revision against the order of the District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 14th May 1918.

Mr. R. K. Sorabji, for the Applicant.
Mr. R. Malcomson for Mr. A. E. Ryves, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The four applicants, Badri, Jageshar, Raja Ram Pathak and Rameshar, filed about the same time four separate suits in the Court of the Village Munsif of Khajuri and obtained decrees therein. In execution of one of these decrees Jagat was imprisoned for 42 days. The learned District Judge of Gorakhpore under the provisions of section 73, Local Act III of 1892, set aside all these decrees, on the finding amongst other findings that the Village Munsif had no jurisdiction to decide the suits. He further found that the suits were deliberately false and that they had been instituted in pursuance of a conspiracy to prosecute Jagat, because Jagat had exposed a scandal in Jageshar's family the disclosure of which had put Jageshar to considerable expense and damaged the reputation of himself and his relations. The learned District Judge, after having arrived at this conclusion and setting aside the decrees, proceeded to take action under section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and has ordered the four applicants to be prosecuted criminally on various charges. One of the charges under which he has ordered each applicant to be prosecuted is a charge section 209. The applicants apply in revision to have this order set aside. The applications are under the provisions of section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Now there is nothing to show that the learned District Judge exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law, or failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested or that he acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity; and here I might leave the matter and dismiss the applications. But inasmuch as other Judges of this Court have thought fit to admit these applications and as the proceedings have already dragged on for some 14 months, it will perhaps be better to examine the arguments put forward by the learned Counsel for the applicants. The learned Counsel argues that inasmuch as the Munsif had no jurisdiction, his clients can in no circumstances have committed an offence under either sections 209 or 210. The words of section 209 are:—"Whoever fraudulently or dishonestly, or with intent to injure or annoy any person, makes in a Court of justice any claim which he knows to be false, shall be punished with imprisonment."

and section 210 is to the effect that—"whoever fraudulently obtains a decree or order against any person for a sum not due, or fraudulently causes a decree or order to be executed against any person for anything is liable for imprisonment."

Now on the learned Judge's finding, which is the only finding with which I am concerned, these four persons fraudulently, dishonestly and with intent to injure Badri, misrepresenting their residence, went to a Court which they knew had no jurisdiction and obtained by the use of the most dishonest methods decrees for sums not due to them, and in one instance obtained the imprisonment of Jagat for six weeks. It would have been an extraordinary defect in the Indian Penal Code if such acts could pass unpunished, because the Court had no jurisdiction, but I see no reason to suppose that the law contains this defect. The words in section 209 are "a Court of justice" not "a Court of justice having jurisdiction in the case." If a person brings a claim in a Court of justice which has no jurisdiction the case falls under section 209 in my opinion, and similarly, if he obtains a decree fraudulently for a sum not due, the case will fall under section 210, whether the Court had, or had not, power to pass the decree. In these circumstances there would be no force in the argument that there is a legal flaw in the charge even if the argument could be pressed under section 115.

I dismiss these applications with costs. I fix the fees of the Government Advocate at Rs. 32 on each application.

Appeals dismissed.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), ss. 126 (a), 130—Minor, offence committed by—Summary trial by Magistrate legality of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 260, Sch. II—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 82, 83.

When a person is prosecuted under section 130, read with section 126 (a), of the Railways Act, the offence is not one triable exclusively by a Court of Session—a Magistrate has jurisdiction to try it, and to try it summarily. [p. 668, col. 1.]

Section 130 of the Railways Act enacts an offence distinct from the offences in sections 126 to 129 of the Act. A minor who is entitled to the benefit of section 82 or section 83 of the Penal Code, does not commit an offence when he is guilty of any of the acts or omissions referred to in sections 126 to 129 of the Railways Act. It is section 130 of the latter Act which, by excluding the operation of these exceptions, creates the offence. [p. 667, col. 2.]

Criminal reference made by the District Magistrate, Belgaum.

JUDGMENT.—This is a report by the District Magistrate of Belgaum, under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, of the case of the accused Dhondya bin Dudya, a boy aged nine years who has been convicted by the Cantonment Magistrate of Belgaum after a summary trial of an offence under section 130 of the Indian Railways Act of 1890.

The District Magistrate considers that as the act which the boy committed, viz., putting a nail on a railway line, amounted to an offence under section 126 (a) of the Indian Railways Act. the case was triable only by a Court of Session.

We think it clear that section 130 enacts an offence distinct from the offences in sections 126 to 129. A minor who is entitled to the benefit of section 82 or section 83 of the Indian Penal Code does not commit an offence when he is guilty of any of the acts or omissions referred to in sections 126 to 129. It is section 130, which by excluding the operation of these exceptions creates the offence.

No doubt if the accused had been charged with offence under section 126 (a), the Magistrate should have committed the case to the Court of Session and left the accused to establish his defence under section 83 of the Indian Penal Code.

But the accused was not prosecuted under section 126 (a). The summary register shows that he was prosecuted under section 130 read with section 126 (a) of the Indian Railways Act. The prosecution, therefore, conceded that though the accused had committed the act described in section 126 (a), he had not attained sufficient maturity of understanding to judge the nature and consequences of the conduct and elected to proceed under section 130.

The offence with which the accused was charged was, therefore, under section 130 and this offence the Magistrate had jurisdiction to try: Schedule II, Criminal Procedure Code, and to try summarily: section 260, Criminal Procedure Code.

There is, therefore, no occasion for our interference and we direct the record and proceedings to be returned to the District Magistrate.

Order accordingly.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 188—Offence committed in Native State—Trial in British India, when permissible—Certificate of Political Agent, whether necessary.

A subject of a Native State arrested in British India cannot be tried in a British Indian Court for an offence committed in that State without the certificate of the Political Agent of the State or the sanction of the Local Government required by section 188 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

An agreement between a Native State and the authorities of a British Indian District, conceding to the British Indian Courts the right to try subjects of the State arrested in British India, cannot take the place of the certificate or sanction contemplated by section 188 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Criminal revision against the order of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Kara, dated the 22nd of May, 1919.

Mr. B. N. Vyas, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicants have been sentenced to fines of Rs. 20 and in default to three weeks' rigorous imprisonment for offences under section 13 of Act III of 1867, alleged to have been committed in Kampta, which is a Native State. Objection was taken at the hearing of the case that gambling was not shown to be an offence in the Native State in question, and secondly, that the requirements of the proviso to section 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure had not been satisfied. That proviso sets out that "when a native Indian subject of His Majesty commits an offence in the territories of any Native Prince or Chief in India, he may be dealt with in respect of such offence as if it had been committed at any place within British India at which he may be found: Provided that no charge as to any such offence shall be enquired into in British India, unless the Political Agent, if there is one in the territory in which the offence is alleged to have been committed, certifies that in his opinion the charge ought to be enquired into in British India and where there is no Political Agent, the sanction of the Local Government shall be required.' The learned Magistrate has dealt in a light and airy fashion with these legal objections. Even if the applicants could be convicted of an offence of gambling in the Native State in question, they cannot be proceeded against in the absence of the certificate or the sanction set out in the proviso to section 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Magistrate who tried the case says: "A few months ago under the instructions of the Political Agent a committee was constituted of some members of the Native State concerned and some members of the executive authorities in British India and it was mutually agreed for convenience that British India Police might arrest persons found gambling in the Native State and try them in British India if they are British India subjects and send them to the Native State if they are subjects thereof, and vice versa the Native State Police could arrest persons found gambling in British India" An agreement like this cannot take the place of a certificate or sanction which is contemplated by the section aforesaid. Where there is a bar to the prosecution of a person unless certain formalities are carried out, those formalities have to be strictly carried out. I hold, therefore, that there was no jurisdiction to try the applicants at Banda, and I, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the fines, if paid, be refunded.

Conviction set aside.

Workman's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859), s. 1—Scope of Act—Advance to be paid off from wages, effect of.

The Workman's Breach of Contract Act relates to contracts in which workmen have received advances of money on account of the work which they have contracted to perform, and has no application to a contract of service for a term of years accompanied with an advance of money which may be paid off from the wages the workman is to earn, as such a contract is not one made on account of the work which he has contracted to perform.

Criminal application for revision from an order passed by the Resident Magistrate, First Class, Bandra.

Mr. M. M. Kotasthane, for the Applicant.

Mr. Koyajee (with him Mr. V. C. Kelkar), for the Complainant.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—The main purpose of the contract is that the artificer shall work for ten years for his employer. One of its stated objects, and a most important one, is to prevent the artificer leaving his employer's service during the period of ten years. I cannot believe that such contracts as this were ever intended to come under Act XIII of 1859. To me the words taken with the declared object of the Act definitely suggest that they were not.

Therefore, I think the Rule should be made absolute.

SHAH, J.—The question arising in this application is whether the contract between the parties falls within the purview of Act XIII of 1859. The applicant entered into a contract with his employer on the 17th January 1917, whereby he agreed to serve for a period of ten years on a salary of Rs. 40 per mensem as an artisan and not to go elsewhere leaving his service. The employer purported to advance Rs. 286; but it is found that Rs. 186 represented the previous advances and that Rs. 100 only were advanced in cash at the date of the contract. The advance is described as having been made in cash for the work to be done under the contract. The applicant agreed to re-pay this sum of Rs. 286 by deducting Rs. 5 out of his salary every month. He agreed to pay off the advance in ten years. The contract contemplates further advances, and also provides that if any part of the sum advanced or to be advanced remains unpaid at the expiry of the ten years he will serve on the same terms till the whole amount is paid off.

Taking the terms of the contract as a whole, it seems to me that the principal item is the undertaking on the part of the applicant to serve on a salary of Rs. 40 per mensem for ten years, and that the advance is really a subordinate thing intended to secure as far as possible a due fulfilment of the contract of service. The sum of Rs. 186 advanced from time to time prior to the contract cannot be treated as an advance of money on account of the work to be performed under the contract. The remaining sum of Rs. 100 advanced in cash has no doubt some relation to the work under the contract. But in effect it is nothing more than a loan, which the workman is bound to pay in any event, and which the contract provides may be paid off at the rate of Rs. 5 per month. The Act of 1859 relates to contracts in which workmen have received advances of money on account of the work which they have contracted to perform. I do not think that the advance in the present case fulfils that condition. I think that the present contract is in the main a contract of service for ten years, accompanied with an advance of money which may be paid off from the wages which the workman is to earn under the contract, but which cannot be said to have been made on account of the work which he has contracted to perform. In my opinion the Act does not apply to such a contract. I, therefore, agree that the Rule should be made absolute and the order of the lower Court set aside.

Rule made absolute.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195 (1) (a)—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 182—False charge against public servant made in letter addressed to Collector—Sanction for prosecution, who can grant—Jurisdiction.

A. addressed a letter to the Collector of the district making certain charges against an official of the district. It was found that in respect of this letter he had committed an offence under section 182 of the Penal Code, and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate sanctioned his prosecution:

Held, that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had no jurisdiction to sanction the prosecution, as, under section 195 (1) (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code, such sanction could only be given by the public servant concerned or by some public servant to whom he was subordinate, and, with reference to section 182 of the Penal Code, the proper officer to sanction the prosecution was the Magistrate of the district.

Criminal reference by the Sessions Judge, Aligarh.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference from the Sessions Judge of Aligarh recommending that an order directing the prosecution of one Mohommad Naqi Husain for an offence under section 182, Indian Penal Code, be set aside as having been directed by the Sub-Divisional Officer, Mr. R. H. Niblett, who had no jurisdiction to pass the order. Together with the reference the Magistrate's explanation has also been forwarded to this Court. Mohommad Naqi Husain had complained to the Collector of Aligarh by means of a letter, making certain charges against Mohommad Ayub, pound-keeper of Chama. If an offence under section 182, Indian Penal Code, has been committed with reference to the letter complaining against the pound-keeper, then under section 195, clause (1) (a), of the Code of Criminal Procedure no Court can take cognizance of the offence without the previous sanction or the complaint of the public servant concerned or of some public servant to whom he is subordinate. The public servant concerned with reference to section 182, Indian Penal Code, is clearly the District Magistrate. The Sub-Divisional Officer does not take the place of the District Magistrate and cannot usurp the District Magistrate's powers for the purpose of giving jurisdiction under section 195, clause (1) (a), of the Code of Criminal Procedure to a Court for the purpose of trying the alleged offence.

I, therefore, accept the reference of the learned Sessions Judge and set aside the order of Mr. Niblett, Magistrate, 1st Class, dated the 5th June 1919, directing the prosecution of Mohommad Naqi Husain under section 182, Indian Penal Code, with respect to the letter mentioned in that order.

Criminal application for revision against an order passed by the Resident Magistrate, 1st Class, Bandra.

In re DINBAI JIJIBHOY KHAMBATA.

Mr. Coyajee instructed by Messrs. Khambatta & Co., for the Applicant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—In this case the Notified Area Committee for Andheri gave notice to the owner of a certain house to construct certain drainage work specified in the notice under the rules framed by the Governor in Council under the Bombay District Municipalities Act. It is said that the owner failed to carry out the work, and that it was completed by the Notified Area Committee. An application to the Resident Magistrate of Bandra was made under section 161 (2) of the Bombay District Municipalities Act, for the recovery of the expenses incurred by the Committee as provided by rule 62, clause (6), of the rules applicable to the Committee. The owner of the house pleaded in effect that the Chairman of the Committee had substantially modified the terms of the notice, and that the work as suggested by him having been carried out, she was not liable for the expenses incurred by the Committee. The Magistrate directed the expenses to be recovered by distress. It is this order for distress that is now sought to be revised.

The first question is whether this order is liable to revision by this Court. I think it is. The first part of sub-section (2) of section 161 relates to prosecutions to be instituted before any Magistrate, and it is unquestionable that the power which the Magistrate exercises in respect of any prosecution is a judicial power and any order made by him would be the order of an inferior Criminal Court liable to revision by this Court. The power, which he has to exercise under the latter part of the sub-section, is ordinarily of a ministerial nature. But this part of the sub-section refers to such Magistrate as has been referred to in the first of the sub section; and I do not see any good reason to hold that 'such Magistrate' is not an inferior Criminal Court, and that his orders are not liable to revision. It may be that having regard to the nature of the inquiry that a Magistrate has to make, when an application is made to him for the recovery of fines or penalties or sums for compensation or for expenses, there would not be any scope for revising his orders ordinarily. For instance where the fine or penalty or compensation is otherwise duly determined, he would not be concerned with the question of determining the amount. But there may be occasions when he may have to determine the amount of compensation or expenses, where it is disputed, and the scope of the inquiry will necessarily depend upon the nature of the defence put forward by the owner on an application under the latter part of sub section (2). But it is clear that the Magistrate will have to make some inquiry in proper cases; and I see no reason to treat such an inquiry as purely ministerial, when the inquiry contemplated by the Magistrate in the former part of the same sub-section is purely judicial. This view is in consonance with the decisions of this Court under section 84 of the old District Municipal Act (Bombay Act VI of 1873), which corresponded in part to the present sub-section (2) of section 161: see Municipality of Ahmedabad v. Jumna Punja (1) and Queen-Empress v. Nathu (2). No doubt the wording of that section was different. But I do not think that the Legislature meant to effect any change in this respect; and I gather that meaning from the circumstance that both these powers are referred to in one sub-section, and that one of them is purely judicial. Unless the contrary meaning is clearly indicated, I think that it is reasonable to hold that no differential treatment is intended in respect of orders made by Magistrates under sub-section (2). The decision in In re Dalsukhram Hurgovandas (3) relating to section 86 of the Bombay District Municipalities Act is an instance in point and is in no way inconsistent with the construction which I put upon sub-section (2) of section 161.

The next question is, whether there is any ground to revise the order. If it were clear that the learned Magistrate made his order after making proper inquiry as to the merits of the contention put forward by the owner of the house, I would not interfere. But it is alleged in the petition that the order was made without making any inquiry as to the merits of the contention raised by the owner, and as it is not denied before us, I think under the circumstances it would be proper to direct the Magistrate to make a proper inquiry and to determine whether the notice of the Notified Area Committee was in fact modified by the Chairman as alleged by the petitioner, and whether he was competent to so modify it according to the rules. The learned Magistrate purports to find that the notice was neither modified nor cancelled. But it is not clear that it was the result of a proper inquiry on the merits.

(1) 17 B. 731; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 479.
(2) (1891) Rat. Unrep. Cr. C. 559.
(3) 9 Bom. L. R. 1347; 6 Cr. L. J. 425.

I would make the Rule absolute, set aside the order for distress, and direct the Magistrate to dispose of the application for the recovery of expenses according to law.

HEATON, J.—I agree to the proposed order.

We have to find out the meaning of clause (2) of section 161 of the Bombay District Municipalities Act and it is a difficult task. If the words "and also all claims... in this Act" were omitted, there would not be any great difficulty. The section would then provide for the trial of certain matters by a Magistrate and for the method of enforcing the fines and penalties inflicted by the Magistrate. The former would be a judicial, the latter a ministerial, act, the former could be revised by this Court, and, as I think, not the latter.

The introduction of the words "and also all claims, etc.," makes the real difficulty. The section in general, however, provides for (1) the arriving at a judicial decision; and (2) the carrying out ministerially of that decision. Taking the general meaning, you cannot have the second without having the first. That meaning must also, I think, apply to the case of "claims to compensation or other expenses," unless some cogent reason to the contrary is forthcoming, and I cannot find such reason. That being so, it follows that there must be a decision on the claim before the amount can be recovered and that decision must be a judicial decision.

This may or may not be what was intended when the section was enacted. I decide that it is what was intended. If it is not, the Legislature should make the matter clear.

Rule made absolute.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 110, 437—Enquiry under s. 110—Further inquiry, whether can be directed—District Magistrate, power of.

Under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code, a District Magistrate has jurisdiction to direct further inquiry in a case where a person has been discharged in an inquiry under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Criminal revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Mainpuri, dated the 4th July 1919.

Mr. Mangal Prasad Bhargava, for the Apellant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant, Desraj, had been discharged by a Magistrate of the First Class in an enquiry under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The District Magistrate of Mainpuri ordered a further enquiry under section 437. Against that order Desraj has applied in revision to this Court. In Kharga v. Emperor (1) a Divisional Bench of this Court has held that a District Magistrate has jurisdiction to direct further enquiry in a case where a person has been discharged in an enquiry under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. I am bound by that ruling and, therefore, have to hold that the District Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass the order which is attacked in this revision. The only question that remains is whether he was justified, in the exercise of his jurisdiction, in ordering a further enquiry. I am not prepared to tie the Magistrate's hands, and to hold that he was not justified in passing the order and, therefore, reject this application.

Application rejected.

Alluvion and diluvion—Landlord and tenant—Submergence of land leased—Reformation in situ, effect of—Rent, non-payment of—Third person claiming land as accretion, right of—Bengal Regulation XI of 1825.

The defendants obtained a lease of certain land in 1876 from the Government, and in the same year the land was submerged in the river and re-appeared in 1903. During the period of submersion the defendants did not pay any rent, but when that land re-appeared, they took possession of it as reformation in situ of land which they held under the lease and which had been submerged in the river. The plaintiffs claimed the land as accretion to their raiyati jote land:

Held, (1) that as the land was reformation in situ it could not be claimed by the plaintiffs as accretion to their raiyati jote land; [p. 675, col. 1.]

(2) that, in the circumstances of the case, it was difficult to hold that the rights of the defendants were subsisting at the time when the land re-appeared; [p. 674, col. 2.]

(3) that the Government, as owner of the khas mahal, was entitled to the land, and the defendants, professing to hold it as tenants under the Government and in assertion of the same right in which they held under the lease before the submergence of the land, were entitled to set up the rights of the Government. [p. 674, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Backergunge, dated the 25th April 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, Barisal, dated the 11th April 1916.

Babus Brojendra Nath Chatterjee, for the Appellants.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty and Sarat Chandra Dutt, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit to recover possession of newly formed Chur land as accretion to the plaintiffs' raiyati jote land, and for mesne profits.

The defence was that the land was reformation in situ of land which the defendants held under the Government in a Government Khas Mahal, and which had been submerged in the river.

It appears that the land was submerged in the year 1872 and re appeared in 1903. After the reformation, the defendants took possession of the land and they have been in possession since then.

A Commissioner appointed by the Court of first instance found that the disputed land was included in Dags Nos. 143 and 144 of the map of 1876. The land was identifiable and in fact it had formed on the site of the land of the Potta (Exhibit B) under which the land had been let out to defendants in the year 1876. Having regard to these facts, the Court of first instance dismissed the suit.

On appeal, the learned District Judge held that the rights of the defendants to the land had been extinguished by reason of their not having paid any rent during the long period of submergence of the land, and that the land, therefore, was an accretion to the plaintiffs' estate. The defendants have appealed to this Court.

The learned Judge relied upon the case of Hemnath Dutt v. Ashgur Sindar (1). In that case it was held that where land, held by tenants with rights of occupancy, was completely submerged for a number of years, and during the period of such submersion, no rent was paid by the tenants, the tenants had, by non-payment of the rent during the period of submersion, forfeited their rights of occupancy. That case was followed in another case, Saligram Singh v. Paluk Pandey (2), where this Court held that under section 6 of Act VIII of 1869 a raiyat retains his right of occupancy only so long as he pays rent, and that "although mere non payment of rent might not be conclusive evidence of abandonment, non-payment of rent taken with submergence of land is sufficient to indicate an extinction of the right of occupancy." In that case, an occupancy holding diluviated at a time when Act VIII of 1869 was in force, and the lands remained under water for 13 years before the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 was passed. It was held that whatever right was acquired by the raiyat was extinguished by the non-payment of rent during the period of submergence before the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 came into force and the provisions of that Act could create no new rights in favour of the plaintiffs, nor revive those which had already been extinguished.

On behalf of the appellants reliance has been placed on the decision of the Privy Council in Arun Chandra Singh v. Kamini Kumar (3), in support of the proposition that the rights of the tenants were still subsisting even though they paid no rent during the period of submergence. Referring to the case of Hemnath Dutt v. Ashgur Sindar (1) the Judicial Committee observed: "Their Lordships, however, do not find themselves in accord with the rule of law expressed in that case. They think that the principle applicable to this class of cases is correctly enunciated in Mazhar Rai v. Ramgat Singh (4)." In the latter case where the lands of certain tenants became submerged by the action of a river, and the tenants though, they ceased to pay rent during the period of the submersion, made no overt indication of their intention to relinquish the said lands, but on the contrary, on the river again shifting its course, laid claim to lands which had emerged and which they alleged to be identical with their former holding, it was held that there had been no relinquishment. The Allahabad Court observed that it could not agree that the view of law expressed in Hemnath Dutt's case (1), "though it may be sound in Lower Bengal, is applicable to these Provinces." The judgment proceeded upon the ground that Act XII of 1881 and the Acts of a like nature which preceded it assumed that a tenancy of agricultural lands once entered upon continues until determined by effluxion of time, or by mutual consent, or in one of the ways provided for by statutory enactment, but mere non-payment of rent does not of itself determine the tenancy.

(1) 4 C. 894; 2 Shome L. R. 142; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 566.

(2) 6 C. L. J. 149.

In the case of Hemnath Dutt's case (1) the tenant was a raiyat and the case was governed by the provisions of Act VIII of 1869, under which a tenant could have a right of occupancy only so long as he paid rent; whereas in the case before the Judicial Committee the diluviated lands formed part of a permanent, heritable and transferable tenure. Their Lordships observed: "The diluviated lands formed part of a permanent, heritable, and transferable tenure: until it can be established that the holder of the tenure has abandoned his right to the submerged land, it remains intact," and it is accordingly contended on behalf of the respondent that the observations of their Lordships were directed to permanent tenures such as were under consideration in that case.

In the present case the lands diluviated in the very same year that the tenants obtained a lease of the land. They did not, therefore, even acquire a right of occupancy. The land remained under water for a period of more than 30 years. In these circumstances it is difficult to hold that the rights of the defendants were subsisting at the time when the land re appeared. It is unnecessary, however, to consider in the present case the effect of the decision of the Privy Council upon the rights of a tenant governed by the provisions of Bengal Act VIII of 1859, because even assuming that the defendants' rights were extinguished, the plaintiff is not entitled to the land as accretion, as the defendants are entitled to set up the rights of the Government.

In the case of Lopez v. Muldun Mohun Thakoor (5) Lord Justice James in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee observed: "This principle is one not merely of English Law, not a principle peculiar to any system of Municipal Law, but it is a principle founded in universal law and justice, that is to say, that whoever has land, wherever it is, whatever may be the accident to which it has been exposed, whether it be a vineyard which is covered by lava or ashes from a volcano, or a field covered by the sea or by a river, the ground, the site, the property, remains in the original owner." Referring to the provisions of the 4th clause of the Regulation XI of 1825, he said: "It is to be observed, however, that that clause refers simply to cases of gain, of acquisition by means of gradual accession. There are no words which imply the confiscation or destruction of any private person's property whatever. If a Regulation is to be construed as taking away anybody's property, that intention to take away ought to be expressed in very plain words, or be made out by very plain and necessary implication. The plaintiff here says: 'I had the property. It was my property before it was covered by the Ganges. It remained my property after it was submerged by the Ganges. There was nothing in that state of things that took it from me and gave it to the Government. When it emerged there was nothing that took it from me and gave it to any other person,' and in answer to such a claim it would certainly seem that something more than mere reference to the acquisition of land by increment, by alluvion, or by what other term may be used, would be required in order to enable the owner of one property to take property which had been legally vested in another." In the result their Lordships held that "lands washed away and afterwards reformed on an old site, which could be clearly recognised, are not lands gained within the meaning of section 4, Regulation XI of 1825, viz., they do not become the property of the adjoining owner, but remain the property of the original owner."

As already stated, it has been found that the land is reformation in situ. That being so, it cannot be claimed by the plaintiffs as accretion to his estate. The ground upon which the judgment proceeds, is that if the rights of the defendants were extinguished before the land re-appeared, the land must be held to be accretion to the plaintiffs' estate. The learned Pleader for the respondent contended before us that that must be so because the land became part of the river or public domain and that the plaintiffs, therefore, acquired title to it by contiguous accretion.

If, however, as has been found in the case, the land is reformation in situ, we do not see how it can be claimed by the plaintiffs as accretion to their estate. Although the defendants may have no rights under the lease which they obtained from Government, the latter as the owner of the Khas Mahal is entitled to the land. As proprietor of the Khas Mahal, Government stands in the same position as a private Zemindar; and if the Government as the owner of the Khas Mahal had resisted the plaintiffs' claim, we do not think that the latter could have enforced their claim, having regard to the fact that the land is reformation in situ. The only person interested in the land is the Government, the owner of the Khas Mahal, and the Government has not raised any objection to the defendants' holding the land which they have been holding ever since its formation. They have held it, professing to do so as tenants under the Government, and in assertion of the same right in which they held under the Potta before the submergence of the land.

In these circumstances, we think that the view taken by the learned District Judge that the land must be held to be accretion to the plaintiffs' estate merely because the defendants' right under the lease might have been extinguished, cannot be supported.

The result is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at one gold mohar.

The grant of a perpetual kanom by the trustee of a devaswom is not binding on the devaswom. [p. 677, col. 1.]

Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi, 39 Ind. Cas. 722; 40 M. 709; 21 C. W. N. 729; 15 A. L. J. 485; 1 P. L. W. 697; 33 M. L. J. 1; 19 Bom. L. R. 567; 22 M. L. T. 1; (1917) M. W. N. 477 & 507; 26 C. L. J. 153; 6 L. W. 222; 44 I. A. 147 (P. C.), followed.

A kanom deed, after reciting that the kanomdars were to hold the properties 'for ever and for ever', stipulated for payment of a fixed renewal fee not at the end of 12 years but to be spread over the 12 years and paid along with the rent. This document was in renewal of a prior simple kanom under which the mortgagee took possession:

Held, (1) that the document should be treated as if it was a perpetual kanom; [p. 677, col. 1.]

The estate held by a trustee should not be regarded as analogous to that of a Hindu widow. [p. 677, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Palghat at Calicut, in Appeal Suit No. 149 of 1917 (Appeal Suit No. 177 of 1917 of District Court), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Parapanangadi, in Original Suit No. 555 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Appellant.—The document, Exhibit I, creates an irredeemable and perpetual Kanom. Plaintiff's right to redeem should be negatived.

Even if the Kanom is not binding on the temple, the defendants, having prescribed for a perpetual and irredeemable Kanom, can hold on as they like. Baluswami Aiyer v. Venkitaswamy Naicken (1). They have acquired a title by adverse possession, their right being traceable to the document Exhibit I which conferred a permanent tenure.

Mr. T. N. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Respondent.—Exhibit I is an ordinary Kanom. There is a stipulation that the Kanom should be renewed at the end of 12 years.

Even if Exhibit I was a perpetual Kanom, it is not binding on the Dewaswom. The Urlan could not grant a permanent Kanom. It is invalid in law.

The defendants cannot prescribe for a prescriptive right, as they held possession under the earlier ordinary Kanom and they could not trace their possession to the later invalid document.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this case is whether the Oorakam, a Devaswom, is entitled to redeem the property in suit. Prior to 1864 there was a simple Kanom by the then Ooralan in favour of the predecessor-in-title of the defendants. That document has been lost and, therefore, its terms can only be gathered from Exhibit I. We are clear from the recital in it that the first transaction was a simple Kanom. Then in 1864, Exhibit I was executed by the then Ooralan. The question as to whether it confers a permanent and irredeemable right or whether it is an ordinary Kanom is one of some difficulty. The Munsif held it was a permanent tenure. The Appellate Court has differed from him. In our opinion the Munsif was right.

In the operative portion, the language employed is: "You and your Anandravans may, as hitherto, hold the aforesaid properties for ever and ever." As was pointed out in Neelakandhan v. Ananthakrishna Ayyar (2), these words would ordinarily import a permanent grant unless there are circumstances which indicate that the intention was different. In that case the learned Judges held that the clause which provided for the renewal of the Kanom every 12 years by a new document was a sufficient indication that the transaction was an ordinary Kanom. Mr. Krishnaswamy Aiyar contended that in the present case also those circumstances exist. We are unable to agree with him. Exhibit I provides that instead of having the renewal fee paid in 1876 the amount of it should be spread over 12 years and should be made payable along with the rent. There is also the provision that subsequent to 1876 the rent should be at the rate at which it was being paid before that date. Even though we may concede that the additional amount paid along with the rent during the first twelve years may be taken as the equivalent of the renewal fee, we are unable to hold that the payments after 1876 must also be regarded as renewal fees, because under the customary law of Malabar a renewal fee is not ordinarily fixed before hand. Further the registration charges and other perquisities which are generally paid along with the renewal fee, have not been mentioned in this document. Moreover a renewal fee is fixed by the mortgagor at the time of the re-grant with reference to the then state of affairs. In our opinion, what the parties intended was that the rent payable should be increased for all time to come as the temple was benefited by such an arrangement.

(1) 40 Ind. Cas. 531; 40 M. 745; 32 M. L. J. 24.

(2) 30 M. 61; 16 M. L. J. 462; 1 M. L. T. 426.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the document should be treated as if it was a perpetual Kanom.

In this view the further question is whether it is binding upon the Devaswom. As was pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (3) it is not competent to a trustee to grant away permanently trust property. Therefore, we must hold that the permanent Kanom is not binding upon the plaintiff.

It was then argued by Mr. Madhavan Nair that even though the Kanom may not be binding, his clients have prescribed for a perpetual and irredeemable Kanom, and, therefore, they are entitled to hold on as long as they like. He is undoubtedly supported by Baluswami Aiyer v. Venkitaswamy Naicken (1) in this contention. To the decision in Muthusamier v. Sree Sree Methanithi Swamiyar Avergal (4), relied on by the learned Vakil for the respondent, one of the Judges who decided Baluswami Aiyer v. Venkitaswamy Naicken (1) was a party, and the learned Judges in the latter case say that Muthusamier v. Sree Sree Methanithi Swamiyar Avergal (4) is not good law. We are also of opinion that the estate held by a trustee should not be regarded as analogous to that of a widow. In Raja of Palghat v. Kannampra Nair Veetil (5), to which one of us was a party, it was pointed out that the trustees constitute a chain of representation of the trust. That is not quite consistent with holding that each trustee holds an estate similar to that of a Hindu widow. Our attention was drawn to two decisions of this Court, namely, Ramunni v. Kerala Varma Valia Raja (6) and Chirakkall Kovilagath v. Saidammadath Ayakomba (7), where under very similar circumstances it was held that possession will not be adverse. The learned Judges in the first of these cases point out that subsequent possession under an invalid permanent lease must be referred back to the possession taken under the valid lease. That was also the view taken in Chirakkal Kovilagath v. Saidammadath Ayakomba (7). As regards Baluswami Aiyer v. Venkitaswamy Naicker (1), it is enough to point out that possession in that case began for the first time under the permanent lease itself. Mr. Madhavan Nair argued that as his clients and the subsequent trustees treated the subsequent enjoyment as traceable to a permanent right, they must be deemed to have prescribed for that right. How many intermediate Ooralams there were and upon what understanding the Kanomdar and the Ooralams dealt with each other, are not clear. We have, therefore, resolved upon asking the lower Appellate Court to return a finding upon the question of adverse possession with reference to the observations contained in Ramunni v. Kerala Varma Valia Raja (6) and Chirakkal Kovilagath v. Saidammadath Ayakomba (7). No further evidence. Six weeks for finding and 7 days for objection.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Palghat at Calicut submitted the following FINDING.—The case has been remanded to this Court for determination of the following issue raised in second appeal.

Whether the defendants acquired a permanent and irredeemable Kanom interest in the suit properties by adverse possession?

2. So far as the facts bearing on the issue go, the evidence is extremely meagre. All that appears is that the defendants' Tarwad entered into possession under a Kanom arrangement prior to 1864. Then a fresh document (Exhibit I) was executed by the plaintiff's then predecessor-in-title confirming the original demise. Between the date of Exhibit I and the plaintiff's becoming trustee in Chingom 1088 (August September 1913), there were about 8 or 9 intervening trustees according to the defendants' first witness. The deposition of the plaintiff's first witness, Krishnan Embrandiri, is to the following effect:—"From 20 years" (sic) "plaintiff had 3 or 4 predecessors." This would give an average of one trustee every five years, which indicates an unusually rapid acceleration of life estates in the headship of the Thrikaikat Mutt to which is appurtenant the Oorakam Devaswom, the owner of the lands. Although there is no direct evidence on the point, I take it that subsequent to 1864 the trustee who granted Exhibit I and his successors dealt with the defendant on the basis of Exhibit I.

3. Exhibit II shows that within a month or two after the plaintiff's accession to the office his Kariastan has received arrears of rent according to the tenor of Exhibit I. Exhibit II refers to this document as 'the Saswathom deed.' This corroborates the view that Exhibit I evidences a permanent tenure, that being the interpretation which the parties themselves put upon it. Beyond this the evidence does not go, and it does not disclose any specific terms or covenants indicating any special understanding between the succeeding trustees and the Kanomdar. These being the facts, what is the legal position?

4. Mr. K. P. Raman Menon, who represents the plaintiff in this Court, based his arguments on the two decisions referred to in the order of remand and quoted also the rulings in Seshamma Chettati v. Chikaya Hegade (8), Rairu Nayar v. Moidin (9) and Ariyaputhira v. Muthukumarasawmy (10). The respondent-defendant's Vakil, Mr. K. Raman Nair, rested his arguments on the claim of prescriptive right set up in the High Court and he laid stress on the conduct of the parties shown by payment and acceptance of rent on the terms of Exhibit I. The respective arguments advanced at the Bar do not, however, meet all the aspects of the case.

5. As regards the defendants' position, if it can be held that Exhibit I was executed merely because the deed under which the original demise was granted had crumbled to pieces by reason of age or use, and that the later document is a replica of the older document, it is unquestionable that the Kanomdar can successfully set up the acquisition by prescriptive right of a permanent tenure so as to counter the plaintiff's claim by means of the bar of limitation. In such a case, possession having been taken under the first document which itself would be invalid according to the present day view of the powers of a Matadhipathi, the enjoyment of the lands by the Tarward would have been under a hostile claim to hold as permanent Kanomdar and would, after 12 years, ripen into a legal title on such a basis. It will be sufficient to refer to the latest authorities laying down the law in the above sense, Rameshwar Malia v. Jiu Thakur (11), Narsaya Udpa v. Venkataamana Bhatta (12), S. A. No. 1465 of 1917; (1918) M. W. N. Week's cases, CLXVII). The earlier cases will be found collected in Mr. Justice Mookerjee's judgment in Iswar Shyam Chand Jiu v. Ram Kanai Ghose (13). But such a defence is not open to the Kanomdar in view of the finding of their Lordships that the original Kanom was one of the usual simple kind. The defendant, therefore, has to fall back on the change of position effected by Exhibit I. His contention is that whatever might have been the relations between him and the Devaswom represented by the Uralans prior to 1864, a permanent tenure has been created in that year by means of Exhibit I and both sides having accepted and acted upon it for more than half a century, his rights must be referred to the altered state of things and that for this reason his title by prescription must be recognised. The question at this stage becomes difficult as it lends itself to two different lines of reasoning.

6. For the Kanomdar it may be said that a question of prescriptive right is mainly to be judged by the animus possidendi—See Thuppan Nambudripad v. Ittichiri Amma (14), Muthaya Shetti v. Kanthappa Shetti (15)—and that the course of conduct of the parties since 1864 can only be explained on the footing that the defendant held as a permanent demisee under Exhibit I and that this was known to and acquiesced in by the several Uralans. That possession in one right may be converted by mutual agreement into possession of another and a higher right has been laid down in Muthukaruppan v. Muthu Sumban (16). On the other hand, there is the consideration in favour of the plaintiff that a hostile right should not be inferred where possession can be referred to a lawful title. The origin of the defendant's possession being traceable to the earlier simple Kanom demise, and the later permanent tenure being liable to be successfully attacked by the plaintiff as invalid, it can be argued that the character of the Kanomdar's possession must be referred to its inception under the simple Kanom right. I have looked into the authorities bearing on the subject and it appears to be clear that the solution of the question raised for determination is furnished by the principles relating to novation of contracts and the estoppels arising therefrom.

7. If Exhibit I were valid or even voidable, the defendant would undoubtedly be entitled to say that his possession for such a long period invests him with the right put forward by him. But Exhibit I has been found to be invalid in the sense that the plaintiff can treat it as a void transaction. If the defendant's possession arose for the first time under Exhibit I, even then it will be competent to him to advance the plea of acquisition of a permanent right by prescription. But his possession began prior to Exhibit I and has continued uninterrupted all along. Exhibit I must, under the circumstances, be deemed to be merely an infructuous attempt to substitute for the original simple Kanom a saswatam tenure. The attempt at novation having failed, the law will relegate the parties to their original characters. As to the general rule reference may be made to Anantanarayana Iyer v. Savittri Ammal (17), Ramjiban Shah v. Dhiku Singh (18), Mathura Mohan Saha v. Ramkumar Saha (19).

8. Coming to the particular instances of the contractual relations between a mortgagor and a mortgagee and a landlord and his tenant, instances of the application of the rule will be found in Ariyaputhira v. Muthukumarasawmy (10), Ramunni v. Kerala Varma Valia Raja (6), Chirakkall Kovilagath v. Saidammadath Ayakomba (7). The present case isnot wholly a mortgage or wholly a lease but is a combination of both. See Silapani v. Ashtamurti Nambudri (20), Gopalan Nair v. Kunhan Menon (21), Meenakshisundara Mudaliar v. Rathnasami Pillai (22).

9. Viewed as a mortgage, the following observations of Sadasiva Ayyar, J., will be found in point. Says his Lordship: "The next contention of the appellant's Vakil based on the Limitation Act is not sustainable as, if the original mortgagee continued to hold possession as mortgagee owing to the alleged sale of 1893 being invalid and ineffective to convey to him the ownership in the equity of redemption in the A Schedule properties, he cannot by merely asserting possession as owner under the invalid sale convert his possession as mortgagee into possession as owner even granting that the mortgage" (? mortgagor) "knew and acquiesced in his assertion" [Ariyaputhira v. Muthukumarasawmy (10).] In its aspect of a lease the claim founded on Exhibit I must fail in view of what has been held in the case in Ramunni v. Kerala Varma Valia Raja (6), which is followed in Chirakkall Kovilagath v. Saidammadath Ayakomba (7).

10. Exhibit I was in renewal of a prior Kanom under which the defendant was already holding. The prior demise must be taken to continue unless it can be shown that it was put an end to according to law. The only ground on which such a view can be taken must be rested on Exhibit I. The transaction, therefore, comes under the class of implied surrenders by operation of law. But the law both in England and in India is well-settled that such a surrender would be valid only in case the later transaction is legally operative. But if the new arrangement fails, the implied surrender would become void and old relations between the parties will revive and continue. The Indian cases have been referred to already. The English Law will be found stated in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XVIII, section 1061. The matter, therefore, being concluded by the rules of estoppel, the principle of mutuality will shut the defendant's mouth as effectually from claiming a new right under the void transaction as it would prevent the plaintiff from approbating it for one purpose while reprobating it for another.

11. Judged from any point of view, I think it is not possible for the Kanomdar to set up a hostile new right referable to the invalid instrument of 1864.

12. The question of the legal effect of the payment and acceptance of rent on which some emphasis was laid on behalf of the Kanomdar does not merit much notice. The rent paid appears to have been on the basis of the earlier demise. Further, the mere payment of rent under the invalid transaction repudiated by the plaintiff is of no consequence, as will be seen from Baluswami Aiyer v. Venkitaswamy Naicken (1). Exhibit II shows that after plaintiff became trustee there was a payment of some arrears of rent. But he alleges that he came to know of the demise in question only subsequent to his accession to office and considering the few weeks' interval between the plaintiff's becoming the trustee and the payment evidenced by Exhibit II, I have no doubt that he could have had no knowledge of it so as to bring in the question of acquiescence or ratification. The plaintiff appears to have acted in repudiation of Exhibit I as soon as he came to know of it.

13. It has to be noticed that while the plaintiff denounces Exhibit I the suit itself is so framed as to claim redemption in foot of the permanent Kanom. Apparently, the plaintiff's position is that the terms of both the Kanoms were the same as regards the incidents of the Kanom amount and Purapad and that it would only be a theoretical distinction to hold that he should sue to redeem in terms the earlier Kanom. However this may be, I am not called upon to deal with the question.

14. My finding on the issue is in the negative.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—We accept the finding of the Subordinate Judge, who has written a clear and well-considered judgment. The result is that the defendants' possession taken under the simple Kanom continued even after the execution of Exhibit I and consequently no prescriptive right in respect of the terms of Exhibit I was acquired by the defendants. Mr. Madhavan Nair contends that there must be a further finding whether on the date of Exhibit I the previous Kanom was subsisting: We are satisfied from the recitals in Exhibit I, that it was subsisting in 1864. In this view, the suit for redeeming that Kanom is not barred: The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be confirmed on this ground. But seeing that the decree in this Court is based on the ground that the plaintiff is entitled to renew the old Kanom (which was not the case put forward by the plaintiff in either of the Courts below), we direct each party to bear his own costs throughout. Time for redemption will be six months from this date.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—The facts of this case are not disputed and are shortly as follows. The plaintiffs are the sons of one Baraik Kashinath Singh who had an ancestral Jagir of 8 annas of village Murga. In 1891 he purchased another 5 annas so that in all he had 13 annas of the village. On the 16th June 1904 he mortgaged his entire share to one Lal Jogindra Nath Sah Deo in order to raise money to pay off the debts of one Baraik Paduman Singh, whose estate was at that time being managed by the Manager of the Encumbered Estates. Jogindra Nath subsequently assigned his mortgage to Debendra Nath Sah Deo, the defendant in this case, who brought a mortgage suit, and after obtaining a decree put up the property to sale and purchased it himself. He obtained a delivery of possession on the 29th August 1913. Kashinath is dead and the case of the plaintiffs is that the bond executed by Kashinath was without legal necessity and was immoral and that it was executed by him without any right and they asked that the bond, the sale and the delivery of possession should not bind the plaintiffs' or their property and that the plaintiffs' ancestral Jagir right might be declared in the 13 annas which had been sold by Kashinath, that their possession might be confirmed and that of the defendants might be cancelled by declaring it null and void and illegal.

The learned Subordinate Judge who heard the appeal was of opinion that Kashinath expected some benefit from the loan to Baraik Paduman Singh and that the debt not being illegal or immoral it is binding on the plaintiffs who are liable for their deceased father's debts. In this view he has dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

The only question for consideration in this appeal is, whether the plaintiffs are liable for Kashinath's debt. According to the recital in the mortgage bond executed by Kashinath, the reason for lending the money is stated as follows :—"Now in consideration of the fact that Baraik Paduman Singh aforesaid is connected with us, and is a big Zemindar, and that as it is in every way incumbent on us to save his property we have unanimously decided that in order to help him at this juncture we should arrange for money and pay the same to him, so that his ancestral property may be saved and we too may be benefited in future. The said Baraik will repay our money on getting possession of his properties." It is clear then that the debt contracted by Kashinath was neither an immoral nor an illegal debt and that he expected to get some benefit from the payment of the money to Baraik Paduman Singh. The question of liability in cases of this kind has been very fully discussed in the ruling reported as Chakouri Mahton v. Ganga Proshad (1). At page 869* the texts on the point have been summarised by Mookerjee, J., in the following passage:

"The result appears to be that the debts which a son is not under any obligation to pay may be grouped as follows: (i) debts due for spirituous liquor, (ii) debts due for lust, (iii) debts due for gambling, (iv) unpaid fines, (v) unpaid tolls, (vi) useless gifts or promises without consideration, or made under the influence of lust or wrath, (vii) suretyship debts, (viii) commercial debts, and (ix) debts that are not Vyavaharika, i. e., debts that are not lawful, usual, or customary, or, if we accept the version of Colebrook, debts for a cause repugnant to good morals."

The only one of these categories under which this particular debt could possibly come would be useless gifts or debts which are not lawful, usual or customary, but it does not in fact come under either of them, because the debt was incurred to help a relative, it was expected that it would be repaid and Kashinath expected that he would get some benefit out of it. The plaintiffs, therefore, cannot escape liability for the debt.

In this view of the case the question of whether the suit can at all lie because section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure operates as a bar does not arise.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

ROE, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.

SCOTT, C. J.—Joitaram Chhagan and Magan Joitaram traded in grain and cloth in partnership from the year 1908 till April 1911, when Magan died and the business of the firm came to an end. Eight days after the death of his partner, namely, on the 27th April 1911, Joitaram executed two registered documents by which he purported to mortgage practically the whole of his immoveable property to the plaintiff for Rs. 5,000 or thereabouts. The property, which was his by right of ownership, was mortgaged for Rs. 4,000, and the property which he held as mortgagee was assigned to the plaintiff as security for Rs. 1,400. In June in the same year the defendant, a creditor of Joitaram, brought a suit against him and obtained a decree in execution of which the properties mortgaged to the plaintiff were attached. The plaintiff then applied that the properties should be sold subject to his lien, but his application was rejected and the plaintiff has brought this suit for a declaration that the defendant is not entitled to attach the properties and bring them to sale. The defendant's case is that the mortgage to the plaintiff was merely intended to defeat and delay the creditors of Joitaram, who was an insolvent at the time, and was not entered into in good faith for valuable consideration. On behalf of the plaintiff it is alleged that the consideration for the transaction was an already existing debt in respect of four loans previously made by the plaintiff to Joitaram of Rs. 2,000, 1,200, 1,300 and 1,000, amounting in all to Rs. 5,500.

The findings of the lower Courts establish that this case of four existing loans as a consideration for the mortgage transaction is entirely false, and that the only sum for which the plaintiff was a creditor of Joitaram at the time was possibly Rs. 1,300, but more probably Rs. 1,000. The value of the properties mortgaged, apart from those of which Joitaram was the mortgagee, was about Rs. 4,000 and in this appeal we are only concerned with that mortgage for Rs. 4,000. The finding of the lower Appellate Court is that "it is, to say the least of it, very doubtful, whether the transaction was intended to be a genuine mortgage at all. It purported to be a mortgage with possession, but the plaintiff never got possession, and though Joitaram executed some rent-notes in his favour, he never paid any rent. The explanations given of this are very unconvincing. If this was a real mortgage, and not a sham, one cannot understand why the plaintiff took no steps to exercise his rights under it and insist on the payment of rent." The learned Judge also holds that considering the circumstances in which the transaction took place, good faith on the plaintiff's part is out of the question. The inevitable conclusion appears to be that the plaintiff and Joitaram were in collusion in framing a mortgage deed upon a false consideration of Rs 4,000, whereas the only sum owing did not exceed Rs. 1,300, and considering the financial condition of Joitaram one must conclude that the parties were in collusion for the purpose of screening Joitaram's property from his creditors.

The only question which gives rise to any difficulty is whether the plaintiff is entitled to a declaration that he has a lien to the extent of the debt existing at the time of the mortgage. The case must be decided according to the provisions of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, for although there has been no suit to avoid the mortgage, the action of the defendant is tantamount to an avoidance if he has the right to avoid it as a creditor defeated or delayed. Section 53, so far as material, provides that every transfer of immoveable property, made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor, is voidable at the option of any person so defeated, or delayed, but nothing in the section shall impair the rights of any transferee in good faith for valuable consideration. There can be no doubt that the mortgage is a transfer of immoveable property, and that the plaintiff is a transferee, and upon the findings of fact there can be no doubt that the plaintiff is not a transferee in good faith. Therefore, the concluding words of the section do not apply to his case. The inferences deducible from the established facts show that both the transferor and the transferee had the intention of defeating or delaying the creditors of the transferor, and under those circumstances it appears to us that the document must, at the option of the person defeated or delayed, be treated as void in toto, and not merely as void in so far as there is no consideration.

In May on 'Fraudulent and Voluntary Dispositions of Property,' 3rd Edition, at page 63, it is stated, as the result of the English authorities, that a fraudulent intention, to which the purchaser was a party, will override all inquiry into the consideration, and among the cases cited in support of that proposition is Ex parte Chaplin; In re Sinclair (1), where a transfer was stated to be for a consideration which was entirely false, although there was some consideration proceeding from the transferee, and Lord Justice Fry held that the whole deed was void under the Statute of Elizabeth.

Similarly in Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahu (2) Mr. Justice Mookerjee states, after an exhaustive discussion of the authorities, that a conveyance or transfer, whether founded on a valuable or adequate consideration or not, if entered into by the parties thereto with the intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors, is void as to them.

It has been contended on behalf of the appellant that the judgment in Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahu (2) is inconsistent with that in Rajani Kumar Dass v. Gaur Kishore Shaha (3). In the latter case, however, at page 1057, we find the following passage:

"It has not been shown by any evidence, which may be said to be cogent, that the transaction of mortgage between the plaintiffs and the Deb defendants was entirely fraudulent, or for a grossly inadequate consideration and was intended only to defeat or delay the realization of the dues of the Dass defendants. If the considerations, for the mortgage (we use the plural number to include the two different sums—Rs. 4,853 and Rs. 3,647—which make up Rs. 8,500) could not be separated from each other, there would be good grounds for holding that the transfer evidenced by the deed was fraudulent. In that case the failure of consideration to the extent of Rs. 3,647, taken with the other proved facts, would lead to a reasonable conclusion that the mortgagees intended to help the mortgagors to defeat the realization of the debt covered by the hatchitta in favour of the Dass defendants. Such conduct on the part of the mortgagees and mortgagors would lead to the inference that they were acting in collusion."

Then further on the Court indicates with regard to the Rs. 3,647, as to the reality of which as part of the consideration there was some doubt, "it might...be that the plaintiffs had a bona fide intention of advancing the additional sum for enabling the mortgagors to carry on their business, that they put off payment until the money was needed or until registration of the deed, but that as the Dass defendants either commenced their suit, or were about to do so for a larger sum than Rs. 3,647, the plaintiff withheld payment of the additional sum They might not have had any such intention as would invalidate the instrument under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. Their moral turpitude in making a false case afterwards in the present proceedings would not be sufficient to deprive them of their legal rights, though a false case might reflect discredit on the original transaction." It appears from this that the Judges in that case did not in any way dissent from the law as laid down in the earlier volume. Being of opinion then that the consideration stated in the mortgage-deed must in the circumstances of the case be treated as one and indivisible, we are of opinion that the plaintiffs' case must fail. We, therefore, affirm the decree and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Decree affirmed.

I, Art. 132—Mortgage, payable on demand—Limitation, commencement of—Transferee, position of.

Section 126 of the Contract Act makes no difference between an oral and a written guarantee, the former being as equally binding as the latter. [p. 686, col 2; p. 687, col. 1.]

Where a surety has paid off the whole debt, he is entitled to stand in the place of the creditor who has been so paid off and is entitled to the benefit of every security which the creditor had against the debtor at the time when the surety was entered into. [p. 687, col. 1.]

Where a mortgage is payable on demand, time begins to run from the date of its execution, and in order to succeed in a suit to enforce the mortgage the suit must be brought within twelve years of its execution, otherwise it will be barred by time. This rule applies equally to a transferee of mortgage rights, who in this respect can be put in no better position than the mortgagee. [p. 687, col. 1.]

First appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Shahjahanpur, dated the 15th of August 1916.

The Hon'ble Mr. Moti Lal Nehru and Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Abdur Rauf, B. E. O'Conor, Ishaq Khan and Baleshwari Pershad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Khurshed Ali Mian and his wife Musammat Latifunnissa executed the two mortgages, the subject of this appeal:—

(1) dated the 14th June 1899, in favour of Darbari Lal, for Rs. 3,000, and

(2) dated 27th July 1900, for the same amount in favour of Darbari Lal and Lalta Pershad.

They had also executed two other mortgages, dated 20th November 1897 and 10th August 1899, in favour of Lalta Pershad alone. Those two mortgages formed the subject of the connected suit, and are disposed of by our judgment in First Appeal No. 264.

The only reason for mentioning this fact is because the two suits were tried together, and the evidence was recorded in one only and in order to appreciate (correctly) the evidence in this case, it is necessary to remember the circumstances of the other case as well.

Khurshed Ail died in 1905 and in 1906 the creditors, that is Lalta Parshad and Darbari Lal, demanded payment. Musammat Latifunnissa asked for time, which the creditors agreed to give her, provided they got security for their debts. Latifunnissa appealed to her sister, Rani Barkatunnissa, (plaintiff-appellant), who was a wealthy woman, and she agreed to secure all the four mortgage-debts. On their side the creditors agreed to reduce the rate of interest. All four mortgages were paid off by Barkatunnissa, according to the plaint, and these suits were brought by her to recover the amounts so paid from the sons and daughters of Khurshed Ali and Latifunnissa, who also is now dead. This suit was filed on the 7th June 1915.

The defendants are three adult sons, three adult daughters and some minors under the guardianship of Musammat Hasina Begam. One of the adult sons, Mahbub Ali, admitted the claim and is the chief witness in the case. The two other adult sons and one of the adult daughters did not appear to contest the suit. Two adult daughters only, Musammats Hasina Begam and Anwari Begam, opposed the claim.

It is, we think, necessary to bear this circumstance in mind in judging the value to be assigned to the evidence in the case.

The contesting defendants in this case admitted the execution of the mortgages but pleaded that the mortgages had been paid off by Musammat Latifunnissa herself out of her own funds, and that Musammat Barkatunnissa, in fact, paid nothing. But they go on to say that if the Court holds that Barkatunnissa made any or all of the payments she cannot recover them from the defendants, as the payments were merely voluntary, and, therefore, gave her no lien over the defendants' property.

The Court framed two main issues:—

(1) Whether the plaintiff stood surety for payment of the money due under the two bonds in suit; and made payments as surety?

(2) Whether she can obtain a decree for sale?

The Court held that the plaintiff paid off the mortgage of 27th July 1900 on the 12th October 1906 by a payment of Rs. 6,300 but that she did not do so as a surety, and, therefore, cannot get a decree for this amount.

With regard to the second mortgage, the plaintiff claimed to recover 7 items:—

	Rs.	a.	p.
1.	628	15	0	on 25th March 1908.
2.	606	7	0	on 17th March 1909.
3.	1,204	13	0	on 24th September 1910.
4.	2,441	0	0	on 17th June 1911.
5.	2,426	6	9	on 25th June 1912.
6.	1,376	0	0	on 15th January 1913.
7.	1,500	0	0	on 17th January 1913.

The Court below has held that all these payments were made (though it has not discussed item No. 7 in its judgment), and apparently were made by money advanced by the plaintiff, but it held that, although there was no reason to suppose that Barkatunnissa advanced the money voluntarily, still as "there was no privity of contract between the plaintiff and Darbari Lal and as she gave no guarantee to the latter, she did not become invested with the rights of Darbari Lal against the mortgaged property, and, therefore, she could not get a decree for sale." It seems to have come to the conclusion that item No. 7 had not been proved, and held that inasmuch as item No. 5 could not be traced in the account books of the plaintiff, it could not be held with certainty that the plaintiff had paid it. In the result it gave plaintiff a simple money-decree for item No. 6, for Rs. 1,376 with future interest, and held that the rest of the payments having been made more than 3 years before suit were irrecoverable, being barred by limitation.

The plaintiff has appealed and claimed to recover the whole amount.

Before discussing the law, it will be convenient to set out what we find to be the facts.

Khurshed Ali and his wife, though possessed of some property, made these four mortgages, between the years 1897 and 1900. They paid nothing towards either interest or capital. In 1906 the mortgagees began to press for their money, and then it was that Musammat Latifunnissa (her husband having died as said above) turned to her sister the plaintiff for help. The evidence of what then happened consists of the testimony of Mahbub Ali (defendant No. 1, son of Latifunnissa) and Darbari Lal, and three documents:—(1) a security bond executed by the plaintiff, dated the 6th October 1906, (2) an agreement executed by Lalta Parshad, since deceased, dated 12th October 1906, and (3) a document executed by Darbari Lal, dated 12th October 1906. The only other person who is said to have taken part in the negotiations was Har Dayal, the karinda of the plaintiff, but he is dead.

Mahbub Ali swears that after Khurshed Ali's death, Lalta Parshad and Darbari Lal (it will be remembered that two of these four mortgages were in favour of Lalta Par-shad alone, one in favour of Lalta Parshad alone, one in favour of Darbari Lal alone, and the other in their favour jointly) pressed Musammat Latifunnissa for payment. Mahbub Ali stated: "My mother said, 'give me time.' Thereupon, the bankers said, 'if you give security for the money we will give you time and reduce interest as well.' My mother said, 'I will speak to my sister and if she accept it I will give the security.' My mother sent me to the plaintiff. I went and mentioned full particulars. Thereupon the plaintiff consented and said, 'go and bring from the bankers the conditions of the security bond.' Thereupon, I came to Shahjahanpur and told the same to the bankers. They gave a draft of the conditions and I took it to the plaintiff, who accepted it and executed the security bond. When I brought the security bond and gave it to Lalta Parshad, he and Darbari Lal, having seen it, executed separate agreements with the stipulations that they would continue to charge interest in future, at the rate of 12 per cent. per mensem, on the amount that was due up to that day." Mahbub Ali has not been disbelieved by the Subordinate Judge, in fact his evidence has been accepted generally, he has not been in any way broken down in cross-examination and as his statement is against his own interest, we think it quite safe to act upon it. It will be remembered that his other two adult brothers and one adult sister have not contested the suit, and, therefore, tacitly accept the plaintiff's version.

Darbari Lal's version is not quite the same, but his evidence is not very satisfactory, because his memory seems to be defective. Thus, when shown the document executed by him on 12th October 1906 in which he agreed to reduce the rate of interest on the bond of the 14th June 1899, (the other one having been that day paid off) he admits that it bears his signature beyond any doubt, but he says he has no recollection of ever having executed it. His words are: "I do not remember exactly if I executed such an agreement. I think there was a verbal agreement," but he admits that he accepted interest at the reduced rate from that date. He says he did not know Barkatunnissa, and never had any conversation with her, which is probably quite true as she is a pardanashin lady. He says he does not know her karinda, although he admits that he had dealings with her and that her servants used to come to his shop. As to the plaintiff standing security for the payment of his one remaining mortgage, he says she did not. He did not require security as apparently the property mortgaged was sufficient security in itself. He admits that Mahbub Ali from time to time made payments and that the mortgage was paid off by such payments.

Mahbub Ali says that Hardayal did enter into negotiations with Darbari Lal, but whether Darbari Lal has forgotten or whether Mahbub Ali is mistaken, is not very important. The fact remains that on the 12th October 1906 both Darbari Lal and Lalta Parshad agreed to reduce the rate of interest. Lalta Parshad alone required a security bond. Mahbub Ali says, in corroboration of Darbari Lal, that as a large amount of money (Rs 6,300) was paid to Darbari Lal, and only one mortgage for Rs. 3,000 in his name remained due, he (Darbari Lal) did not think the execution of a security bond to be necessary. It may well be that while Lalta Parshad to whom the large sum of Rs. 23,000 was still due on two mortgages required a security bond from Barkatunnissa, Darbari Lal considered himself already sufficiently secured, as he says, by the property hypothecated in his bond.

It seems quite clear that both Lalta Parshad and Darbari Lal were acting together in these negotiations, and we are satisfied that Barkatunnissa guaranteed the payments of all these mortgages. Whether Darbari Lal was or was not aware of this (though we are inclined to think he was) seems to us immaterial and even if there was no privity of contract between Barkatunnissa and Darbari Lal, that is no bar to Barkatunnissa recovering from the defendants what she paid on account of the defendants' parents' debt, if she is otherwise entitled to recover. It is admitted in argument that, at any rate, the bulk of the money was paid by Barkatunnissa.

We have now to discuss Barkatunnissa's legal position. We find, as the lower Court did, that there was an oral guarantee given by Barkatunnissa to Latifunnissa, and that it was not voluntary. Section 126 of the Indian Contract Act makes no difference between an oral and a written guarantee. See also section 187 of the Act.

We have now to consider the effect of sections 140 and 141 of the Act.

Under section 140 it seems to us that when the surety has paid off the whole debt, he is entitled to stand in the place of the creditor who has been so paid off, and under section 141 the surety is entitled to the benefit of every security which the creditor has against the debtor at the time when the contract of surety is entered into. We have no doubt that Rani Barkatunnissa was fully informed about the mortgages, and that she agreed to pay up her sister's debts, and that the creditors for that reason agreed on a lower rate of interest being charged in the future. So far there is no difficulty.

The appellants' Counsel claims that the plaintiff can take the benefit of both mortgages, and is entitled to a decree for sale of the properties hypothecated under both.

A difficulty at once arises with regard to the mortgage of the 27th July 1900. That was payable on demand, and time began to run from the date of its execution. Barkatunnissa (plaintiff) paid it up in full on October 12th, 1906. Her suit was brought in 1915, that is to say, within twelve years of her paying it off, but long after twelve years of its execution. On consideration, we hold that she should have brought her suit on the basis of this security within twelve years of its execution and not having done so, her claim under this head is barred by time. We cannot see how she as a transferee of the mortgagee rights can be put in a better position than the mortgagee. She had approximately six years within which to sue; as she did not sue in this interval, we must hold that her present claim is barred, and in so far we accept the decision of the lower Court.

The same difficulty is not present in regard to the second mortgage. Payments were made yearly in reduction of both principal and interest upto 1913. The suit was brought in 1915 within 3 years of the penultimate payment, and the suit is, therefore, clearly within time.

We have, therefore, only to satisfy ourselves that the seven items claimed by the plaintiff as having been paid by her were in fact so paid. The learned Counsel for the appellant plaintiff very frankly admitted that item No. 7 has not been brought home to the plaintiff as clearly as the others, and that, therefore, there may be a possible doubt whether in fact the plaintiff paid it. We, therefore, agree with the lower Court in not accepting this item.

The other items seem to us to be proved. The Subordinate Judge has not disbelieved Mahbub Ali, who said he paid them from the monies of Barkatunnissa. The sums were undoubtedly paid and there is no evidence that Musammat Latifunnissa paid them out of her own pocket. The learned Subordinate Judge, exercising perhaps undue caution, refused to credit Barkatunnissa with any item which was not clearly demonstrable from her books. We are, however, satisfied that all these items are shown in the plaintiffs' books. We took exception to one small item of about Rs. 125 in the other case, as not having been necessarily paid in reduction of the mortgage-debt involved in that case, for the reasons given in our judgment in the connected appeal. On all the other disputed items we are satisfied that what happened was that a particular sum was paid to both creditors but entered in the plaintiff's books as a single debit.

We, therefore, think that the appeal must be allowed in part, and the decree of the Court be amended. It is, therefore, ordered and decreed as follows:—

That the decree of the Court below is modified to this extent that in addition the plaintiff shall get a decree for items Nos. 1 to 5 inclusive with future interest against all the defendants and is entitled to bring the property hypothecated to sale in satisfaction of her decree. The appellant will get her costs and pay them in proportion to her success or failure in both Courts; costs in this Court include fees on the higher scale.

Appeal allowed in part;
Decree modified.

If the karnavan for the time being of a tarwad submits to the infringement of the tarwad's rights of property, the next senior member may take proceedings.

Where a plaintiff karnavan died after a decree, and it was found that his successor was colluding with the defendants:

Held, that the next senior member of the tarwad was competent to file an appeal.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Palghat at Calicut, in Appeal Suit No. 222 of 1917 (Appeal Suit No. 164 of 1917, on the file of the District Court), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Palghat, in Original Suit No. 364 of 1914.

JUDGMENT.—The Karnavan, who brought the suit in this Court died after decree, and the lower Appellate Court finds that the Karnavan who succeeded him was not interested in filing an appeal as he sided with the defendants in the suit. It has been held in Raja of Arakal v. Kunhi Kannan (1) that if the Karnavan for the time being is submitting to an infringement of the Tarwad's rights of property, the next senior member may take proceedings. The appellants in the lower Appellate Court are interested parties within the decision and the present Karnavan was joined as party respondent.

We are of opinion that the appeal was properly brought and we set aside the appellate decree and pass a decree restraining the respondents Nos. 1 to 5 from removing the timber logs and other materials found by the Subordinate Judge to be the property of the Tarwad (paragraph 11 of his judgment) from the possession or control of the 6th respondent or otherwise interfering with the rights of the Tarwad therein.

Respondents Nos. 1 to 5 will pay costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. VII, r. 10, O. XXXIII, r. 8, O. XLIII, r. 1 (a)—Application for leave to sue as pauper—Order returning application for presentation to proper Court, legality of—Appeal, whether lies—Irregularity—Revision.

An application for leave to sue as a pauper is not a plaint, and it only reaches the stage of a plaint when it is granted. Where, therefore, a Court, regarding such application as a plaint, directs it to be returned for presentation to the proper Court, it acts without jurisdiction, and, although such an order is not appealable, the High Court will, in the exercise of its powers of revision, interfere and set the order aside.

Civil revision against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Allahabad, dated the 4th July 1918.

Mr. Vishnu Nath, for the Applicant.

Messrs. S. C. Chaudhri and A. C. Mittra, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant presented an application in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Allahabad for leave to sue as a pauper for the recovery of a certain sum of money. The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that no cause of action accrued to the plaintiff within the jurisdiction of his Court. He accordingly made an order in the following terms :—

"I return the plaint for presentation to the proper Court." From this order the present appeal has been preferred. A preliminary objection has been taken on behalf of the respondent to the effect that no appeal lies. If the order is in reality an order returning a plaint an appeal does lie under Order XLIII, rule 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure, but what we have to consider is whether there was any plaint before the Court at the time when it made this order. Order XXXIII provides the procedure for suits by paupers. Rule 2 of the Order provides that "every application for permission to sue as a pauper shall contain the particulars required in regard to plaints in suits and a schedule of any moveable and immoveable property belonging to the applicant with the estimated value thereof." Rule 4 provides that "where the application is in proper form and duly presented the Court may, if it thinks fit, examine the applicant or his agent." Under rule 5 the Court shall reject an application for permission to sue as a pauper in the cases specified in that section. Rule 6 provides that if the Court sees no reason to reject the application on any of the grounds stated in rule 5, it shall fix a day of which notice shall be given to the opposite party and the Government. Rule 8 provides that "where the application is granted it shall be numbered and registered and shall be deemed the plaint in the suit." It is thus manifest that what was presented to the Court was not a plaint but an application and it would reach the stage of a plaint when the application was granted, and it would then be deemed to be the plaint in the suit. The Court below did not adopt any of the procedure mentioned in the rules to which we have referred above, but it proceeded to consider whether it had jurisdiction to entertain the suit and holding that it had no jurisdiction, it ordered the application which it regarded as the plaint to be returned. As at that stage there was no plaint before the Court, the order must be deemed to be an order returning the application. For this there is no authority in Order XXXIII. If the order be deemed to be a right order returning a plaint an appeal lies from that order, but in the present case the order cannot be held to be an order returning a plaint but it is an order returning an application. Such an order was passed without jurisdiction and should not have been passed. Although, therefore, no appeal is allowed from the order which is clearly an improper order, we deem it desirable in the exercise of our powers of revision to treat this appeal as an application for revision and so treating it we think we should be justified in setting aside the order of the Court below and in sending back the case to that Court with directions to adopt the procedure mentioned in Order XXXIII of the Code. We accordingly order that the application returned by the Court below and filed with the memorandum of appeal in this case, be sent to the Court below with directions to deal with it in the manner indicated above. We make no order as to the costs of this appeal.

Application sent back.

THE OFFICIAL RECEIVER OF TINNEVELLY—RESPONDENT.

Provincial Insolvency Act III of 1907, s 42—Annulment of insolvency, application for—Payment of debts, proof of—Payment through Official Receiver, whether necessary.

Where a person who has been adjudicated an insolvent applies for the adjudication to be annulled on the ground that his debts have been paid in full, the fact that such payments were not made through the Official Receiver is no justification for refusing to grant the annulment The petitioner should be put to proof of the allegations made by him. [p. 690, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Court, Tinnevelly, in I. P. No. 14 of 1914.

FACTS.—Application to get an adjudication as insolvent annulled. The application was dismissed on the ground that there was no proof that the debts were paid through the Official Receiver, who had reported that the debts had not been discharged.

Mr. M. D. Devadoss, for the Petitioners.—The law does not require that payment should be made through the Official Receiver and the lower Court was bound to have inquired whether in fact the payments were made and the debts discharged.

Mr. T. R. Venkatrama Sastri, for the Respondent.

[OLDFIELD, J.—Do you support the general proposition that all payments must be through the Official Receiver ?]

The reason for the rule is that if so made, the payments could be believed. And, in fact, the evidence in the present case is that no payments were made.

[ABDUR RAHIM, J.—But the order of the Judge is based on the general proposition alone.]

I am not prepared to support it by itself.

JUDGMENT.—Section 42 of the Provincial Insolvency Act lays down "where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the debts of the insolvent have been paid in full, the Court shall, on the application of the debtor or of any other person interested, by order in writing annul the adjudication." The learned District Judge, in disposing of the appellants' petition under this section, says that as the payments had not been made through the Official Receiver, he could not grant the annulment sought for and has dismissed the petition. We do not understand how the learned Judge came to hold that, unless the payments alleged to have been made by the insolvent were made through the Official Receiver, annulment could not be granted. Section 42 does not require that the payments should be made through the Official Receiver, and Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri appearing for the Official Receiver is unable to cite any authority in support of the proposition laid down by the learned Judge. The learned Judge ought to have enquired into the truth of the allegations made by the petitioner and if he was able to prove that his debts had been paid in full, the adjudication should have been annulled. We, therefore, set aside the order of the District Judge and direct him to dispose of the petition in accordance with law. Costs will abide the result.

Res judicata—Estoppel—Mortgage by way of conditional sale followed by simple mortgage—Suit on simple mortgage—Purchase of equity of redemption in execution of decree—Suit to enforce conditional sale—Claim for full amount due—Denial of purchase of equity of redemption, effect of Suit, subsequent, for declaration of full ownership, maintainability of.

T. executed three deeds of conditional sale in favour of the Raja of Bansi, and subsequently executed a simple mortgage in the Raja's favour. The Raja instituted a suit on the last mortgage and obtained a simple money-decree, in execution of which he brought to sale the whole of the equity of redemption of some of the properties mentioned in the deeds of conditional sale, and a portion of the equity of redemption of others, and purchased these interests himself, and continued in possession without causing any entries to be made in the revenue records as to the properties of which he was the mortgagee and those of which he was the owner. The Raja then sued for foreclosure in respect of the three deeds of conditional sale, and demanded the full amount due thereon; he made no mention that he had purchased any portion of the equity of redemption, nor did he allow for any reduction in the amount to be paid for redemption in virtue of his purchase of a portion of the equity of redemption and, in the course of the suit, denied that he had made such a purchase. He obtained a decree and the mortgagor paid up the amounts due. The Raja then instituted the present suit for a declaration that he was the full owner of the properties of which he had purchased the equity of redemption. The trial Court dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred both by res judicata and by the principle of estoppel. On appeal to the High Court, Held, that the suit had been rightly dismissed, and that as the Raja had deliberately agreed to return the property free of all incumbrances on being paid a certain sum and as that sum had been paid the suit was barred by equitable estoppel, and this would be so even if the defendant was in a position to know that the plaintiff had a title under which he could have retained full proprietary rights over a portion of the property concerned. RATTAN SEN SINGH v. TRIPATHI UGARNATH.

JUDGMENT.—Tripathi Ugarnath, who is the head of a family of Tewari Brahmins in the Bansi Sub-Division of the Basti District, executed three deeds of conditional sale on the 8th June 1883, the 8th September 1884 and the 19th June 1885 in favour of Raja Ram Singh, who was then Raja of Bansi. By these deeds he mortgaged various properties. On the 17th March 1887 Tripathi Ugarnath executed a deed of simple mortgage in favour of Raja Ram Singh. The Raja instituted a suit on the basis of the deed of the 17th March 1887. In the course of the proceedings he withdrew all claim for relief other than a simple money decree. He obtained a simple money decree on the 28th April 1894, and in execution of that simple money decree he brought to sale (in some instances) the whole of the equity of redemption in certain property mortgaged under the first three deeds, and (in other instances) a portion of the equity of redemption in certain other property mortgaged under the first three deeds, and purchased these interests himself. The sale took place on the 20th May 1901, and was confirmed on the 16th July 1901. The Raja, being in possession of the property mortgaged under the first three deeds, continued in possession but made no attempt whatever to have an entry made in the revenue papers to show of what portion of the property he was mortgagee and of what portion he was owner. The Raja died. He was succeeded by Raja Rattan Sen Singh, who died during the course of these proceedings. Raja Rattan Sen Singh instituted suits for foreclosure on the first three deeds. In those suits he demanded that the mortgagors should pay the full amount due on these deeds but did not state anywhere that he had purchased any portion of the right of equity of redemption himself, and he allowed for no reduction of the amount to be paid for redemption in view of the fact that he had acquired a portion of the equity of redemption himself, and when the other side suggested (in one suit at any rate) that he had purchased a portion of the equity of redemption himself, he appears to have denied the allegation. He obtained decrees in the following form:—

"That the full amount due under the deeds should be paid to him by certain date and if those amounts are not paid to him, the property should be held foreclosed to him but that if the amounts were paid, it should be incumbent on him to return the property to the defendants clear of all mortgages and charges which the plaintiff or anybody through him might have created on it as also to give possession over the property to the defendants." The mortgagors paid up the amounts due under the decrees in 1911 and 1912. The Raja then instituted a suit for a declaration that he was full owner of portions of the property to the extent to which he had purchased the portions of the rights of the equity of redemption. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed his suit on the ground that it was barred both by res judicata and by the principle of estoppel. The present first appeal is preferred. We consider that the learned Subordinate Judge rightly dismissed the suit. He states in his judgment:

"Leaving aside the many arguments which the learned lawyers addressed to me on behalf of the plaintiff and the learned expositions of the law of res judicata which they made, what I want to ask is how can the plaintiff back out of the express order in the decree whether rightly or wrongly made. I do not think he can so long as decrees are decrees." There is much sound sense in this reasoning. Further it is to be noted that by carefully suppressing his present pleas the plaintiff-appellant obtained something like double the amount of the money to which he would have been entitled had he advanced them. We consider this a clear case of res judicata, and the plea of equitable estoppel appears also to have been made out in spite of the fact that it must be presumed that the defendants-respondents were aware of the purchase of the rights of equity of redemption. But it is to be noted that when they themselves put the point forward apparently in order to reduce the amounts that they had to pay, the plaintiff-appellant apparently denied that he had made any purchase, and the Court held against the defendants respondents because they were unable to prove the allegation. When the plaintiff-appellant deliberately agreed to return the property to the defendants clear of all mortgages and charges provided they paid a certain amount, and they did pay that amount, it appears to us that this suit would be barred by equitable estoppel, even if the defendants-respondents were in a position to know that the plaintiff-appellant had a title under which he could have retained full proprietary rights over a portion of the property concerned.

We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs, including fees on the higher scale.

Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (XI of 1859), s. 34, application of Suit by third party for relief not provided by Act.

Section 34 of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act applies merely to the case of an owner who has committed default in payment of the revenue rent of his property and who, subsequently, by a suit succeeds in setting aside the sale held under that Act, and who has applied for and withdrawn the surplus purchase-money lodged in the Collectorate under such sale for his own benefit. [p. 693, col. .]

The section has no application to a suit instituted by a third party against an auction-purchaser at a revenue sale, e.g., a suit by the reversioners, in respect of a claim for relief not provided by the Act itself. [p. 693, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

ATKINSON, J.—Lalji Thakur died childless possessed of an estate situate in Mouza Sembhuar. Upon his death he was succeeded by his mother, Musammat Phani Thakurain, who thereupon became entitled to a Hindu widow's estate therein.

During her possession of the estate as a Hindu widow, she allowed the revenue rent due and payable to Government to fall into arrear. The estate to which Musammat Phani Thakurain succeeded was a revenue rent paying estate. The actual amount due for arrears of revenue was the sum of Rs. 6 odd; and the actual amount thereof in respect of which default was committed and for which the property was sold was Re. 1-4-0.

The property was sold by the Collector on the 5th June 1911 in pursuance of the powers vested in him under the Revenue Sales Act, Act XI of 1859, and was purchased by the judgment-debtor before us, viz., Bansi Singh, who paid for the property sold the sum of Rs. 1,300 odd.

The plaintiffs as reversionary heirs of Lalji Thakur instituted the original suit connected with these miscellaneous appeals, claiming a declaration that the sale effected by the Collector as aforesaid under the Revenue Sales Act was invalid and inoperative to bind the reversioners, on the ground that Musammat Thakurain, the mother of the last male owner, had conspired with others including the purchaser to fraudulently force the property to be sold in defeasance of the rights of the plaintiffs.

The case came on for hearing and was tried by the learned District Judge of Darbhanga; and the learned District Judge decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiffs, granting them the declaration which they sought by the prayer of their plaint.

From the decision of the learned District Judge an appeal was preferred to the High Court, and this Court by its order of the 17th August 1916 reversed the decree granted by the learned District Judge and held that the property then in suit was not fraudulently brought to sale by Musammat Phani Thakurain and others acting jointly with her.

Subsequently, however, the High Court was asked to review its previous order or decision, dated the 17th August 1916; and upon review two of our learned brothers of this Court were pleased to direct, by their order dated the 4th April 1918, that the appeal presented to the High Court should be dismissed, which in effect operated to restore the decree pronounced by the learned District Judge, granting the plaintiffs the relief claimed by them.

Pending the appeal, Musammat Phani Thakurain died.

By the order pronounced by this Court, dated the 17th August 1916, the plaintiffs were obliged to lodge in Court the costs awarded against them by that order. This the plaintiffs did: and the amount for costs so lodged by the plaintiffs was withdrawn by Bansi Singh, who was the auction purchaser as aforesaid at the revenue sale.

It is necessary to observe that the sale effected by the Collector was never impeached on any ground specified by the Revenue Sales Act, so that the sale so effected by the Collector was binding and operative.

After the High Court's order of the 4th April 1918 an application was made to the learned District Judge by the plaintiffs seeking to have restored to them the amount of costs which they deposited in Court by the direction of this Court's order, dated the 17th August 1916, which money was withdrawn by Bansi Singh.

This application is covered by Miscellaneous Appeal No. 44 of 1919.

A second application was also made by the plaintiffs seeking to execute as against Bansi Singh, the auction-purchaser, the decree for the amount of costs to which the plaintiffs became entitled as a result of the litigation terminating in their favour.

The learned District Judge by his order, dated the 4th January 1919, rejected the contention put forward on behalf of the judgment-debtor and acceded to the application presented on behalf of the plaintiffs and directed restitution of the monies which Bansi Singh had withdrawn from Court as and for costs; and the learned Judge also gave the plaintiffs permission to execute their decree for costs in respect of the costs incurred not only in the High Court but also in the Subordinate Courts as against Bansi Singh.

From the order of the learned Judge two miscellaneous appeals have been preferred before us.

The contention is that by virtue of section 34 of the Revenue Sales Act XI of 1859, the plaintiffs are not entitled to the relief which they now seek.

It is necessary to state that when Bansi Singh, the auction purchaser, deposited in the Collectorate the amount due by him as the purchase-money in respect of his purchase of the estate sold, Musammat Phani Thakurain withdrew the money so lodged in the Collectorate and applied the same for her own use; and, so far as can be gathered, no portion of such monies ever reached the hands or possession of the plaintiffs.

It is contended that, by reason of this payment into the Collectorate by Bansi Singh and the withdrawal of the monies so lodged by him by Musammat Phani Thakurain, the plaintiffs are not entitled to seek or ask for restitution of the amount for costs paid into Court by them and withdrawn by Bansi Singh, unless and until the plaintiffs reimburse the purchaser the amount of the surplus purchase monies which the mother of the last male owner withdrew from the Collectorate. With that contention we cannot agree.

Section 34 of the Revenue Sales Act has, in our opinion, no application to the facts of this case at all. It applies merely to the case of an owner who has committed default in payment of the revenue rent of his property, and who subsequently by a suit succeeds in setting aside the sale held under the Revenue Sales Act, and which owner has applied for and withdrawn the surplus purchase money lodged in the Collectorate under such sale for his own benefit.

Section 34 provides that, in such event, if the owner on default of the payment of Government revenue seeks to be restored to his own property on the sale being set aside, on any of the grounds specified in the Act itself, he must refund to the purchaser whatever monies belonging to the purchaser he has acquired for his own benefit, and the section prescribes a limit of six months within which time such refund must be made.

Obviously section 34 of Act XI of 1859 has no application to a suit instituted by third parties against an auction-purchaser at a revenue sale such, for example, as the reversioners in this case, in respect of a claim for relief not provided by the Act itself.

Accordingly section 144, Civil Procedure Code, is the section which governs the rights of the parties in the present application, and clearly this is a case in which restitution ought to be made to the plaintiffs of the amount for costs which they deposited under the order of this Court and which Bansi Singh duly withdrew.

Therefore, with regard to the decision of the learned District Judge in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 44, we agree that his finding in law and fact was right.

With regard to Miscellaneous Appeal No. 42 we fail to see on what principle the plaintiffs should not be entitled to recover from the judgment-debtor, Bansi Singh, the costs to which they are properly entitled by reason of their success in the litigation which they instituted, and in which Bansi Singh was substantially defeated.

It is contended that the order of this Court made on the 4th April 1918 is silent as to any award in respect of costs incurred in the lower Court: but inasmuch as the order of this Court, dated the 4th April 1918, was an order of affirmance, and the appeal was dismissed with costs, it clearly, in our opinion, was intended that the costs in all Courts should follow as a matter of right on the successful event and be awarded to the plaintiffs.

Therefore, we see no reason in law or principle why the plaintiffs should not be entitled to read the full fruits of their victory.

Accordingly we dismiss both these appeals with costs, measured at five gold mohurs to cover both cases.

Vizagapatam Agency Rules, rr. 17, 19, 20—Appellate judgment of Assistant Agent—High Court, power of, to direct review under r. 20—Remedy of aggrieved party.

Under the Vizagapatam Agency Rules the only course open to a party dissatisfied with an appellate judgment passed by an Assistant Agent is to appeal to the Agent under rule 17, and not to move the High Court to direct a review under rule 20, as, for the purposes of that rule, the judgment of the Assistant Agent cannot be treated as passed by the Agent.

Petition, under rule 20 of the Agency Rules, praying that in the circumstances stated in the memorandum of Civil Miscellaneous Petition the High Court will be pleased to issue an order directing the Special Assistant Agent, Vizianagaram Division, to review his judgment in Agency Appeal No. 1 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Special Assistant Agent, Koraput Division, in Original Suit No. 37 of 1916.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Richmond, for the Petitioner.

The Hon'ble Rao Bahadur B. N. Sarma, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Mr. B. N. Sarma objects that the petition cannot be heard because it is presented as authorised by Agency Rule 20. But that rule deals only with petitions for an order directing the Agent to review his own judgments: and we do not see how we can treat the judgment of an Assistant Agent as passed by the Agent for this purpose. The appeal in which that judgment was passed was transferred to the Assistant Agent under Agency Rule 19, and the only course open under the rules for any party dissatisfied with an appellate judgment passed in these circumstances appears to be under rule 17 to appeal to the Agent, not to move this Court, as petitioner prefers to do. We are, therefore, constrained to dismiss the petition with costs. We observe that in case an appeal is presented to the Agent, he will be well advised to consider the propriety of excluding the time taken in the present proceedings in dealing with the limitation applicable.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Son given in adoption, whether acquires any rights in property of natural father—Execution of decree—Decree obtained by father—Adopted son, whether can execute decree after death of father.

A son given in adoption cannot, for any purpose, be regarded as having existed so as to acquire a vested interest in the property of his natural father. Where, therefore, the natural father obtains a decree and dies before its execution, such son must be treated as non-existent for the purpose of executing the decree.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Bijapur, in Appeal No. 60 of 1915, confirming the order passed by the Subordinate Judge at Bagalkot, in Darkhast No. 25 of 1914.

Mr. Nilkanth Atmaram, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. S. Mulgaokar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in execution which gives rise to a rather original position. It was presented by the decree holder in a suit in which it had been decreed that the applicant might open a new door in the southern wall of his house. The person against whom the decree was passed opposes the application on the ground that the applicant, having been given in adoption since the date of the decree, has no right to take out execution. The decree presumably was in respect of his natural father's house and for the benefit of that house. It was passed in 1908. The decree-holder was subsequently adopted, and after his adoption sought to execute the decree. It is contended that he by his adoption had lost his rights in his natural family, and the only person entitled to execute the decree was the person entitled to the house, and that person must be the heir of Narsidas, the natural father of the applicant. Now the applicant was adopted by his natural father's first cousin Bhagwandas. Therefore, his relation to his natural father was no higher than that of Bhagwandas. Narsidas, however, had left a daughter who has a son, and the daughter's son is to be preferred to a first cousin in the Western India. The only ground on which the applicant after his adoption could be entitled to execute the decree in respect of property inherited from his natural father would be on the theory that he lived in his natural family until his adoption and then died, having required a vested interest descendible to his heir. The daughter's son of Narsidas would then be the sister's son of the applicant, and the son of Bhagwandas, i. e., the applicant himself, would be a preferential heir. Any such fiction, however, appears to be untenable having regard to the definite pronouncement of the Privy Council in Nagindas Bhugwandas v. Bachoo Hurkissondas (1). At the close of the judgment is cited a passage from a judgment of Mr. Justice Mitter in which it is stated that the theory of adoption involves the principle of a complete severance of the child adopted from the family in which he is born, both in respect of the paternal and the maternal line, and his complete substitution into the adopter's family as if he were born in it. Then the Privy Council observes that with that statement as to the Hindu Law of adoption their Lordships agree. The result is that the fiction goes the length of treating the adopted son as having been from his birth in the family of his adoptive father, and, therefore, he cannot for any purpose be regarded as having existed so as to acquire a vested interest in the property of his natural father. The consequence is that he must be treated as non-existent for the purpose of the execution of the decree, and the nearest heir of Narsidas will be the daughter's son. For these reasons the objection to the application appears to be a good one. We must set aside the decree of the District Court and dismiss the Darkhast. As it is a very novel and technical point, we think that each party should bear his own costs.

Decree set aside.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLVII, r. 1, Sch II, para. 12—Arbitration—Award, decree based on—Review, whether competent—Jurisdiction of Court.

An application for review of a decree based upon an arbitration award, on the ground of an evident mistake in the award, is maintainable, and a Court has jurisdiction, under Order XLVII, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, to go into the merits of the application.

Rule against the order of the Sadar Munsif, 3rd Court, Mymensingh, in Miscellaneous Case No. 72 of 1918.

Babu Heramba Chandra Guha, for the Petitioner.—The facts of the case are shortly these. A decree was passed in accordance with the terms of an award made by arbitrators appointed by the Court in a case under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act brought by the opposite party. When the decree was going to be executed, the petitioners found that the decree was wrongly drawn up as it was based on the award which contained a mistake apparent on the face of it, seriously affecting the position of the petitioners. The petitioners thereupon applied for the correction of the decree and the award as well. The application was rejected. On review the learned Munsif again dismissed the application, holding that no application for review lay in the matter and that the Court had no jurisdiction to interfere in the matter settled by the arbitrators. The present Rule is directed against that order. My contention is that Order XLVII, rule 1, is wide enough to cover applications for review of decrees passed on an award. Otherwise, paragraph 16, clause (2), Schedule II of the Code of Civil Procedure, would have excluded that remedy expressly. In support of my contention I would refer to Buta v. Guni Das (1). The learned Munsif had, I submit, jurisdiction to go into the matter.

Babu Lunendra Kumar Le, for the Opposite Party.—The provisions of the present Civil Procedure Code do not contemplate applications for review of decrees based on awards. The decree being in conformity with the terms of the award cannot be rectified now. The learned Munsif was right in holding that he had no jurisdiction to interfere.

Babu Heramba Chandra Guha replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—The application for review was rejected on the ground that decrees made upon awards do not come within the provisions of Order XLVII, rule 1. The matter was referred to arbitration by the Court and a decree followed upon the award. It was contended on behalf of the applicant that he had discovered the mistake he complains of in execution of the decree, namely, that it had embodied an evident mistake in the award, and he then applied to have the award corrected under the provisions of the Code, namely, under rule 12, Schedule II. The learned Munsif held that such an application was not maintainable. It was held in the case of Buta v. Guni Das (1) by Rattigan, J., that a review of a decree based upon an award is admissible. That was no doubt a case under sections 522 and 623 of Act X of 1877. The present provisions of the Code do not affect that decision in my opinion, and I think it is a matter which the learned Munsif ought to go into. It will be open to the parties to show then whether there is any ground at all for granting a review. The learned Munsif will, therefore, issue notices to both parties and determine the matter as to whether a review ought to be granted. He has jurisdiction to go into the matter under the provisions of rule 1, Order XLVII. The Rule is made absolute in these terms.

The petitioner has to pay the costs of this Rule, which, I assess at two gold mohurs.

Rule made absolute.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tinnevelly, in Original Suit No. 66 of 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Respondents, raised the preliminary objection that no appeal lay from the preliminary decree as the final decree had been passed before presentation of the appeal. He relied on Kuppusamy Aiyar v. Regmah Boi Ammani (1). Also Lakshmi v. Marudevi (2), Ramien v. Veerappudian (3), Cunniah Mudaly v. Rangaswami Mudaly (4) and Kanhaiya Lal v. Tribeni Sahai (5).

Messrs. K. R. Guruswami Aiyar and A. Subrama Aiyar, for the Appellants.—Here the final order is in accordance with the preliminary decree. It neither varies nor supersedes it. An appeal lies from the latter. See Subramania Chettyar v. Palachakrapani Chettyar (6), Khirodamoyi Dasi v. Adhar Chandra Ghose (7), Sadhu Charan Datta v. Hara Nath Datta (8) and Dattatraya Ramachandra v. Ajmuddin Fakruddin (9).

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is taken by Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar to the effect that the appeal being filed against the preliminary decree alone, while before the presentation of the appeal a final decree had also been passed, it is unsustainable. The question is covered by a number of decisions of this Court. It was first considered in Lakshmi v. Marudevi (2) and it was ruled that, under such circumstances, an appeal against a preliminary order would be sustainable in spite of the fact that a final order had been passed in pursuance of the preliminary order. This ruling was followed in Ramien v. Veerappudian (3), Kurpusamy Aiyar v. Regmah Boi Ammani (1) and Cunniah Mudaly v. Rangaswami Mudaly (4). No doubt there is a decision Subramania Chettyar v. Palachakrapani Chettyar (6) which, so far as it goes, seems to take a somewhat different view. That is a decision of Sundara Aiyar and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ. There the learned Judges do not discuss the previous decisions, though to the ruling in Lakshmi v. Marudevi (2) Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar was himself a party. The same view of the law was taken in the Allahabad High Court in Kanhaiya Lal v. Tribeni Sahai (5), where a Full Bench decided, overruling some of the previous Division Bench rulings, that the fact that a final decree had been passed does not in any way affect the validity of an appeal against the preliminary decree. We think that the reasoning in Kuppusamy Aiyar v. Regmah Boi Ammani (1) and that in Kanhaiya

Lal v. Tribeni Sahai (5) is based upon a correct view of the provisions of section 97 of the Civil Procedure Code, which requires that an appeal must be filed from the preliminary decree, that otherwise its correctness cannot be disputed afterwards in the appeal preferred from the final decree. It can hardly be said that the final decree is that which follows the preliminary decree. It is not like the decree of an Appellate Court superseding the decree of the lower Court which it reverses. A different view has prevailed in Khirodamoyi Dasi v. Adhar Chandra Ghose (7), Sadhu Charan Datta v. Hara Nath Datta (8) and Mackenzie v. Narsing Sahai (10) and also apparently in Dattatraya Ramachandra v. Ajmuddin Fakruddin (9). There may be cases such as in Khirodamoyi Dasi v. Adhar Chandra Ghose (7), where the final decree altogether dismisses the suit for non-prosecution; then different considerations may possibly arise. But so far as the present question is concerned, that is where the final decree is in accordance with the preliminary decree and does not in any way supersede it or modify it, supposing that is allowable, we think the weight of reasoning is in favour of the view which has almost unanimously prevailed in this Court. The preliminary objection will, therefore, be overruled.

We do not think that there is any substance in any of the arguments urged in this appeal against the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge. The most important question is whether there were separate payments of rent amounting to about Rs. 10,000 in addition to those entered in Schedule F to the plaint. The Subordinate Judge finds, we think quite rightly, that there is really no evidence worth considering in support of the defence allegation that there were payments amounting to Rs. 10,000 over and above those for which the plaintiffs have given credit in their plaint. No receipt or vouchers were produced by the defendants nor any accounts, and the only documentary evidence with respect to payments is that furnished by the plaintiffs' accounts and the entries made on Exhibit A on the 22nd April 1914. The evidence on the side of the defence consists merely of very general statements of two of the defendants. They are not even able to specify the dates or the amounts of the different payments, if there were any such. There can be no doubt whatever that the finding of the Subordinate Judge on this point is correct, namely that there were no payments other than those with which the defendants have been credited.

That being found against the defendants, there is hardly any substance in the question raised regarding appropriation whether certain payments which were entered on Exhibit A were made towards the rent due on the lands covered by Exhibit B, that is, the usufructuary mortgage. The evidence on this point on the plaintiffs' side seems to be more reliable than that on the side of the defendants. The case of the plaintiffs is that all these payments, including those in question, were entered on Exhibit A, because the defendants had agreed to execute a mortgage for the bulk of the amount due on that date, that is Rs. 50,000, and the plaintiffs agreed to release some of the lands included in Exhibit A from encumbrances. It was on condition that such a document would be executed that all the payments were entered on Exhibit A. This story seems to be corroborated by Exhibit M, a letter written by 1st plaintiff to 2nd plaintiff, and accords more with the probabilities of the case than the version of the defendants. The payments, though covering several years, were all made on one date. The defendants tried to make out that the entries in question were made for the purpose of appropriating the payments towards the discharge of Exhibit A itself and none of the payments were with respect to Exhibit B for rent, which according to them had been paid separately. They being unable to prove any such separate payments, their version fails. Nor can the evidence in support of this story be said to be satisfactory. The Subordinate Judge, we think, has also rightly found this issue in favour of the plaintiffs.

As regards interest, it has been rightly held by the trial Judge that the alleged agreement not being registered could not be used to prove that the rate of interest mentioned in the mortgage-deed was not the rate which the defendants are liable to pay. The learned Vakil for the appellants tried to argue that there had been a remission of the higher rate of interest, but no such case was put forward in the lower Court and cannot, therefore, be entertained in the appeal for the first time.

The last objection urged before us is with respect to Exhibit C, the last of the mortgages for Rs. 8,000 intended for the benefit of the 4th plaintiff. But we think that the Subordinate Judge has correctly found that it was executed in his name for the benefit of plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3 as well as himself.

It was then argued that the rent for the Andu-year 1086 was barred. This would be so but for the acknowledgment alleged to be contained in Exhibit E. We have no doubt that Exhibit E, though couched in general terms amounts in law to an acknowledgment. And it is also clear that the 22nd defendant in writing acted on behalf of the entire family, that is, defendants Nos. 1 to 6.

In the result the appeal is dismissed with costs of the respondents Nos. 1 to 4.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Chittagong, dated the 11th August 1917, modifying that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Satkonia, dated the 31st July 1916.

FACTS relevant to the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Dhirendra Lal Kastgir (with him Babu Tarakeswar Nath Mitter), for the Appellant—The plaintiff who is the appellant before your Lordships sued for recovery of possession. Plaintiff's auction purchase was in 1909 and he started this suit in 1915. Defendants have no protected interest to keep plaintiff out of possession. Theirs is not a protected interest under Act XI of 1859. The decree of the lower Court says that the plaintiff has title to Dag No 2368, but by receipt of rent through defendants. It is clearly wrong. The plaintiff asks for khas possession also of Dag No. 2368. Under the facts of this case the defendants cannot be said to have a protected interest. The defendants are holding here under somebody else. They cannot get occupancy right, unless they can show that the trespasser under whom they hold was there in bona fide right, and that the lessee too who was inducted on the land had the bona fide belief that his lessor had such right. On the supposition that defendants had occupancy right the lower Court does not give my client khas possession. Section 37 of Act II of 1859 gives a list of protected interests which the auction-purchaser at a revenue sale cannot make khas. This comes under the proviso to section 27. Defendants claim to hold the land as the part of a different Mahal and under a different proprietor. They must be raiyats of that Mahal which the auction-purchaser has purchased. They cannot acquire right of occupancy. Refers to Upendra Narain Bhattacharya v. Protab Chandra Pardhan (1). There is no finding as regards the bona fide belief by the lower Appellate Court.

Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

CHITTY, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff and arises out of a suit brought by him for a declaration of his auction-purchase right in the land in dispute and for khas possession. The plaintiff claimed the land as being Maghi Dag No. 3235. The defendants said that they knew nothing about the Maghi Dags, but that they had been in possession of the land as forming part of Cadastral Survey Dag No. 2363 under Nil Krishna Roy and others for a period of over thirty years; in other words, they maintained that they had acquired occupancy rights in the land. The Munsif dismissed the plaintiff's suit, holding that it was not proved that the land fell within the Mahal purchased by the plaintiff. That finding was reversed by the learned Subordinate Judge, but in passing a decree in favour of the plaintiff as to his title the Judge declined to give the plaintiff khas possession of any portion of the land which should be found to correspond with any portion of Cadastral Survey Dag No. 2368. His reason for passing such a decree was that he held that the defendants had a protected interest in the land of Cadastral Survey Dag No. 2368, which they had held for a long period of time. Against that part of the decree the plaintiff appeals asking us to say that he ought to have khas possession. In my opinion, the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is perfectly correct. Though he did not actually say that the defendants were occupancy raiyats, still he looked at it from that point of view and said that they had been in possession of it as raiyats for more than twenty years, that they had reclaimed the land and that, therefore, they had a protected interest. It is argued that before the Judge could come to such a decision, he ought to have found that Nil Krishna Roy and others, under whom the defendants held, had a bona fide belief that the land in suit appertained to that Mahal, that they let the land to the defendants or their predecessors under that belief and, further, that the defendants also had a bona fide belief that their landlord did own the Mahal to which they thought this land belonged. No question of the bona fides either of the defendants or their landlord appears to have been raised in the Courts below and the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge, in my opinion, amounts to the finding which the appellant's Pleader asks for, namely, that they did hold it bona fide. If they did not, it is obvious that they could not acquire a protected interest. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

(1) 8 C. W. N. 320 at p. 321; 31 C. 703.

Mr. Govindarajulu Naidu (with him Mr. K. C. Subramaniam), for the Appellant.—The suit is for specific performance. Plaintiff is not entitled to a decree for possession. See Rangayya Reddy v. Subramanya Aiyar (3).

JUDGMENT.—We think this is a perfectly clear case. The evidence entirely supports the finding of the learned trial Judge that the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 had agreed to sell the land in dispute to the plaintiff on the 16th August 19 6 for Rs. 7,000 and that they actually sold the land to the 5th defendant, the appellant before us, on the 23rd August 1916, for Rs. 10,000 but that, before the execution of the sale-deed, the plaintiff, having come to know of the contemplated sale, went to the Sub-Registrar's office when the sale deed was actually being written on the 23rd August 1916, and read out his agreement Exhibit B The evidence in the case and the probabilities all bear out the finding of the learned District Judge.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

The memorandum of objections must be allowed. The 5th defendant was undoubtedly a necessary party to the suit, having attempted to purchase the property with notice and knowledge of the agreement to sell in favour of the plaintiff The learned Judge has passed a decree directing the 5th defendant also to join in the execution of the sale-deed. That portion of the decree has not been objected to in appeal and it is not necessary for us to express any opinion as to whether that is the proper form of decree in such cases. He has not, however, given a decree for possession to the plaintiff and we think that he is entitled to such a decree. The Full Bench ruling in Rangayya Reddy v. Subramanya Aiyar (3) does not apply, inasmuch as the 5th defendant was a necessary party to the suit when he obtained possession of the property with the knowledge that there was a prior agreement for sale in favour of the plaintiff. But the learned Chief Justice observes there: "It may, I think, be taken as the settled and salutary practice of this and other Courts in India, where parties properly sued for specific performance of a contract for sale of land are in possession of the land, to allow a prayer for possession to be added to the prayer for specific performance, thereby obviating the necessity for filing a fresh suit for possession to which there could be no defence." In Bugata Appala Naidu v. Chengalvala Jogiraju (1) the same proposition is laid down and we may add, also in Krishnasami v. Sundarappayyar 2).

The result is the lower Court's decree will be modified by directing possession of the property in dispute to be given to the plaintiff. The plaintiff will have his costs from the appellant.

Appeal from a decision of the Judicial Commissioner, Ranchi.

Messrs. Atul Krishna Roy and Siveswar Dayal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Rai Guru Saran Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—This appeal arises out of the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner of Ranchi. The suit was by the appellant for khas possession of certain lands specified in the plaint. The defendant contested the suit on the ground that those lands were his raiyati holdings.

It appears that the defendant took a lease of a village called village Bethi within which the lands in dispute are situate. The defendant's case is that previous to the lease he acquired an occupancy right in the lands in dispute. The Record of Rights was against the defendant.

The lower Appellate Court has come to the conclusion that the defendant has some raiyati lands within the lands in dispute but the lower Appellate Court, being of opinion that the plaintiff has not been able to show which land is the raiyati land of the defendant has dismissed the plaintiff's suit altogether.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff first of all that the finding of the lower Appellate Court is unsustainable in law. He says that the Record of Rights is in his favour and the evidence was insufficient to rebut the presumption arising from the Record of Rights. In our opinion the finding of the lower Appellate Court on this point is a finding of fact. It must, therefore, be held that the defendant has in fact some raiyati land within the lands in dispute.

The next question is one of importance, namely, whether the onus is on the defendant to show which of his lands are raiyati and which are not. The learned Vakil on behalf of the plaintiff contends that as the proprietor of the lands, he is entitled to khas possession of every portion of the lands in dispute except such in respect of which the defendant may be able to establish some sort of title. The lower Appellate Court has taken the view that it was for the plaintiff to prove his title to the land. It appears to us that there is very high authority in favour of the appellant's argument. In the case of Rajah Sahib Perhlad Sein v. Doorgapersaud Tewarree (1). the Judicial Committee said as follows:—

"The appellant is the Zemindar; as such he has a prima facie title to the gross collections from all the Mouzahs within his Zemindari. It lay upon the respondents to defeat that right by proving the grant of an intermediate tenure".

In the case of Ram Monee Mohurrir v. Aleemoodeen (2) Couch, C. J., said as follows: —

"The plaintiff then had made out a prima facie title to the possession of the land. The defendant, in fact, did not dispute that the land was the plaintiff's, and was ready to pay him rent, but he alleged that he had a right to continue to occupy the land. The case was of such a nature that it was necessary for the defendant to show that he had such a right. The plaintiff had shown that he was prima facie entitled to the possession, and unless the defendant had a tenure which would entitle him to keep the possession, the plaintiff ought to have had judgment to recover possession."

It seems to us, therefore, that the title of the plaintiff being admitted, it was for the defendant to identify the land which he claims as his raiyati land. The onus was clearly on the defendant. That being our view we would allow the appeal, set aside the judgments and decrees of the Courts below, and decree the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff is entitled to have his costs throughout.

The plaintiff landlord applied under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for settlement of fair and equitable rent of a tenure created by a howla pattah in 1233 B. S., which expressly made the tenure hereditary but which contained no clause about fixity of rent:

Appeal against the decree of the Special Judge, Faridpur, dated the 3rd May 1916, reversing that of the Assistant Settlement Officer at Chikandi, dated the 27th April 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Broja Lal Chakrabarty (with him Babu Gopal Chandra Chakrabarty), for the Appellant.—This is an appeal on behalf of the landlord. An application was made for the settlement of fair and equitable rent under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The first Court gave the plaintiff a decree. But the lower Appellate Court reversed the decree, holding that the rent was not liable to enhancement having regard to section 6 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Where a tenancy comes into existence after the Permanent Settlement, the rent is liable to enhancement. But where the tenancy comes into existence before or at the time of the Permanent Settlement, the rent cannot be enhanced. The tenancy here was created in 1233 B. S. long after the Permanent Settlement. Besides the contract between the parties here does not show that the rent is fixed in perpetuity. The patta is a confirmatory one. There are tenures where the occupation is permanent but the rent is not fixed but liable to variation. Here the rent is liable to enhancement. The lower Appellate Court refers to two cases, one in Ram Dayal Giri v. Midnapur Zemindary Co. Ltd. (1) and the other in Purna Chandra Ghose v. Collector of Khulna (2) I submit the cases have no bearing upon the point. I rely upon the case reported as Ram Kumar Singh v. Watson & Co. (3).

Moulvi A. K. Fazlul Huq (with him Babu Atindra Nath Mukherjee), for the Respondents.—I submit that the tenure is heritable and there is nothing to show that the rent is liable to enhancement. The payment of uniform rent for eight years shows that the rent is not liable to enhancement. There may be an express contract and an implied contract. Here the contract is implied as to the fixity of rent. Besides the rent here is a consolidated one. The rent is settled not per kani but upon the whole tenure. The tenure is heritable. Besides there are changes in the physical aspect of the tenure. The lower Appellate Court, after considering all the circumstances, has come to a correct finding as to the fixity of rent. Therefore in second appeal this finding ought not to be disturbed.

Babu Broja Lal Chakrabarty briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for settlement of fair and equitable rent in respect of a tenure in the possession of the defendants. The tenure was created in the year 1233. The superior talukdar granted a howla pattah to the predecessor in interest of the defendants, which is Exhibit A. It was in respect of $4\frac{1}{2}$ kanis of land at the rental of Rs. 2 per kani of Rs. 9 sicca. The howla right was made expressly hereditary.

There is no specific clause in the pattah about the fixity of rent. The defendants have paid at the rate of Rs. 9 sicca all this time. From that the learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that the rent is to be considered as mokarari. He has relied upon the case in Purna Chandra Ghose v. Collector of Khulna (2) and the case of Ram Dayal Giri v. Midnapur Zemindary Co., Ltd. (1). As regards the first case it is based upon a finding that the pattah was a confirmatory one, in the sense that the tenancy was in existence before the pattah was granted, that is to say, it was not shown that the tenancy was created for the first time when the pattah was executed. As regards the case of Ram Dayal Giri v. Midnapur Zemindary Co., Ltd. (1), the basis of the decision was this, that for some 60 years, although there were transfers and several successions, the same rate was uniformly maintained. The admitted object of the lease in that case was to extend cultivation over jungle lands. New lands were added to the original cultivation but in every instance the same rate Rs. 5-4-0 was paid. They held that in those circumstances the inference of fixty of rental was legitimate. But there are no transactions in this case. The mere fact that the landlord has chosen to take the same rent for a great number of years in respect of a tenure created for the first time in the year 1233 does not by itself show that the rent was a fixed rent. A presumption of that kind only arises under section 50 of the Act. When there are express limitations in the Act with regard to the right of the landlord such as are to be found in sections 6 and 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it would be extending the limitations if it be held that the mere fact that the landlord has not realized rent at a higher rate for some years is by itself sufficient to raise a presumption of fixity. One frequently comes across documents of this character where there is an express provision about the fixity of rent. The mere fact that a heritable tenure is created does not by itself mean that a mokarari rate is also created.

I, therefore, hold that the landlord is entitled to have a fair and equitable rent assessed with regard to the plot of land in suit. That being so, the matter is remanded to the Appellate Court for a decision as to what would be fair and equitable rent.

Having regard to the fact that the defendants had been paying at an unvarying rate, I think that fact ought to be taken into account in awarding costs in this case. I, therefore, direct that each party do bear his own costs in this Court. The order for costs in the lower Courts will stand.

Case remanded.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.
CIVIL APPEAL No. 98 OF 1917.
November 1, 1918.
Present:—Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim and Mr. Justice Oldfield.
M. S. YESUVADIYAN – DEFENDANT —APPELLANT
versus
P. S. A. SUBBA NAICKER—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 34, 160, scope of—Books of account, entries in, value of—'Sure' in s. 160, meaning of.

Section 34 of the Evidence Act only lays down that a plaintiff cannot obtain a decree by merely proving the existence of certain entries in his books of account, even though those books are shown to be kept in the regular course of business. He will have to show further by some independent evidence that the entries represent real and honest transactions and that the moneys were paid in accordance with those entries. No particular form or kind of evidence in addition to the entries is required. Any relevant facts which can be treated as evidence within the meaning of the Evidence Act would be sufficient corroboration of the evidence furnished in books of account, if true. [p. 710, cols 1 & 2.]

The expression 'sure' in section 160 of the Evidence Act, in the sentence "if he is sure that the facts were correctly recorded in the statement", does not mean that the degree of conviction postulated by it can be treated as equivalent to any on which the witness may choose to say that he is sure, whether or not it is too fantastic or illogical to commend itself to reasonable men. The meaning of the expression is that the witness must satisfy the Court, with reference to ordinary probabilities, of his right to be sure that the record relied on by him is correct. [p. 711, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tuticorin, in Civil Suit No. 6 of 1916.

Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The appeal arises in a suit to recover sums of money amounting to Rs. 8,000 from the defendant on the basis of certain dealings. The plaintiff is a dealer in cotton and had been doing business with Messrs. Gaddam & Co. and afterwards with the New Berar Company, supplying them with cotton. The defendant was at first a writer employed in Gaddam & Co.'s office and afterwards did business as a broker. Admittedly the defendant had dealings with the plaintiff; he used to pay moneys to the plaintiff by way of deposit and drew moneys from time to time. The dealings out of which this suit has arisen covered a period of 5 or 6 years, and the claim of the plaintiff is that, on taking accounts, he was entitled to the sum which he has claimed. The defendant's case, on the other hand, is that he was entitled to Rs. 7,000 and odd and not that he owed anything to the plaintiff. The mode of dealings between the parties was of an extremely lax character. The defendant paying in sums of money from time to time never asked for any receipt or voucher for them. According to the case of the plaintiff the defendant drew sums of money during the last 5 or 6 years on different dates; on some occasions he sent round chits to the plaintiff on which payments were made, but on the majority of occasions, payments were made on the defendant's personal request, there being no chits from the defendant authorising those payments. The learned Subordinate Judge has given a decree to the plaintiff as asked for in the plaint. The evidence in the case consists mainly of entries in the plaintiff's books of account. The defendant has not produced any accounts whatever and the suggestion of the plaintiff is that he has accounts but has wilfully withheld them. The defendant denies that he has accounts but, he says, with reference to about 29 or 30 out of about 200 items, that he did draw those sums and that he recollected having done so, although he has no accounts or other records with which he could refresh his memory. The accounts filed by the plaintiff have been impeached by the defendant as fabrications. The accounts consist of ledgers and day-books. They are properly bound books and from outward appearance the books seem to be regularly kept. The parties fell out sometime in December 1915. Before that, admittedly, they were good friends and there cannot be the slightest doubt that they trusted each other. The case of the defence, if true, would mean that these account-books, covering a period of 6 years and containing accounts of the dealings not only of the defendant but of various other persons, have all been fabricated. It would also mean, on the admitted facts of the case, that if they were fabricated it was done after the parties fell out, that is, after December 1915. Without saying that it is impossible, I should regard it as extremely improbable that books such as we have before us, have been paged, especially, without any sort of internal evidence whatever in the books themselves to bear out the defendant's suggestion that they have been concocted for the purpose of this case. No attempt was, in fact, made in the Court of trial, nor was any serious attempt made before me by Mr. T. Rangachariar who opened the case of the defendant (appellant) to show, from the character of the books or the entries, that the entries were either interpolated or that pages had been removed and new pages containing fresh entries has been substituted. There are, on the other hand, circumstances which would show that there is no substantial reason for doubting the genuineness and the bona fides of these books of account. They had been filed previously in connection with other suits in other Courts. And the nature of the entries relating to the dealings between the plaintiff and the defendant would in itself make it extremely difficult for the plaintiff to get up false entries to support his case. There are only two entries with respect to which any attempt has been made by the defendant to contradict the plaintiff's books. I shall deal with them later and point out that no good arguments can be based on these two items. It has to be pointed out that the case was not satisfactorily conducted for either party in the lower Court, and the procedure adopted for proving the entries was not strictly in accordance with what the law required. The plaintiff's evidence is that he made all these payments with which the defendant is charged; whether he made payments with his own hand or through clerks or writers who made payments on his orders would not make any difference. He apparently attended to his business himself. He used to be present at the shop, except when he was away to some other place of business and plaintiff knew the way in which entries used to be made in the books of account by the different writers and accountants. In his examination-in-chief, in addition to the general statement that all the payments were made as entered and that he made the payments himself, he speaks to a large number of specific items of which he has personal recollection independently of the entries in the books; most of those items are of large amounts and he deals with them in detail in his examination-in-chief. While he was cross-examined with reference to these specific items, it does not appear that any attempt was made by the Pleader for the defendant to make out that as regards other items he could have had no personal knowledge or means of speaking to them in the way he did in his examination-in-chief. No doubt it would have been more in accordance with the proper practice for the Pleader for the plaintiff having asked him specifically about the items of which he had independent recollection, to have questioned him about the other items, which he said were actually paid to the defendant but with reference to which he had no independent recollection allowing him to refresh his memory with the entries in the books according to the provisions of sections 159 and 160 of the Evidence Act. But no objection was apparently taken to the form of the question or the answer with reference to these latter items. We may take it, therefore, that the plaintiff purported to speak not only to the specific items mentioned by him but also to the other payments entered in the book as having been made within his knowledge. We have also the evidence of two of the writers of the books and in their case we find that they were asked to speak to the way in which the books were kept and not to the items specifically. I should have been disposed to take a more serious view of this mode of proving the entries but for the fact that the defendant's Pleader made no objection. Further the plaintiff has with the plaint filed a list of the items with respect to which the defendant is charged, that list being simply a copy of the entries in the books of account, so that the defendant has ample notice of the items to which the plaintiff and his witnesses must have been referring as relating to the defendant's transactions in the Exhibits A and B series.

Then we have a number of items which has been clearly proved by evidence other than the entries by means of vouchers or chits, in addition to the oral testimony of the plaintiff. On the other hand, it is difficult to accept the defendant's statement that he kept no accounts whatever. He is a broker and had dealings not only with the plaintiff but with other persons, and it is unlikely that he did not keep any accounts or any records of the transactions into which he entered as broker or of his other dealings. His case strikes me as somewhat extraordinary. He professes to remember 29 or 30 items extending over a number of years and ignores all the other transactions alleged by the plaintiff. All that he appears to have done was to pick out certain items which he felt could not possibly be resisted and about which no decent show of objection could be advanced by him and admitted them, not because he had any recollection whatever of these items. His case is that he never drew money, except on chits. On this point the evidence is absolutely clear to my mind that he used to ask the plaintiff to make payments on his account or get money from him himself without any sort of voucher whatever. There are several instances of that sort proved by evidence independently of the entries. The nature of his drawings would also suggest that he could not have been sending chits for every payment. We find, for instance, entries relating to small amounts like Rs. 2, Rs. 3 and Rs. 5, and there are entries to show that payments were made through himself or through other persons, some of whom were apparently peons employed in the office of Gaddam & Co. If there were chits in connection with those payments then the entries relating to them would not have appeared in the form in which they are made. The entries mention the names of persons through whom payments were made at the instance of and on behalf of the defendant. If the defence of the defendant was true he could easily have called those persons and shown that the entries were false. He has made no such attempt except in the two cases above mentioned but which I shall show do not bear out the suggestion of the defendant. It was strongly pressed upon us by Mr. T. Rangachariar that the plaintiff ought to have asked for some voucher whenever he made payments, or that he ought to have taken the signature of the defendant whenever payments were made to him. And it was pointed out to us that the plaintiff did keep books for taking signatures of persons. As regards these books the evidence is not at all clear as to the nature of the transactions with respect to which the signature of parties used to be taken. That the plaintiff and the defendant, until they fell out, reposed confidence in each other is abundantly clear. As already mentioned, the defendant does not declare that he obtained any receipts or vouchers for the amounts paid in by him from time to time. He must have trusted not only the plaintiff but must have relied upon the mode in which the plaintiff kept his books of account and did business. And if the defendant trusted the plaintiff in that way, it does not surprise me in the least that the plaintiff should have made payments without insisting on vouchers on each occasion. I may here mention some of the larger items which must be taken to be proved by evidence independently of the entries, for instance the item of Rs. 1,391-8-2. The case of the plaintiff is that he borrowed from the office of Messrs. Gaddam & Co. Rs. 1,500, and out of that amount gave this sum to the defendant. It was suggested by Mr. T. Rangachariar that it is a false story that he borrowed any money from Messrs. Gaddam & Co. If there was any foundation for this suggestion nothing was easier for the defendant than to produce the books of his employees and to prove the falsity of the plaintiff's case.

As regards the transaction relating to mortgage Exhibit E with respect to which a sum of Rs. 496 was paid by the plaintiff, the case of the defendant is that it was paid not to him but to his brother. This payment is supported by the receipt Exhibit D-1, the payments being made at the shop of one Ambalavana Pillai, and P. W. No. 5 proves the handwriting of this man in Exhibit D. If the payment was not made at the instance of the defendant, and it was a dealing directly between the plaintiff and the plaintiff's brother, one would have expected the defendant to examine his brother and prove the falsity of the plaintiff's case. No such attempt has, however, been made. I might refer to the transaction evidenced by Exhibit A as showing that it is unlikely that the plaintiff owed large sums of money to the defendant in 1915 or thereabouts as related by him. The defendant obtained from the plaintiff assignment of an othi for Rs. 4,000 and he paid down Rs. 1,000 and agreed to pay the balance of Rs. 3,000 before the Sub-Registrar. As he failed to pay the balance, the transaction fell through and the plaintiff had to refund Rs. 1,000 to the defendant. If the defendant's case were true, it was not likely that he would pay Rs. 1,000 if as a matter of fact Rs. 6,000 or Rs. 7,000 were owing to the plaintiff.

I shall deal now with some of the criticisms made on behalf of the defendant as to the corrections of certain entries. Under the transaction which is represented by Exhibit C 5 that is a chit on which, according to the case of the plaintiff, certain payments were made, Rs. 100 was to be paid to some person not mentioned therein. The suggestion on behalf of the defendant that Exhibit C 5, which he alleges has been wrongly translated, means that the payment was to be made on behalf of the defendant to the plaintiff himself, is not borne out. If that were the correct interpretation, then one would have expected that the man who was to pay the money to the plaintiff would be mentioned. Taking the document as it stands, the criticism on behalf of the defendant is that the entry on the 10th June 1913 is not of Rs. 100 but of Rs. 80. There is also a further entry of Rs. 25; that would make up Rs. 105 and not Rs. 100. There is to that extent discrepancy between Exhibit C-5 and the entry in plaintiff's book. But I am not satisfied that the discrepancy could not have been explained if the plaintiff or any of the accountants who had knowledge of the matter was asked about it. But the defendant's strongest criticism is with reference to the entries dated 3rd April and 17th April 1914. The first one reads "Debit, taken and paid by S. A. for P. K. S. Rs. 25," and the latter is to the effect "Debit for P. R. M. S. Rs. 373-12-4."

The defendant has examined D. Ws. Nos. 3 and 4 who are employed in the P. K. S. A. A. firm and P. R. M. S. firm respectively, who prove that on the dates mentioned there are no entries in the plaintiff's book. But these two witnesses were examined after the plaintiff had closed the case, and neither the plaintiff's nor any of his witnesses' attention had been specifically drawn to nor were they asked any questions as to the nature of these transactions that might not in itself be a sufficient answer, if the entries themselves were quite clear and unambiguous which we do not think they are. Both these entries are worded differently from other entries in cases where payments were made in to a particular person or firm at the instance of the defendant. This entry of the 3rd April is that Rs. 25 was paid by the plaintiff 'for' P. K. S. and similarly the entry of the 17th is that Rs. 373-12-4 was debited 'for' P. R. M. S. As Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, the learned Vakil for the respondent, suggested it might be that money was taken for payment to the said two firms by the defendant himself or some one on his behalf and not actually paid on those dates or not paid at all. In the absence of any question put to the plaintiff or the witnesses asking them to explain these transactions, I do not think it would be fair to accept the evidence of the defendant's witnesses Nos. 3 and 4 showing that the entries in question in the plaintiff's books are false. I am satisfied on considering the evidence as a whole, in spite of the irregular way in which the case of the parties was conducted in the lower Court and the unsatisfactory manner of proving the entries in the books of account which were not specifically put to the plaintiff or his witnesses, that the accounts were duly kept in the regular course of business and that the entries represent true and honest transactions.

Further as regards certain items, there is corroborative evidence in the shape of vouchers and the circumstances of the case to which I have alluded also show that the items mentioned in the entries in question are true and genuine and represent a real transaction.

But, it is argued on behalf of the appellant that the evidence as it stands is not sufficient in law to found a decree on, against the defendant. Section 34 of the Evidence Act lays down that the entries in books of account, regularly kept in the course of business, are relevant, but such a statement will not alone be sufficient to charge any person with liability. That merely means that the plaintiff cannot obtain a decree by merely proving the existence of certain entries in his books of account, even though those books are shown to be kept in the regular course of business. He will have to show further by some independent evidence that the entries represent real and honest transactions and that the moneys were paid in accordance with those entries. The Legislature, however, does not require any particular form or kind of evidence in addition to entries in books of account, and I take it that any relevant facts which can be treated as evidence within the meaning of the Evidence Act would be sufficient corroboration of the evidence furnished by entries in books of account, if true. I have already pointed out that, with reference to certain specific items, there is ample corroborative evidence, and I have also mentioned the circumstances which would go to show that the transactions represented by these entries are true and honest. I am inclined to think that, apart from the oral statement there is sufficient corroboration of the entries in this case. Then I do not find that sufficient reason has been shown for not accepting the statement of the plaintiff in his examination-in-chief, that all the items in the accounts were really given to the defendant, meaning that all the payments as entered were actually made to the defendant. This is not a mere isolated statement. In the very beginning of the examination-in-chief he says: "The defendant used to take money without giving chits. If the defendant had personally asked me to pay the money to anybody, I used to pay without taking the signature of the person who takes the money. When I paid money to defendant directly, I never took his signature or got any voucher. The defendant has not made any payment over and above what I have entered in the accounts." His case was, according to his evidence, that it was he who used to make the payments. This does not necessarily mean that he used with his own hands always to hand over money to the defendant or his messenger, but only that the payments were made under his personal supervision or direction. That is the case he sought to make out. It might be that if the defendant had made an attempt he might have been able to show by cross-examination that this was an improbable statement and should not be accepted, but I do not find that he really made any such attempt. It is possible that the plaintiff did not have any direct recollection of all the items. He had independent recollection of some items, and as regards others he might have remembered them on looking into the accounts. This is suggested by a statement made by the plaintiff in his cross examination. He says with reference to certain entries: "These I remember independently even without looking into accounts." As regards the items which he did not remember in that way, I do not find that the cross-examination was directed to show that it was improbable or unlikely, having regard to the lapse of time, or the course of business adopted by the plaintiff, or that he could not be relied upon to remember those items even on reference to the entries. It is quite true as pointed out by the learned Pleader for the respondent, that so far as it appears on the record, the plaintiff did not in so many words say that, as regards the items of which he had no independent recollection, he was sure that they were true items on examining the entries which were made and of which he had knowledge at the time or soon afterwards. That would have been the correct way of examining the plaintiff on this point, but the Pleader who conducted the case for the defence neither raised any objection to his making a general categorical statement that all the items in the accounts were really given to the defendant as entered in the accounts, nor did he attempt by cross-examination to show that these general statements could not be accepted. Having regard to the way in which the plaintiff was cross-examined, I am unable to say that the statement as regards the entries in the books of account generally should be rejected on grounds of improbability, especially as I have not the slightest hesitation in holding that the accounts of the plaintiff are genuine and bona fide and that the admitted facts and circumstances point to the truth of the plaintiff's case and the falsity of the defendant's case.

I do not propose to go into all the cases cited at the Bar with reference to section 34 of the Evidence Act. There is no difficulty in ascertaining what the enactment means, but the difficulty lies in applying it to the facts of a particular case. Much reliance was placed on behalf of the appellant on the ruling of the Privy Council reported as Baboo Gunga Persad v. Baboo Inderjit Singh (1). But, apart from the facts of that case, all that their Lordships laid down was that an entry in the books of account regularly kept in the course of business is merely corroborative evidence. To the same effect is the ruling reported as Queen v. Hurdeep Sahoy (2). I might here point out that the present Evidence Act does not say that an entry is merely corroborative evidence, it is substantive evidence, though by itself not sufficient to charge a person with liability. I do not find that the cases reported as Sorab Jee Vacha Ganda v. Koonwur-Jee Manik-Jee (3) and Hingu Miya v. Heramba Chandra Chakravarti (4) help the appellant any further. With reference to the latter, emphasis is laid on the fact that the learned Judges then say that each particular entry must be proved. No doubt that is the correct proceeding. But as I have already pointed out, it is merely a matter of mode of proof and, as the defendant raised no objection to the way in which the entries were proved in the lower Court, I do not think anything turns upon this point. We hope, however, that in future when entries in books of account are sought to be proved, strict attention should be paid to the method of proving them as pointed out in Hingu Miya v. Heramba Chandra Chakravarti (4), and further that the entries themselves ought to be marked as Exhibits and not the books. In Jaswant Singh v. Sheo Narain Lal (5) we find that their Lordships discuss at length not only the genuineness of the entries in the books of account, but also the character of the entries themselves as to whether they represented a real transaction with reference to certain items which were proved by evidence independently of the entries, and rely upon the general circumstances of the case showing that the accounts were bona fide and true. They observe: "Their Lordships need not go through other items in the books, nor deal with the evidence showing that the defendant had bill transactions with other people The cases they have examined are sufficient, in the entire absence of countervailing evidence, to establish three propositions. They prove that the defendant's sweeping denials of his connections with bill transactions are not true, and thereby they materially shake his credit. They prove that he drew hundis on Gobind Dass and sold them to the plaintiff, thereby displacing the defendant's flat denials of dealings with the plaintiff, and meeting the improbability that he should have drawn upon a house unknown to him, by proof of the fact that he did so. They lead to the belief that the plaintiff's books are authentic and honest, and his gomasta's evidence true, so that the course of the dealing alleged by the plaintiff terminating in the six hundis now sued on is supported." Here also enough has been proved to show that the defendant's denial that he ever drew money except on chits is untrue and the course of dealings between the plaintiff and the defendant showed that the transactions took place as evidenced by the entries. I may also here refer to the decision in Dwarka Das v. Sant Bakhsh (6). With reference to the value to be attached to the plaintiff's general statement that the items mentioned in the entries were paid to the defendant, the learned Judges point out that it was the duty of the defendant to challenge the statement, to cross-examine with reference to it and show that that it could not be believed. I am, therefore, satisfied that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge is right and must be upheld. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

OLDFIELD, J.—I concur generally with my learned brother and I, therefore, do not think it necessary to follow him in his detailed statement of the evidence. But I desire to say a few words regarding the cases, in which it was alleged that there was no corroboration for the various items of the plaintiff's claim except the accounts and regarding which the question arose whether other evidence was in fact given. If no other evidence besides the accounts were given, however strongly those accounts may be supported by the probabilities and however strong may be the evidence as to the honesty of those who kept them, such consideration could not alone with reference to section 34 of the Evidence Act be the basis of a decree. In Jaswant Singh v. Sheo Narain Lal (5) the Judicial Committee no doubt gave a decree after testing the entries in the accounts before it with reference to the correspondence regarding certain entries in those accounts and other independent evidence regarding them. But I do not think that that decision is in any way inconsistent with the general proposition enunciated regarding section 34. In that case there was in fact some direct evidence as to the making of the hundis which were in question and their Lordships, no doubt, said that the direct evidence was quite untrustworthy. They must presumably have meant that notwithstanding its intrinsically untrustworthy character they were prepared to act on it in view of the other circumstances of the case and the direct evidence as to particular items.

The question is whether the evidence of the plaintiff can be accepted and taken as a basis for the decree, supplemented as it is by the evidence of the accounts. The defendant contends that the plaintiff's evidence, if rightly construed, was not direct evidence at all and what he said really amounted only to inference from the account entries, and that he should not be understood as saying that he himself had any knowledge of the payments whatever independently of the presumptions which he was drawing from the entries in the accounts regarding them. The plaintiff's evidence in chief consisted first in a statement "when I paid money to defendant directly, I never took his signature or got any voucher." There were then various particular references to particular payments, which he prefaced with the words "I paid." Lastly there was the statement: "All the items in the account were really given to defendant and entered in the accounts." Those are his statements in chief. If the defendant's were the proper interpretation of plaintiff's evidence, I should certainly hold that it did not afford the corroboration which the law requires.

No doubt, section 160 of the Evidence Act says: "The witness may also testify to facts in any such document as is mentioned in section 159, although he has no specific recollection of the facts themselves, if he is sure that the facts were correctly recorded in the document", and it was suggested that in any case the plaintiff, on the one hand, must be presumed to have correctly recorded the facts in his accounts, although on the other he did not say so explicitly. As regards the section, I may observe, first, that the use of the word "sure" is, I believe, unique in the Evidence Act. It does not seem to me that the degree of conviction postulated by the use of that word can be treated as equivalent to any, on which the witness may choose to say that he is sure, whether or not it is too fantastic or illogical to commend itself to reasonable men. The meaning must be, I think, that the witness satisfies the Court with reference to ordinary probabilities of his right to be sure that the record relied on by him is correct. Then again there is the reference to section 159, which provides that the witness may refer to "any such writing made by any other person and read by the witness within the time aforesaid", if, when he read it, he knew it to be correct, the time aforesaid being the time within which the Court would consider it likely that the transaction was fresh in his memory. Now if the case were only that the plaintiff must be supposed to have been speaking with reference to the accounts, it would be material that he said nothing definite as to his having looked into the accounts within the time above referred to or as to his reasons for being sure that they were a correct record. But that is not what the plaintiff said, and it is a very material point that there was no suggestion resembling that now made by the defendant in cross examination. The defendant in fact made no objection to the plaintiff making the statements he did both generally and in detail. There were no doubt some questions put to the plaintiff with reference to his residence, as to which he admitted that he stayed in Tuticorin and also in other villages 16 miles distant and that the suit transactions took place in Tuticorin. He said also, that his agents transacted business in his absence. But he said nothing at that point regarding the particular payments which are in dispute. He said only "I was present when I made those payments to the defendant." We have been referred to a number of payments which are the subject-matter of the appeal and there is no reason for adopting any such unnatural interpretation of the evidence. There was nothing further in the plaintiff's cross-examination or in the cross-examination of one of his accountants, P. W. No. 2. P. W. No. 3, another accountant, was, no doubt, asked a question, in reply to which he said: "I must refer to the account to say whether all payments were made by me or by plaintiff. I cannot say anything from memory." But there was no suggestion as regards the payments, if any, which were not made by him, the plaintiff having been present. In these circumstances it does not seem to me that there is any question of reliance by the plaintiff on section 160. The plaintiff's evidence, as I understand it, was simply that he made the payments himself. There is nothing in the case regarding the plaintiff's course of business which enables me to form any opinion as to the probability of all his statements. It is not for us to speculate as to what stringent cross-examination might have disclosed. The circumstances of the case in fact resemble those reported as Dwarka Das v. Sant Bakhsh (6). To adopt the language used there, the plaintiff's evidence should receive the favourable construction which would entitle us to treat it as substantive evidence in this case and not to conclude it as evidence which was inadmissible.

So treating it we have a foundation, on which the decree in favour of the plaintiff can be passed, supplemented by the entries in the accounts. I agree that he is entitled to a decree as regards the items in connection with which it was contended that no direct evidence was available. I agree with the decree proposed by my learned brother.

Questions relating to the possession of property purchased by the decree-holder at a sale in execution of his decree are not questions relating to the execution, discharge and satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that section is no bar to a suit by such decree-holder to recover possession based upon the title acquired by the sale and on the ground that by the sale the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors in the land was extinguished and they were mere trespassers. Such a suit must be brought within the period of limitation prescribed by Article 138 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 715, col. 1; p. 719, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal under clause 10 of the Letters Patent by the defendants Nos. 1 to 3, who are the principal defendants in the suit, from the decision of a single Judge of this Court, dated the 25th July 1918, whereby he overruled the decision of the District Judge of Manbhum and restored that of the Munsif.

The plaintiffs and the pro forma defendants were proprietors of Mauza Delikhana. The principal defendants were tenants under them of a holding in the said Mauza. The rent having fallen into arrears, the landlords brought a suit against the tenants and in July 1909 obtained a decree in that suit. The property was put up for sale in execution of the decree and it was purchased by the landlords themselves. On the 6th May 1910 the sale was confirmed and in July of the following year the sale certificate was obtained. At that time a partition suit was pending between the plaintiffs and the pro forma defendants who were members of a joint family, and no application appears to have been made by them as auction-purchasers under Order XXI, rule 95, of the Civil Procedure Code to be put in possession of the holding purchased by them within 3 years of the confirmation of the sale. As a result of the partition suit, the Mauza in question, including the right to possession of the defendants' holding, fell to the share of the plaintiffs who, on the 5th May 1916, instituted the present suit claiming khas possession of the holding against the principal defendants who were still in possession.

Amongst other defences, the defendants contended that the suit was barred by section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiffs' remedy being to apply for delivery of possession in the Court executing the rent decree, and that a separate suit was not maintainable. The Munsif decided all issues in the plaintiffs' favour and granted the decree asked for.

On appeal, the District Judge considered that such a suit would be governed by the provisions of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908, and that by sections 139 and 231 of that Act it was cognizable by the Deputy Commissioner only and ought to have been brought within one year from the date when the cause of action accrued. He treated the case, however, as one in execution of a decree and held that it was barred by section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code as well as by section 92 of Act X of 1859, which was in force when the rent suit was instituted, and that in either case the limitation period of 3 years had expired. The plaintiffs appealed to this Court, and the learned Judge who heard the appeal held that the suit could not be treated as an application in execution governed by Article 180 of the Limitation Act, and that as it did not relate to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree, it was not governed by section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. He further held that the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act had no application. In these circumstances, he held that the period of limitation was 12 years from the date when the sale became absolute, as prescribed by Article 138 of the Limitation Act, and restored the decree of the trial Court setting aside that of the District Judge. It is from that decision that the present appeal is brought.

The first contention argued before us was that the suit fell within section 139 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act and was cognizable only by the Deputy Commissioner, and that under section 231 of the same Act the limitation period was one year from the date of the accruing of the cause of action. There are two answers to this argument. First, the Act was not applied to Manbhum within which district the property is situated until the 22nd November 1909, which is after the rent-decree was obtained, and it is not shewn that the application of the Act to Manbhum had any retrospective operation. Secondly, it is quite clear that none of the cases mentioned in section 139 which are triable by the Deputy Commissioner cover the present suit. The only case relied on is that mentioned in clause 4 of the section, viz.: "All suits under this Act to eject any tenant of agricultural land or to cancel any lease of agricultural land." This is not a suit to eject a tenant or to cancel a lease. The defendants ceased to be tenants at the time when their holding was sold and their rights in the holding passed to the purchaser. Since then their status is that of trespassers, not tenants. The suit, in fact, is not one under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act at all and sections 139 and 231 can have no application.

The appellants' main contention, however, was that the case is covered by section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as it raises questions between the parties to the suit in which the rent decree was passed relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of that decree. Although it is by no means clear that section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code applies to a case where the sale took place under Act X of 1859 and where the sale certificate was granted under section 11 of Act VIII of 1865, I assume, for the purposes of this part of my judgment, that the Civil Procedure Code applies. There can be no doubt that both the plaintiffs and defendants were parties or represent parties to that suit and the only question which arises is, whether the questions for determination relate to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the rent-decree. This is a matter about which there has been considerable controversy in the High Courts of Calcutta, Bombay and Allahabad. The importance of the question for present purposes arises from the fact that if a separate suit is not barred by section 47 then it was instituted within time, the period for bringing such a suit being that prescribed by Article 138 of the Limitation Act, viz., 12 years from the date when the sale became absolute. If it is barred by section 47, then the period in which the application in execution should have been made is 3 years and as the suit was not instituted within that period, it cannot now be treated as an application in execution under section 47.

The decisions of the Calcutta High Court are somewhat conflicting. One of the earliest decisions is that of Kristo Gobind Kur v. Gunga Pershad Surma (1) in the year 1876, which decided that the plaintiff, who was the auction-purchaser, should not be entitled to bring a fresh suit for possession as he might have enforced his rights under the decree in execution of which he purchased. The basis of the decision was that litigation might be endless if parties failed to exercise their rights under decrees and were afterwards allowed to bring fresh suits for the same relief. Whilst entirely agreeing with the general principle that litigation should not be endlessly protracted, the question we have to determine is whether in the particular instance the Legislature has in fact barred the plaintiffs' right of suit in the case before us. The decision in Kristo Gobind Kur's case (1) was followed with some hesitation by Sir R. Garth, C. J., and Morris, J., in 1881 in Lolit Coomar Bose v. Ishan Chunder Chuckerbutty (2). In Krishna Lall Dutt v. Ratha Krishna Surkhel (3) decided in 1884, the Court held, where formal possession had been obtained from the Court by the auction-purchaser but had not been followed by any act of possession and so had become infructuous, that a separate suit was maintainable. In 1885 the same High Court decided in the case of Iswar Pershad Gurgo v. Jai Narain Giri (4) that the decision in Lolit Coomar Bose v. Ishan Chunder Chuckerbutty (2) (ubi sup.) did not lay down that under no circumstances would a suit lie by the auction-purchaser who was also a decree-holder, but that so long as the remedy provided by section 318 of the Civil Procedure Code (now Order XXI, rule 95) was open to the purchaser, he was bound to have recourse to that section rather than to bring a fresh suit. In that case it appears that at the date when the suit was instituted more than 3 years had passed from the time when possession was confirmed, and hence the remedy provided by section 318 of the Civil Procedure Code then in force was barred by limitation. Some attempt, however, had been made to obtain possession under that section which had proved infructuous. The Court decided that there was no reason in law why the suit should not be maintained and that the purchaser's title was not extinguished merely because the summary remedy provided by section 318 was no longer available. On the other hand, in the case of Madhusudan Das v. Gobinda Pria Chowdhurani (5), decided in the year 1899, the Calcutta High Court held that proceedings for delivery of possession to the auction-purchasar after a sale in execution of a decree were proceedings in execution of the decree, and that when the application for possession is resisted by the legal representative of the judgment-debtor, the question so raised came within the purview of section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 and must be decided under that section and not by a separate suit. Finally, in the case of Sosibhusan Mookerjee v. Radhanath Bose (6), which was decided in 1913, the Calcutta High Court, after reviewing the authorities at some length, decided that an order for delivery of possession to the execution-purchaser, who was himself the decree holder, was not an order relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree nor was it one arising between the parties to the suit or their representatives merely because the decree-holder happened to be the execution purchaser. For the latter proposition reliance was placed upon the earlier case of Nana Kumar Roy v. Golam Chunder Dey (7), where it was held that an order under section 312 of the Code of 1882 setting aside an execution sale cannot be treated as an order under section 244 of the same Code because the decree-holder happens to be the auction-purchaser. The Court, after reviewing the conflicting decisions of the Calcutta High Court, followed the decision of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Bhagwati v. Banwari Lal (8), which affirmed the principle that a decree-holder whether holding a decree for sale under a mortgage or a simple money decree, who purchases at a sale held in execution of such decree property belonging to his judgment-debtor is in the same position as would be any other purchaser at an auction sale held in execution of such a decree. It seems clear, therefore, that the weight of authority in the decisions of the Calcutta High Court appears to be in favour of the view that questions concerning delivery of possession to an auction purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree, whether he be a decree-holder or a stranger to the suit, are not questions relating to the execution of the decree.

The Allahabad High Court by the Full Bench decision just cited have clearly settled this question against the contention of the present appellants.

The Bombay High Court, however, has taken a different view. In the case of Sadashiv Mahadu v. Narayan Vithal (9) a Full Bench of that High Court decided that a mortgagee decree-holder, who purchased the property ordered to be sold in execution of his decree, was not entitled to bring a separate suit for possession against the mortgagors but was limited by section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code to his remedy under Order XXI of the Code.

In this conflicting state of the authorities it would have been necessary for us to exercise an independent judgment, but for the fact that, so far as this Court is concerned, the point appears to have been substantially decided by a Full Bench ruling in the case of Haji Abdul Gani v. Raja Ram (10). The immediate question for determination in that case was, whether an appeal lies from an order passed under rule 95 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code. An appeal would lie only if the decision appealed from came within the provisions of section 47, and it was necessary for the Court to decide this question in order to determine whether an appeal would lie. In that case the respondents had obtained a money decree against the appellant and purchased certain property of the appellant which had been ordered to be sold in execution of the decree. Possession was obstructed by the appellant, and the respondents applied under Order XXI, rule 95, to be placed in possession of the disputed property. The respondents obtained an order from which the appellant sought to appeal. The Court, after reviewing the authorities above-mentioned and many others, unanimously decided that questions relating to the possession of property purchased by the decree-holder under the circumstances stated were not questions relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of section 244 of the Code of 1882 or section 47 of the present Code. The principle upon which that decision was based appears to me to govern the present suit and I think that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

I only wish to add that I have had an opportunity of reading the judgment about to be delivered by my learned brother and I concur with him in the reasoning by which he arrives at an independent conclusion that the questions raised in this suit are not questions relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—This is a Letters Patent Appeal from the decision of a single Judge of this Court, dated the 25th July 1918, reversing the decision of the District Judge of Purulia (Manbhum), dated the 22nd June 1917, and restoring that of the Munsif, dated the 6th March 1917.

The defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are the appellants before us. They had held in village Delikhana, Pergana Manbhum, the lands in suit as their jote kamai holding. The plaintiffs and the pro forma defendants as landlords of the 16 annas of the said Mouza obtained a decree, Exhibit 4, for rent against the principal defendants Nos. 1 to 3 for Rs. 64-15-10 on 21st July 1909, and in execution of the said decree they purchased the holding of the appellants on 4th April 1910. The sale was confirmed on 6th May 1910 and the sale certificate, Exhibit 3, was obtained on 11th July 1911, but on account of there being a partition suit No. 223 of 1911 pending between the plaintiffs and the pro forma defendants, the head member of the family neglected to take out delivery of possession through the executing Court.

By the aforesaid partition suit the entire Mouza with the said lands of the principal defendants in suit was allotted to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs, therefore, brought the present suit against the appellants for recovery of possession on 5th May 1916, in the Court of the Munsif of Purulia, within 12 years of the confirmation of the auction sale.

The appellants, principal defendants, resisted the claim of the plaintiffs on all possible grounds. They stated that the plaintiffs received rents from them in 1318 and 1319 and recognized them as their tenants, and hence the relationship of landlord and tenant continued and existed between the plaintiffs and the appellants even after the confirmation of the sale, and that the latter were not trespassers and hence the suit for ejectment could not lie. They also pleaded that the rent decree and the sale were collusive and not bona fide and as such were not binding upon them. These questions of fact have been set at rest by the findings of the trial Court as confirmed by the first Court of appeal and are no longer before us for consideration.

The appellants, however, disputed the right of the plaintiffs to institute the present suit and contended that the suit was barred by limitation. The Munsif overruled the contentions of the appellants and decreed the suit of the plaintiffs.

On appeal the learned District Judge held that under sections 139 and 231 of Act VI of 1908 the plaintiffs' suit was cognizable only by the Deputy Commissioner and must have been brought within one year. He further held that the plaintiffs' remedy was to make an application for delivery of possession of the property purchased at the auction sale and that the present suit was barred by section 47 of application to the present case which would rather seem to be governed by the earlier authorities of the said Court in the case of Radha Madhub Suntra v. Lukhi Narain Roy Chowdhry (13) and the Full Bench decision in Nagendra Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mahun Parhi (14). The principle upon which section 373 of the Code of Civil Procedure in the former case was not applied to bar the second suit, section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code would not apply to decrees passed and executed and sales held under the Rent Act (X of 1859). More so, when section 47 takes away the general right of instituting a suit. Hence Order XXI, rule 95, and section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure are inapplicable to the case of the plaintiffs and do not at all bar the suit. Even if section 47 did apply, the question is whether the proceedings to obtain possession after an auction sale at which the decree-holder himself purchased the property, relate to "the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree." It is clear that the section has no application to a purchaser who is not a decree-holder and that his failure to obtain possession or to make an application for delivery of possession under Order XXI, rule 95 will not bar a suit for recovery of the property. Such a suit will be governed by Article 138 of the Limitation Act, the period of limitation for which is 12 years. No doubt a decree holder purchasing the property in execution of the decree is a party to the suit and as such all questions relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree would come under section 47 and will be determined under that section and not by a separate suit. But the question is whether the question relating to the delivery of possession after the sale is one that relates to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. If it does relate to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, then a separate suit would be barred and an application should, therefore, be made under Order XXI, rule 95, the period for which is 3 years within which the application should be made. Whereas if it does not come under section 47, then a separate suit for recovery of possession will not be barred and Article 138 of the Limitation Act will govern the suit. There has been a great conflict of decisions upon the point. The earlier decisions in Calcutta seem to favour the view that a separate suit will not lie: Vide, Kristo Gobind Kur v. Gunga Pershad Surma (1). The view expressed there was, however, doubted by the Chief Justice Garth in the case of Lolit Coomar Bose v. Ishan Chunder Chuckerbutty (2) and was distinguished in Seru Mohun Bania v. Bhagoban Din Pandey (15) and Krishna Lall Dutt v. Radha Krishna Surkhel (3) and latterly in Iswar Pershad Gurgo v. Jai Narain Giri (4). It was again acted upon in a latter decision of the Court in Madhusudan Das v. Gobinda Pria Chowdhurani (5). The ruling in Sasibhusan Mookerjee v. Radhanath Bose (6) seems to settle the point so far as the Calcutta High Court is concerned. The long course of decisions in the Calcutta High Court indicates that the balance of opinion in that Court has been strongly in favour of the view that the question relating to the delivery of possession does not relate to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree and does not come under section 47 of the present Code or section 318 of the old Code.

So far as the Allahabad High Court is concerned, the view appears to have been settled by a Full Bench in the case of Bhagwati v. Banwari Lal (8).

The Bombay High Court in the case of Sadashiv Mahadu v. Narayan Vithal (9) has taken a different view and entirely supports the contention of the appellants.

The matter appears to have been settled so far as this Court is concerned by a Full Bench decision in the case of Haji Abdul Gani v. Raja Ram (10). In that case it was decided that no appeal lies from an order under rule 95, Order XXI, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The basis of the decision is that such an order does not dispose of a question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, even when the question is between the judgment debtor and an auction-purchaser who originally was the plaintiff in the suit and hence the order is not a decree

(13) 21 C. 428; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 916.
(14) 18 C. 368 (F. B.); 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 246.

(15) 9 C. 602; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1049.

within the meaning of section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Upon the principle deduced from that ruling, section 47 will not bar a separate suit by a decree holder purchaser in order to obtain recovery of possession of the property purchased at the auction sale. This decision seems to settle the question so far as this Court is concerned and has lately been followed in the case of Dhanindar Das v. Bakhshi Harihar Prasad Singh (16), where it was directly held that the proceedings adopted to obtain delivery of possession of the property purchased in execution of a decree do not relate to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of that decree and section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure has no application to such proceedings. In that case the decree-holder himself was a purchaser. We are thus relieved from the necessity of reviewing the authorities on the subject and coming to a definite conclusion as to which of the conflicting views is in agreement with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. However, it may be mentioned that the execution of the decree terminates by the satisfaction of the decree, by payment thereof or the sale of the property in execution of the decree. Order XXI no doubt relates to and is headed by "execution of decrees and orders", and rule 95 relating to the delivery of possession by the executing Court to the purchaser at the auction sale is placed in that Chapter. It is, therefore, contended that the question relating to the delivery of possession also relates to the execution of the decree. Rule 64 of the said order provides that the Court executing the decree may direct that a certain property "shall be sold to satisfy the decree and that the proceeds of such sale or portion thereof shall be paid to the party entitled under the decree to receive the same." A decree-holder can only purchase on express permission of the Court obtained under rule 72 which provides that when the decree holder purchases the property "the purchase-money and the amount due under the decree is to be set off one against the other and the Court executing the decree shall enter up satisfaction of the decree in whole or in part accordingly.' It is thus clear that when a decree-holder purchases a property the decree is satisfied by the very fact of his purchase to the extent of the amount at which the property is knocked down. If the sale is good, then the execution is finished and the decree is satisfied. The question regarding the possession of the property is a question, therefore, between the Court and the purchaser, whether he be a decree-holder or a stranger. When the executing Court having seized the property sells it, it is bound to give possession of the property to the auction-purchaser. This will be under the general law under which a vendor is bound to give possession to the vendee Rule 95 is simply a recognition of this principle and provides an easy and prompt method of obtaining possession from the Court that sells the property. The rule, therefore, has been placed in the chapter relating to the execution of decrees for the sake of convenience and in order to enable the executing Court to give effect to the auction sale. The placing of the section by no means shows that the proceeding relating to the delivery of possession should be regarded as relating to the execution of the decree. This contention, therefore, of the appellants fails.

The suit is not, therefore, barred by section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the limitation prescribed by Article 180 of the Limitation Act, which relates to applications made under the Code of Civil Procedure has no application to the suit. The suit will, therefore, be governed by Article 138 of the Limitation Act and having been brought within 12 years of the auction sale is not at all barred.

Different considerations arise where a decree directs delivery of possession. In such a case title to the property and the right to recover possession is declared by the decree itself and the remedy to obtain possession of the property is by executing the decree, but where, as in the present case, the decree is only for rent or for money and no title to any property is created by the decree, the right of the decree-holder to recover possession arises from the sale of the property and not under the decree. His right to possession, therefore, may be enforced either by a suit or by any summary procedure that the law may have provided. The remedies of such a purchaser are, therefore, two-fold: one by an application under Order XXI, rule 95, and another by a regular suit.

The result is that all the contentions of the appellants fail and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

FACTS.—Suit on a mortgage. The father of defendants Nos. 4 and 5 attached certain properties of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in execution of a decree that he had obtained against them. The plaintiff, who held a simple mortgage against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in respect of those properties, applied to correct the sale proclamation by adding that the sale was to be held subject to an undischarged mortgage. The petition was dismissed on the ground that it was prosecuted too late. More than a year after the order of dismissal plaintiff brought the present suit to enforce the mortgage security against the auction purchasers and their vendee. The claim was decreed by the lower Courts. Defendants Nos. 4 and 5 preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Mr. C. A. Seshagiri Sastri for Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellants.—The present suit is barred under Article 11 of the Limitation Act. The claim by the plaintiff in the prior suit that the sale should be held subject to his mortgage fell under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 58, Civil Procedure Code. The provisions relating to claim proceedings under the new Code are wider than the corresponding provisions of the old Code. Any order passed on a petition presented under rule 58 comes within the mischief of rule 63. The liability of property to a mortgage comes within rule 58. The present suit having been brought more than a year after the dismissal of the claim, Article 11 applies and the suit is barred.

Mr. A. Subbarama Aiyar, for the Respondent No. 1.—The plaintiffs' petition in the prior suit was not one under Order XXI, rule 58. They were, as held by the lower Appellate Court, proceedings in settling a sale proclamation and come under rule 64 and the rules following. See Ganesh Krishna Kulkarni v. Damoo Nathu Shimpi (1). The Court declined to amend the proclamation at a late stage. There was no enquiry and the order of dismissal was not passed as the result of any enquiry. The order is no bar to the suit on the mortgage within the ordinary limitation period.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decree of the Court of the Subordinate

Judge of Tuticorin holding that a suit on a mortgage was not barred by limitation, the point taken before us being that the suit was barred. The bar is said to arise under Article 11 of the Limitation Act and purports to be based on the failure of the plaintiff in this suit to bring his suit within one year from the date of the disposal of a certain objection petition. The lower Appellate Court has held that though the proceedings were under Order XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure, they were not in a claim petition instituted under rule 58 but were proceedings in settling a proclamation under the provisions beginning with rule 64, namely, "sale generally." The learned Subordinate Judge has not given any reasons in his judgment, but it is sought to be supported by a ruling to be found in the decision of the High Court of Bombay in Ganesh Krishna Kulkarni v. Damoo Nathu Shimpi (1). There is some slight difference in the procedure in that case and in this case, but the High Court certainly considered the question on the assumption that there was an objection taken under section 278, corresponding to rule 58, yet they held that the order was not one passed under section 283 and that, therefore, there was no bar of limitation. It has been pointed out, however, by a Full Bench of this Court in Venkatarathnam v. Rangonayakamma (2) that under the new Code, the powers of a Court dealing with objections are much wider than under the old Code. The learned Chief Justice points out that under the old Code, section 283, corresponding to rule 63, was definitely limited by its own language to the three preceding sections 280, 281 and 282 and that it was only where an order had been passed under sections 280, 281 and 282 that the order was conclusive in the absence of a suit, whereas under the present rule 63, the words being "where a claim or an objection is preferred," it necessarily follows that where any claim is made under rule 58, then any order that is passed comes within the mischief of rule 63. It is clear, therefore, that the decision in Ganesh Krishna Kulkarni v. Damoo Nathu Shimpi (1) has no application to the present case. In the present case the claim made is to be found in Exhibit II. In that, claimant asks that "an order should be passed directing that it should be notified at the sale on 5th February 1912 that the petitioner's mortgage has not been discharged, and the proclamation of sale amended accordingly and the sale should be held subject to the mortgage." The order was: "The sale comes off to-morrow. The sale proclamation notifies existence of a mortgage but says it has been discharged. Enquiry cannot now be held whether it has been discharged. Petition dismissed." It seems to us perfectly clear that the provisions of rule 58 cover the claim setting up mortgages and the liability of the property to the mortgage at the time. There can be no doubt that the Court can deal and could deal under the old Code with the liability or non liability of the property to a mortgage, Ganesh Krishna Kulkarni v. Damoo Nathu Shimpi (1) being an authority for that proposition because one particular form of order in that respect is definitely provided for in rule 62 and in the old section 282, and it necessarily seems to follow that if one particular form of order on the claim on a mortgage can be passed, then any claim with respect to an alleged mortgage or existing liability of the mortgage must be a claim under rule 58. For these reasons, we are satisfied that a claim was made under rule 58, although the objection did not purport to be put in under that rule and that it was disposed of by an order which is governed by rule 63. This is the view taken in a case in Ponnusami Pillai v. Samu Amma (3), with which we concur. The result is that the suit, having been brought more than a year from the date of the order, is barred by limitation. The appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 5th Court, Dacca, dated the 21st of December 1916, modifying that of the Mursif, 1st Court at Munshiganj, dated the 22nd of June 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mrityunjay Chatterjee (with him Babu Heramba Lal Sanyal for Babu Hara Prosad Chatterjee,) for the Appellants.—Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are appellants, and the appeal arises out of a suit for possession on redemption of a mortgage by way of conditional sale. The main question for determination now is whether the appellants are entitled to interest at the rate of 30 per cent. stipulated in the mortgage-bond. The lower Appellate Court has found that because the money was secured by mortgage of immoveable property, and because half of the amount of interest was to be realized from the usufruct of the property, the interest at the rate of 30 per cent. must be unconscionable and usurious. The case of Bouwang Raja Challaphroo Chowdhury v. Banga Behary Sen (1) relied on by the lower Appellate Court has been overruled by the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee reported as Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand (2) and Lala Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (3).

Babu Romesh Chandra Sen, for the Respondents.—The finding is that the rate of interest was unconscionable and usurious and so the lower Appellate Court was justified in reducing the rate of interest. The case in Lala Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (3) was not a case of mortgage. In the case in Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand (2) the question of penalty arising under section 74 of the Contract Act was not considered. The Court has got jurisdiction to reduce the rate of interest in any case in which it considers the stipulation to be penal

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for possession on redemption of a mortgage by way of conditional sale. The plaintiffs are the purchasers of the equity of redemption from the defendant No. 3, the original mortgagor. It may be mentioned that they were also prior mortgagees and that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 deposited the amount of their mortgage in Court. Subsequently after the withdrawal of the deposit the plaintiffs purchased the equity of redemption. There are now two questions before us. The first is with regard to interest. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has cut the interest down from 30 per cent. to 12 per cent., referring to certain decisions of this Court. But since those cases were decided, the decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the cases of Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand(2) and Lala Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (3) respectively have been reported. It appears to me that, in view of these later decisions, the Court has no option but to allow the defendants the rate of interest stipulated in the bond, which is 30 per cent. per annum.

The other question is with regard to a sum of Rs. 100. It was found by the 1st Court that as a matter of fact Rs. 300 was the money paid by the defendants on the bond in favour of the plaintiff. It was further found that the defendants were entitled to add to their dues this sum of Rs. 100 with interest at the rate mentioned in the bond. That Rs. 300 paid on the bond plus this Rs. 100 make a total of Rs. 400. But in the ordering portion of the judgment and in the decree, the principal sum is mentioned as Rs. 300 and not Rs. 400. That formed the subject-matter of a cross-appeal in the lower Appellate Court, but the learned Subordinate Judge disposed of it with the words "cross appeal is dismissed." The defendants now urge that they ought to have that Rs. 100 with interest. On the other hand, it is said by the plaintiffs that there ought to be a remand for a finding with regard to this Rs. 100, and it is suggested that the plaintiffs are being prejudiced by being unable to advance arguments which they might have advanced if the cross appeal had been pressed in the lower Appellate Court. I see no reason to think that the cross appeal was not pressed and I think the defendants ought to have this sum of Rs. 100 added to their principal money.

The appeal will be decreed with costs in all Courts and a fresh account will be prepared on this basis. That the plaintiffs owe to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 Rs. 300 with simple interest at 30 per cent. per annum from the date of the advance to the date of the recovery of possession by the defendants and thereafter at 15 per cent. per annum up to the date of the institution of this suit and also Rs. 100 with simple interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the deposit to the date of the institution of the suit. The decree will be prepared in the form prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure for a mortgage by way of conditional sale. The period of grace will be six months from the date of this decree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110—Appeal to His Majesty in Council—Value, determination of, method of—One of several parties desiring to appeal.

In order to determine the value for the purposes of an appeal to His Majesty in Council in a case where there is a dispute as to property valued at more than Rs. 10,000, and only one of the parties affected by the decision desires to appeal, what must be looked at is the detriment to that party, and if, in fact, the total amount of the subject-matter of the suit so far as his interest is concerned is under Rs. 10,000, it does not come within the terms of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code, and, therefore, an appeal is not permissible. [p. 725, col. 1.]

Privy Council appeal from a decision of the Patna High Court affirming a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Gaya.

Messrs. Bulwant Sahai and Rai Gurusaran Parsad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Abani Bhusan Mukerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—In this case the defendant No. 2 in a mortgage suit instituted before the Subordinate Judge of Gaya seeks leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from a decision of this Court, dated the 9th August 1918, affirming a decision of the Subordinate Judge in execution proceedings arising out of the decree obtained by the plaintiffs in the mortgage suit.

In order to understand how the question now under discussion arises, it is necessary to state the facts because the petitioner contends that notwithstanding that the judgment of this Court was a judgment of affirmance, there is a material question of law to be determined by their Lordships of the Privy Council. But before it becomes necessary to consider that question, the petitioner must make out that the subject-matter of the suit in the Court of first instance and the subject-matter of the dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council is of the sum of Rs. 10,000 or upwards.

The plaintiffs were mortgagees of a 16-annas share in Mauza Panania Azimgarh and also of a 16-annas share in Mauza Panania Mani Chak. They brought a suit against the mortgagors on the basis of their mortgage. They added the present petitioner as a defendant, he being interested in a 4-annas share of Panania Azimgarh as subsequent mortgagee. When the decree was made, it was directed that there should be a sale first of all of a 12-annas share of Mauza Panania Azimgarh and a 16-annas share of Mauza Panania Mani Chak leaving the 4-annas share of the first mentioned property in which the defendant No. 2, the present petitioner, was interested for subsequent sale, if the sale of the remainder of the property did not satisfy the plaintiffs' decree. When execution proceedings were taken out, the appellant objected to the valuation given in the sale proclamation by the plaintiffs, who had assessed the value at Rs. 4,000 for one of the properties and Rs. 500 for the other. The present petitioner put the values at Rs. 16,000 and Rs. 4,000 respectively and these values were accepted by the Subordinate Judge. Subsequently that execution case was struck off for default of the decree-holders. A second execution case was then instituted and again the decree-holders put the value of these properties at Rs. 4,000 and Rs. 500 as previously. Again there was an objection by the petitioner and the objection was allowed. That execution case also was dismissed for default. A third attempt at execution was made, the values being stated as before, and this also failed. Eventually a fourth application was made in January 1917, when the decree holders put the value of Mauza Panania Mani Chak at Rs. 500, the value of 12 annas of Panania Azimgarh at Rs. 4,000 and the value of the 4-annas share of the same property at Rs. 1,300. On this occasion they were successful and the sale took place in April 1917, the property being purchased by the decree holders for the sum of Rs. 4,600 for the 12-annas share of Panania Azimgarh, Rs. 1,400 for the 4 annas share of the same property and Rs. 650 for the Panania Mani Chak property. The petitioner then applied in September 1917 to have the sale set aside, urging the same grounds as he had previously taken. That application was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge and on appeal to this Court this Court affirmed the decision of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the appeal. It is from that decision that it is now sought to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

It will be observed from what I have already said that the only interest which the petitioner has in the subject matter of this suit is an interest which he himself places at a valuation of Rs. 4,000. Therefore, prima facie, it would appear that he was not entitled to appeal in a matter concerned with a claim to property of that amount. But his contention is that what he is asking the Court to do and what he is entitled to obtain is an order setting aside the sale of property valued according to him at a sum of well over Rs. 10,000, that is to say, setting aside not only the sale of the property in which he is interested as mortgagee but also setting aside the sale of the other property which had been ordered to be sold first before that in which he was interested should be sold. It is quite true that he has an interest in seeing that that property is sold for an adequate sum and that the sale proclamation contains a proper valuation, but the decree, in so far as it affects his interests, deals only with property on his own shewing which is valued at Rs. 4,000 and, in my opinion, in order to determine the value of the subject matter in dispute it is necessary to look at it as it affects the interests of the party prejudiced by the order or decree objected to. Whatever may be the value of the property in which the petitioner is interested, his interest in that property cannot, it seems to me, from any point of view, be regarded as more than Rs. 4,000. In the case of De Silva v. De Silva (1) it was laid down by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., that in order to determine the value prescribed by section 596 of the Civil Procedure Code then in force, which is similar in its terms for present purposes to the present Code, the decree has to be looked at as it affects the interests of the parties prejudiced by it and where the detriment to the party seeking relief is estimated at less than Rs. 10,000, then the value of the matter in dispute in appeal is not of the prescribed value, and the decree itself does not involve any claim or question to or respecting property of the prescribed value, and the case does not fulfil the requirements of the Code. In that case the plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was entitled to one third share in certain property which had belonged to his mother and for an order that the property should be partitioned and his share given to him with mesne profits. He established his claim in the Appeal Court and obtained a decree. The defendants then applied to obtain leave to appeal to the Privy Council against that decree, and the argument on their behalf was that the decree directed a partition of the whole property which was valued at over Rs. 12,000 and, therefore, the subject-matter in dispute exceeded the prescribed value, although the plaintiff's share in that was less than Rs. 10,000. In dealing with this argument the learned Chief Justice laid down the proposition which I have just referred to. He said: "The argument has been that inasmuch as the whole property is valued at Rs. 12,000, there is a compliance with the terms of the section though the loss to the defendant by reason of the decree is limited to one-third of that property and profits. If we were to give effect to the contentions urged before us, it would follow that if the sole subject matter in dispute were an easement of trifling value, but affecting property worth Rs. 10,000 or upwards, then a right to appeal to His Majesty in Council under the Civil Procedure Code would exist. It appears to me that this would be giving to the words of the section an operation that could not have been intended and the answer to the argument, in my opinion, is that while the detriment to the applicant under the decree must be estimated at less than Rs. 10,000, it has not been suggested that there is any other property outside the subject-matter in dispute which can be affected by our decision, so that the decree does not involve any claim or question to or respecting property of the required amount." It seems to me, agreeing as I do with that decision, that the principle there referred to applies with equal force to the present case. It is true that there is a dispute here as to property valued at more than Rs. 10,000 but what one really has to look to in all these cases, in my opinion, is what is the detriment to the person seeking to appeal to the Privy Council and whatever may be the value of the property in respect to which the claim is brought, if in fact the total amount of the subject-matter of the suit so far as the appellant's interest is concerned is under Rs. 10,000, then it seems to me that it does not come within the terms of the section. In the present case I think that the appellant has failed to shew that the subject-matter of the suit or of the dispute in appeal is of the value of Rs. 10,000 or upwards and this application must be dismissed with costs. Hearing fee five gold mohurs.

CIVIL APPEAL No. 60 OF 1918.

February 12, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim and Mr. Justice Spencer.

Sri GAJAPATI NARASIMHA DEO GARU AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

Sri GAJAPATI KRISHNACHENDRA DEO GARU AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 5, 6, 7, 8, 15 (2), Sch I, Art. 127—Joint property, exclusion from, what constitutes—Denial of co-parcenary rights, effect of—Applicability of Art. 127 to minors—Guardian, knowledge of, whether binds minor—Extension of time by reason of disability of minority, limits of, doctrine of—Notice, statutory requirement of, effect of, on period of minority.

In order that lapse of time may deprive a co-parcener of his rights in the joint family property by the operation of Article 127 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act it has to be established that he has been excluded from the enjoyment of the property to his own knowledge If exclusion for twelve years to the knowledge of the excluded co-parcener is established, his rights will be barred but not otherwise The mere fact that a co parcener has not enjoyed any portion of the family property for 12 years or more cannot deprive him of his rights. Possession of one co-parcener is deemed in law to be possession on behalf of all co-parceners, although other co-parceners may take no part in the management and may not even enjoy any of the income of the property. What amounts to exclusion in a given case must be determined in the light of its peculiar facts [p 730, col. 1.]

If a person is allowed maintenance and permitted to live in the family house, not as a co-parcener but as a mere dependant, while his claim as co-parcener is distinctly denied, the enjoyment of such residence or maintenance is not sufficient to prevent time running against his claim [p 730, col. 2: p 731, col. 1.]

Maharajulungaru v. Rajah Row Puntula, 5 M. H. C. R. 31 and Krishnabai v Khangowda, 18 B. 197: 9 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 639, distinguished.

Article 127 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act applies equally to minors as to adults [p. 731, col. 2.]

The effect of sections 6, 7 and 8 of the Limitation Act is that time runs against a minor just as against a person sui juris but in the case of a minor, he will have three years more after the cessation of the disability if the period of time allowed for the suit or application expired before he attained majority. [p. 731, col. 1.]

The knowledge of the guardian must be imputed to the minor within the meaning of Article 127. The Article contemplates that in the case of minors, the knowledge of the guardian is quite sufficient. [p 731, col. 2]

Section 15, sub-section 2, of the Limitation Act has nothing to do with the extension of time allowed to persons under disability under sections 6 and 8 of the Act. The period of limitation is calculated according to the Article applicable to a particular case, and, therefore, the period of notice required is to be added to the time allowed by the Article applicable to such a case What sections 6 and 8 allow to a minor or a person under disability is 3 years and no more from the cessation of the disability and the 3 years' extension cannot be made into 3 years and 2 months by reason of section 15, sub-section 2 of the Act. [p. 732, col. 1.]

Per Spencer, J.—The concession which section 6 of the Limitation Act allows to minors is that they may sue within the same period after the disability has ceased as would be allowed by the appropriate Article of the Schedule to the Act. This concession is, however, limited by section 8 to a maximum of three years from attainment of majority. Where the 2nd column of the Schedule provides for a longer period of limitation than three years, the disability of minority cannot have the effect of extending the period which is running during the minority of a plaintiff to more than three years. This is the effect of section 8, read with section 6. [p. 733, col. 2.]

Faki Abas v. Faki Nurudin, 16 B. 191; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 605, not approved.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court, Ganjam at Berhampore, in Original Suit No. 12 of 1917.

FACTS.—Suit for partition. The parties are related as follows:

GAJAPATHY VASUDEVA DEO, DIED 1898.

1st wife (called Pattamma Devi).	2nd wife (Koolamma Devi).
1st defendant, became major on 29.9.1916, (21 years).
1st plaintiff, became major, November 1909 (18 years).	2nd plaintiff, became major, August 1913 (18 years).

The suit was filed on 27th September 1916.

Gajapathi Vasudeva Deo died in 1898 and the estate was taken over by the Court of Wards on the 1st defendant's behalf as heir to the deceased. Thereupon the mother of plaintiffs, whom the defendant contends to be only a concubine, applied (in pursuance of a Will of the deceased leaving $\frac{3}{4}$ths of his estate to the 1st defendant and his mother and $\frac{1}{4}$th to the plaintiffs and their mother) that separate accounts should be kept. The Court of Wards, holding the Will to be invalid (as being in respect of joint family property) after consultation with the local Government Pleader, dismissed the application saying that the Koolamma Devi was only entitled to maintenance. The lower Court, holding that plaintiffs were excluded from this date, held that the suit was barred under Article 127 of the Limitation Act. Plaintiffs appealed.

Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham, for the Plaintiffs-Appellants — Our cause of action arose only in 1916, when the Court notified that the whole estate was to be handed over to the 1st defendant under section 55 of the Court of Wards Act. There was no exclusion till then. My reasons are:—

(1) Knowledge of exclusion is the starting point; so exclusion cannot begin at least until the period of minority is over. See Krishnabai v. Khangowda (1) and Faki Abas v. Faki Nurudin (2). Both are cases under clause (13), section 1 of the Limitation Act of 1859. Such cases have been held to govern the application of Article 127 of the present Act. See also Second Appeal No. 2402 of 1912, where the intervening period in question was more than 12 years. Articles 32, 48, 90, 91, 92, 95, 96, 113, 114, 115, 127, 164 of the Limitation Act use the word 'knowledge'. 'Plaintiff' is defined in the interpretation clause as including the person from whom he derives his right to sue. A guardian is not such a person. See Maharajulungaru v. Rajah Row Puntulu (3), where an order of the Court of Wards similar to the one in the present case was held not to have the effect of exclusion as against the minors.

(2). The law is that where a person is not in possession and is not receiving any benefit from the joint family property, there is exclusion. But there is no exclusion if the person lives and is maintained out of the joint family property. Jaganatha v. Ramabhadra (4). See also Kumarappa Chettiar v. Saminatha Chettiar (5), which cites a passage from Kachi Yuva Rangappa Kalakka Thola Udayar v. Kachi Kalyana Rangappa

Kalakka Thola Udayar (6) with approval. In the present case the plaintiffs are living in the family fort and are being maintained from the family income on an equally liberal scale as the first defendant.

[ABDUR RAHIM, J.—But the Court of Wards assumed management expressly on behalf of the 1st defendant alone as heir and owner.]

But we are receiving maintenance as shown by the order of the Court of Wards and the receipt of maintenance means no exclusion. That is the case law. See Jagannatha v. Ramabhadra (4) and others cases referred to.

[ABDUR RAHIM, J.—That is only if you receive maintenance being an heir. But if you are only a maintenance-holder?]

That question, raised in a specific issue, has not been gone into. The only question argued and tried was that of limitation. There being no time bar the case must go back for trial on the other issues.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for Defendant-Respondent No. 1.—Conceding that mere non participation will not be exclusion, the law is that if it is accompanied by a notoriously adverse denial of title, there is exclusion. The report in Jagannatha v. Ramabhadra (4) shows that there was no such denial by the Court of Wards which we have in the present case. Further mere maintenance and living on in the family house have been held to be consistent with exclusion. See Raghunath Bali v. Maharaj Bali (7). For mere living is not possession in law.

[SPENCER, J.—But the denial was by the Court of Wards to the plaintiffs' mother. How can it affect the minors?]

The denial was by my agent to their guardian. No doubt the presumption is that there is no adverse possession by one co-owner against another. But it is reversed if there is a notorious denial of title. See Ittapan v. Manavikrama (8), and Ujalbi Bibi v. Umakanta Karmokar (9).

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The suit of the appellants has been dismissed on the ground of limitation, none of the other issues raised in the case having been tried at all. I may say at the outset that though in the result, I agree in the conclusion of the learned District Judge, I do not think that it was a prudent course on his part to have confined himself to the issue of limitation.

The suit was to enforce partition of a partible Zemindari in the district of Ganjam. The two plaintiffs claim to be the legitimate sons of the last proprietor Vasudeva Deo, and their case is that they are entitled to one-third share each in the estate while the 1st defendant, the son of Vasudeva Deo by another wife, is entitled to the remaining one third. The plaintiffs further allege that Vasudeva Deo left a Will under which the plaintiffs were entitled to one-fourth share, their claim, therefore, is in the alternative to one fourth share of the estate in case they fail to prove that they are the legitimate sons of Vasudeva Deo. Vasudeva Deo died in January 1898 and the Court of Wards took charge of the estate and managed it till the 1st defendant attained majority sometime in 1916 and then made over the estate to him. The mother of the plaintiffs, who claimed to be the married wife of the deceased proprietor, lived till April 1911. Immediately after his death, she tried her best to establish the status as a widow and that of her sons as the legitimate sons of Vasudeva Deo. Both the two plaintiffs and the 1st defendant were infants at the time of the proprietor's death, the 1st defendant being the youngest of them.

NARASIMHA DEO v. KRISHNA CHENDRA DEO.

The 1st plaintiff attained majority, that is to say, the age of eighteen in November 1909. The 2nd plaintiff attained the age of eighteen in August 1913. The suit was filed on the 27th September 1916, that is, nearly seven years after the 1st plaintiff became eighteen years old and three years and a little more than a month after the 2nd plaintiff became eighteen years of age.

The main point on which the learned District Judge has found that the suit is barred is that, as far back as 1898 when the mother of the plaintiffs was acting as their guardian, their title to any share in the estate as heirs or under the alleged Will of Vasudeva Deo was denied and the Court of Wards obtained possession of the estate on behalf of the 1st defendant and excluded the plaintiffs from possession. Admittedly, if these facts are correctly found, the suit would be barred under Article 127 of the Limitation Act, unless the proposition of law contended for on behalf of the appellants can be established that Article 127 of the Limitation Act has no application to the case of minors because no knowledge of exclusion can be imputed to them.

There is really no dispute about what happened. It is quite sufficient to go through the different letters and petitions written to the Court of Wards by the mother of the plaintiffs and the replies and the orders thereon to form a conclusion as to whether there was or not exclusion of the plaintiffs within the meaning of Article 127 of the Limitation Act. I may say at once that it can hardly be disputed upon the facts that the Court of Wards took possession of the estate purporting to act solely on behalf of the 1st defendant and not on behalf of any persons who may be found entitled to the estate. It is unnecessary to decide whether under the Statute the Court of Wards can take charge of an estate in that way, that is, on behalf of any one who may be found entitled to it. In this case, there can be no doubt whatever that it treated the 1st defendant alone as its ward and managed the estate on his behalf. I may mention, however, that the Court of Wards Act in its various sections contemplates that when it takes charge of an estate, it is to act on behalf of a particular ward or wards who may be suffering from disability, such as minority or otherwise, specified in the Act. I need only mention some of the sections which make this clear.—Sections 9, 10, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 34 and 56. The mother of the plaintiffs presented an arzi, Exhibit VII, dated 20th April 1898, to the Collector. There she calls herself as the junior wife or widow of the late Vasudeva Deo, Zemindar, and asserts that her status is the same as that of the senior widow, the mother of the 1st defendant, and that her sons also have the same status as the 1st defendant. She also propounds the alleged Will under which her sons are to get one-fourth share of the estate, and then prays that she and her sons along with the senior Mahadevi's sons be kept under the protection of, and supported by, the Court of Wards and separate accounts maintained in respect of their shares. That was quite a distinct claim put forward on behalf of the plaintiffs both as sons of Vasudeva Deo and under the alleged Will. A report was in due course called for and submitted by the Collector and upon that report, the Court of Wards passed a resolution on the 6th July 1898 to this effect:—that the alienation made by the late proprietor is invalid and that the "Poovvula Mahadevi (that is how the mother of the plaintiffs was styled) is entitled only to maintenance." By this, it is quite clear, it was meant to include not merely the mother of the plaintiffs personally but also as guardian of her two sons. Thereupon the Collector sent a reply to that effect (Exhibit XLVIII) on 16th July 1898 to the petitioner (mother of the plaintiffs), and we have the endorsement that the reply was in fact forwarded to the petitioner by the Deputy Tahsildar on the 7th August 1898. I mention this because the Counsel for the appellants raised a question as to whether the order of the Court of Wards was at all communicated to his client. There is no doubt that it must have been communicated in due course as it purports to have been. Otherwise the mother of the plaintiffs would not have sat quiet but insisted upon an answer. In fact the further correspondence shows that she fully knew that her claim had been distinctly rejected by the Court of Wards. Then we come to Exhibit XL, dated 23rd August 1900. That was a petition submitted by the mother of the plaintiffs protesting against the registration of a certain village belonging to the Zemindari in the name of the 1st defendant's mother's father, who apparently claimed it under a grant. There again in the last paragraph she asserted that she and her minor sons were entitled to a share in the estate, and, therefore, had an interest in the village in question as well. The order passed thereon was that the petitioner was not recognised as the widow of the late proprietor and the petition was, therefore, rejected. She was not satisfied with that and went on pressing her claim as the junior widow of the Zemindar. In 1903 we find that she submitted a petition Exhibit XLI, claiming that she was the junior widow or Sanna Mahadevi and that she must be treated as such. There she also cited some correspondence in which she was so styled. But on enquiry it was ascertained that she was so designated in some of the letters through a mistake of the clerk and that she was only Poovvula Mahadevi, that is to say, a woman occupying the status of a concubine and not a wife at all, and the Collector also pointed out that the amount of the allowance given to her and to her sons was on the basis not of a widow at all. Then she presented a petition to the Court of Wards against the order of the Collector. That was in May 1904 Exhibit XXIX. The Court of Wards upheld the decision of the Collector and the order was communicated to her in due course. We also find that the receipts for maintenance, etc., which she had given and in which she had styled herself as Sanna Mahadevi or junior widow, were returned to her for correction and she was asked to sign them as Poovvula Mahadevi. This was in August 1904. On her death, the plaintiffs' maintenance allowance was reduced from Rs. 55 to Rs. 35. Thereupon the 1st plaintiff who attained majority in 1909 filed a petition before the Court of Wards in January 1910—Exhibit IX—in which he prayed for maintenance to be paid at the original rate without any reduction, and there he describes both himself and his brother as 'dependants on the estate,' again as 'maintained by the estate,' in another place as being 'protected by the estate' and then as 'attached to the family of the deceased proprietor.' That shows how the plaintiffs themselves understood the attitude of the Court of Wards towards them. I may also mention another petition Exhibit VI, dated 26th January 1911, in which leave was asked for by the 1st plaintiff to go to Berhampore in order to obtain a certificate from the Surgeon to the effect that the 1st plaintiff had attained majority so that he might have his rights to the estate established.

Upon these facts the conclusion seems to be irresistible that the Court of Wards purported to act and did act solely and entirely on behalf of the 1st defendant and treated the 1st defendant as the sole heir to the estate of the deceased proprietor, and that since 1893 it refused distinctly and repeatedly to recognise the plaintiffs' mother as a lawfully wedded wife of the proprietor and her sons as his legitimate children and it also held that the claim of the plaintiffs to a share in the estate under the Will was invalid. The decision of the Court of Wards was communicated in due course to the plaintiffs' mother who, as their natural guardian, was pressing their claims to be recognized as heirs or as legatees by the Court of Wards. The plaintiffs' mother was allowed maintenance for herself and her two children and they were allowed to live within the precincts of the fort, not with the 1st defendant and his mother but in some other part of the palace. It appears that the Zemindar had a number of concubines and they were all allowed maintenance though smaller in amount. The plaintiffs' mother was allowed somewhat more by way of maintenance for herself and her children. The reason why she was allowed more is not quite clearly stated in the correspondence, but as far as it can be gathered, it was because she belonged to a somewhat higher caste than the other concubines or may be because she had children by the late Zemindar. But the Court of Wards distinctly refused to recognize either that the plaintiffs' mother was the wife of the late Zemindar and her sons were his legitimate sons, or that the plaintiffs were entitled to any share whatever in the estate. Under these circumstances, the possession of the Court of Wards must be treated as possession on behalf of the 1st defendant alone, and it seems to me that there is no way of escaping the conclusion that the Court of Wards, acting on behalf of the 1st defendant, excluded the minors from any share in or possession of the estate or any properties belonging to the estate.

We have been referred to a number of rulings on behalf of the appellants, but it does not seem to me, though I shall notice them very briefly, that any of them can help us very much in arriving at a proper conclusion in this case, for the question really depends entirely upon the appreciation of the evidence. So far as the law bearing on the subject of limitation of suits instituted by a person claiming to be a member of a joint Hindu family is concerned, there can be no doubt whatever, for it is well settled. The mere fact that a co-parcener has not enjoyed any portion of the family property for twelve years or more, cannot deprive him of his rights. Possession of one co-parcener is deemed in law to be possession on behalf of all co-parceners, although other co-parceners may take no part in the management and may not even enjoy any of the income of the property. In order that lapse of time may deprive a co parcener of his rights in the joint family property, it has to be established that he has been excluded from enjoyment of the property to his own knowledge. If exclusion for twelve years to the knowledge of the excluded co-parcener is established, his rights will be barred but not otherwise. What will amount to exclusion in a given case will have to be determined in the light of its peculiar facts. In some cases, receipt of maintenance by a junior member of a Zemindar's family may be good evidence to negative the allegation of enjoyment of the Zemindari or its properties as in Raghunath Bali v. Maharaj Bali (7). In some cases on the other hand receipt of maintenance may be evidence of recognition of a person's claim as a co-parcener in a joint Hindu family. On behalf of the appellants, much reliance was placed on the ruling in Maharaju Jungaru v. Rajah Row Puntulu (3). But there the learned Judges found, having regard to the attitude taken up by the Court of Wards in that case, that it did not profess to decide as to which of the claimants was entitled to the Zemindari and, therefore, it would not be said that it purported to exclude the plaintiff in that suit, if he was the rightful heir. This is what they say at page 43:—"The most that, it seems to us, the evidence can fairly be considered as proving is that the funds have been held by the Court of Wards since the late Zemindar's death in trust for the person or persons entitled to them." In this case, nothing can be clearer than that the Court of Wards definitely recognized from the very beginning the 1st defendant as the heir and rejected the claim of the plaintiffs to any share in the estate either as heirs of the Zemindar or as his legatees. It was also contended on behalf of the appellants that the decision of the Bombay High Court reported as Krishnabai v. Khangowda (1) shows that such action of the Court of Wards as has been proved in this case would not amount to an ouster. In the first place, there is really not much similarity between the facts of the two cases and the Bombay case was decided under the Limitation Act—Act IX of 1871—where the starting point of limitation was from demand and refusal, and it was found that no demand or refusal had been proved. It was pointed out in that case that the brother who did not receive a share in the partition effected by the other two brothers had lived as a member of the family of one of the brothers till he died leaving the plaintiff in that suit, his minor son, as his heir and that fact was relied on by the learned Judges as showing that he was not excluded from the enjoyment of the joint family property. Whether that conclusion was justified by the facts of that case or not, it is not for us to pronounce any opinion upon. Suffice it to say that in this case the exclusion of the plaintiffs is, to my mind, absolutely clear on the evidence. They were allowed to live within the precincts of the palace as dependants, as sons of a concubine of the Zemindar. I do not know of any proposition of law to the effect that, if a person is allowed maintenance and permitted to live in the family house not as a co-parcener but as a mere dependant, while his claim as co-parcener is distinctly denied, the enjoyment of such maintenance or residence in the family house would suffice to prevent time running against his claim.

I come to the next contention that the plaintiffs being minors till 1909, there could be no exclusion to their knowledge at least until that date, that is to say, Article 127 of the Limitation Act, we are asked to hold, has no application to the case of minors. This seems to me a very sweeping proposition and not warranted by the provisions of the Limitation Act. The scheme of the Limitation Act is that the several articles apply to all suits and applications mentioned therein and that in the case of persons under disability, a certain extension of time is allowed to them to enable them to file suits after the disability has ceased. Section 6 says that "where a person entitled to institute a suit or make an application for the execution of a decree is, at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned, a minor,..... he may institute the suit or make the application within the same period after the disability has ceased, as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor in the third column of the First Schedule." Section 7 deals with the case of disability of one of several plaintiffs. Section 8 says, "nothing in section 6 or in section 7 applies to suits to enforce rights of pre-emption (with which we are not concerned) or shall be deemed to extend, for more than three years from the cessation of the disability or the death of the person affected thereby, the period within which any suit must be instituted or application made." The effect is that time runs against a minor just as against a person sui juris, but in the case of a minor, he will have three years more after the cessation of a disability if the period of time allowed for the suit or application expired before he attained majority. In some cases, it may be that the time would not, as provided in the articles, expire before a minor attains majority. Then he will have that time within which to institute the suit, that is, in no case he shall have less than the time allowed by the articles, but in certain cases, he will have three years more after the cessation of the disability. The argument on behalf of the appellants is that a minor cannot be imputed with any knowledge. It is unnecessary for me in this case to express any opinion on the question "whether the knowledge can be imputed to a minor direct where there is no guardian to act for him, and if so, under what circumstances." But I have no doubt that where there is a guardian such as here, knowledge of the guardian must be imputed to the minor. Article 127 to my mind contemplates that in the case of minors, the knowledge of the guardian is quite sufficient. A minor is allowed by the law to act through his guardian and as expressed by a learned Jurist, the guardian and the ward are identified and form one complete person. For purposes of litigation the act of a guardian, is binding on the minor. For instance, a decision against a minor represented by a guardian, unless it is impeachable on the ground of fraud or on other similar grounds operates as res judicata. Then there are a number of other articles of the Limitation Act under which time runs from the date of the knowledge of the plaintiff. I should like to have some authority for saying that all these articles have no application to the case of a minor. I may especialy mention one article—Article 164, which requires that an application by a defendant to set aside an ex parte decree must be made within thirty days of the date of the decree. If the general contention of the appellants were well-founded, an ex parte decree against a minor can be set aside years after it had been passed, although the Legislature in laying down thirty days as the limit of time for such an application intended that a matter of that sort should be decided as soon after the decree had been passed as possible. In my opinion Article 127 applies.

I am also of opinion that section 7 of the Limitation Act applies to this case. The 1st plaintiff attained majority in 1909, and then, as the eldest member of the family, supposing he was a member of a joint Hindu family as claimed, he could give a discharge on behalf of himself and his younger brother, the 2nd plaintiff. I do not think that the application of section 7 is excluded because in this suit the plaintiffs have asked for partition. They had been excluded from their family property, and it was open to the 1st plaintiff to have instituted a suit to recover the property for himself and his younger brother, the 2nd plaintiff. A Full Bench ruling of this Court has held that section 7 is applicable to such cases, and, therefore, the non failure of the 1st plaintiff to sue within three years after attaining majority would be sufficient in itself to bar the suit [Doraisami Sirumadan v. Nondisami Saluvan (13) and Soundararajan v. Saravana Pillai (12)].

The 2nd plaintiff attained eighteen years of age in August 1913 and even apart from section 7 he would be barred unless under section 15, sub section 2 of the Limitation Act, read with sections 6 and 8, he would have three years and two months for filing the suit after attaining majority, in which case his suit would be in time The Court of Wards Act, section 49, requires that two months' notice should be given before the institution of the suit and what section 15, sub-section 2, says is:—"In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit of which notice has been given in accordance with any enactment for the time being in force, the period of such notice shall be excluded." Now the period of limitation is calculated according to the article applicable to a particular case, and, therefore, the period of notice required is to be added to the time allowed by the article applicable to such a case. Section 15, sub-section 2, has nothing to do with the extension of time allowed to persons under disability under sections 6 and 8. What those sections allow to the minor or person under disability is three years and no more from the cessation of the disability, and I do not see how three years is to be made into three years and two months by reason of section 15, sub-section 2.

This really disposes of the appeal. The learned Counsel for the appellants raised a question as to the proper amount of Court-fees payable. The plaintiffs have been made to pay both in the lower Court as well as in this Court Court-fees calculated on the market value of the properties claimed. He says that the plaintiffs are entitled to value the subject matter of the dispute as they like, the contention being that the suit being one for partition, section 7 (iv) (b) applies. But I do not wish to express any opinion as to what is the proper fee leviable in this case, because the decision as to what fee is payable is final. Chapter II of the Court Fees Act provides for fees in the High Court, and section 5 which is in that chapter says: "When any difference arises between the officer whose duty it is to see that any fee is paid under this chapter and any suitor or attorney as to the necessity of paying a fee or the amount thereof, the question shall, when the difference arises in any of the said High Courts, be referred to the Taxing Officer whose decision thereon shall be final, except when the question is, in his opinion, one of general importance, in which case he shall refer it to the final decision of the Chief Justice of such High Court or of such Judge of the High Court as the Chief Justice shall appoint either generally or specially in this behalf" There has been no such reference in this case. Under section 5, the order of the Registrar, so far as the fee paid on the memorandum of appeal is concerned, would be final, unless, as argued, section 5 only deals with cases on the original side of this Court. That chapter, however, is not confined to fees payable on the original side but also provides for fees payable on the appellate side—see section 4 So far as section 5 is not applicable and section 7 applies, that is, so far as the fee payable on the plaint is concerned, according to section 12, the decision of the Court will be final and we have not been referred to any authority which lays down that such an order is appealable.

The result is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs

The memorandum of objections is not pressed and is dismissed with costs.

SPENCER, J.—This suit was brought to recover possession of shares which the plaintiffs claim in an estate which they allege to be their ancestral family property. Although it would have been more satisfactory for all concerned if the issues which relate to the question of plaintiffs' status as legitimate sons of the late Vasudeva Deo and their title as legatees under the Will had been decided on their merits, I think that this appeal must be dismissed upon the short point that the plaintiffs, having a right of suit on attaining majority to obtain a declaration as to their title to their ancestral property, are limited by section 8 of the Indian Limitation Act to a period of three years from that date to institute their suit. In this case, 1st plaintiff, having been born in November 1891, became eighteen in November 1909 and the 2nd plaintiff, having been born in August 1895, became eighteen in August 1913. The plaint was filed on 27th September 1916 after three years had expired from the cessation of the disability of minority of both plaintiffs. The period of three years cannot be extended by two months under section 15, as that section refers only to the time for computing the period of limitation under the appropriate article of the Schedule. Neither can the Indian Majority Act be availed of for extending the age of minority of these plaintiffs to twenty-one, because the provision under section 3 of that Act applies only to cases where the superintendence of the minor's property has been assumed by the Court of Wards, and because in this case the Court of Wards never assumed the superintendence of the estate of these minors, for, as it appears from the evidence, the Court of Wards and the Collector all along consistently repudiated plaintiffs' claim to anything more than such an allowance as might be granted out of commiseration and as a matter of grace to children born of an irregular connection resembling concubinage rather than wedlock. On this point, the lower Court's decision is in my opinion unassailable. In the plaint, the cause of action is said to have arisen when the Court of Wards issued a notification that all the suit properties and all records appertaining thereto would be handed over to the 1st defendant alone, that is, to the legitimate heir of Vasudeva Dao, on the 29th September 1916 when he attained majority and ignoring the plaintiffs' rights in the suit properties. That notification has not been exhibited in the suit and we thus are kept in the dark as to its contents. But it is clear that if the suit is based on a denial of plaintiffs' title to a share in the Nandigam estate, the first denial by the 2nd defendant was much earlier than May 1916, which is given as the date of plaintiffs' coming to know of the said notification. As my learned brother has dealt in some detail with the evidence, I will only refer to Exhibit XLVIII, dated 16th July 1898, and the proceedings part of Exhibit A, dated 6th July 1898, Exhibit V-A of the same date, and Exhibit IX (a), dated 8th August 1911, in which the Collector and the Court of Wards declare that plaintiffs' mother the "Poovvula Mahadevi" or flower consort and her children were entitled to maintenance only. After this, it is clearly impossible to treat the Court of Wards' possession as being possession on behalf of plaintiffs or as possession of which plaintiffs were unaware at the time when the Court of Wards assumed management in 1898. (Vide Exhibit I and its enclosures.) For the application of Article 127 of the Limitation Act, plaintiffs have not given any other date than May 1916 when they came to know of their exclusion; but that date cannot be accepted for the reasons I have given, and it is clear that, though minors, they must have come to know of their exclusion through their mother, long before that date. If plaintiffs' mother who died on 7th April 1911 (see Exhibit O), as guardian of plaintiffs had just before her death filed a suit to enforce their right to share in the family property, the suit would undoubtedly have failed on account of her knowledge in 1898 of the exclusion of herself and her children. The concession which section 6 of the Limitation Act allows to minors is that they may sue within the same period after the disability has ceased as would be allowed by the appropriate article of the Schedule to the Act. This concession is, however, limited by section 8 to a maximum of three years from attainment of majority. Where the 2nd column of the Schedule provides for a longer period of limitation than three years, the disability of minority cannot have the effect of extending the period which is running during the minority of a plaintiff to more than three years. This is the effect of section 8 read with section 6. Without any greater authority than a stray observation made by Sargent, C. J., in the course of the arguments in Faki Abas v. Faki Nurudin (2), that minors could not be excluded to their knowledge, I am not disposed to accept Mr. Narasimham's sweeping contention that a minor is by reason of his minority incapable of taking notice or of becoming aware of such a fact as his exclusion from family property.

(13) 21 Ind. Cas. 410; 38 M. 118; 25 M. L J. 405; 14 M. L. T. 401.

On the other question raised at the hearing, the decision of the lower Court on the question of valuation for purposes of Court fees is, in my opinion, final under section 12 of the Court Fees Act.

The memorandum of objections which relates to Pleader's fee is not pressed.

The appeal and the memorandum of objections must be dismissed with costs.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 484 OF 1918

July 11, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad and Mr. Justice Das.

HANUMAT MAHTON AND OTHERS — DEFENDANTS — APPELLANTS

versus

SONADHARI SINGH AND OTHERS — PLAINTIFFS AND CHINTAMAN MAHTON AND ANOTHER — DEFENDANTS — RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Debt incurred to defend member against criminal charge, whether binding on joint family property.

The stigma of a criminal charge against a member of a joint family being regarded among the Hindus as a disgrace to all the members of the family, any expense incurred to protect the family from such a threatened disgrace is necessarily in the interests of all the members of the family. Where, therefore, the karta of a joint family raises money to defray the expenses of defending a criminal case against him, the family property is liable for the debt so incurred. [p. 735, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Patna.

Mr. Bimola Charan Sinha, for the Appellants.

Mr. Achalendra Nath Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted on 3rd January 1917 to enforce a mortgage-bond, dated the 5th January 1904, executed by defendant No. 1.

Originally defendant No. 1, the executant of the bond, and his brother defendant No. 2 only were impleaded, but on the objection of the defendants, their sons also were added as defendants on the 5th March 1917. The defendant No. 2 and his sons were, however, subsequently on the application of the plaintiff deleted from the category of defendants. The suit, therefore, proceeded to trial against defendant No. 1 and his sons, who are appellants here.

The first Court held that the mortgage-bond in question is a genuine document and was duly executed for valuable consideration. It, however, dismissed the suit on the grounds (1) that certain necessary defendants were not impleaded in time, and (2) that the sons were not benefited by the loan and hence they or the joint family property mortgaged in the bond could not be made liable for the debt.

On appeal the learned District Judge agreed with the Munsif that the suit as against the appellants was barred by time, but disagreeing with the Munsif on the second point gave a mortgage decree against defendant No. 1 alone, with the usual direction that the property mortgaged in this bond was liable to be sold for the satisfaction of the decree. This property is said to be the ancestral property of the family in which the appellants as members of the joint family are interested. They have, therefore, come to this Court in second appeal and contended that the order in the decree of the lower Appellate Court directing the sale of the family property is illegal and should be set aside. There is no substance at all in their contention. The ground upon which the mortgage decree is assailed is said to be that there was no family necessity for which the mortgage debt was incurred and hence the family property could not be mortgaged by defendant No. 1 and be liable for the debt. The bond in question recites that the money was taken to meet the expenses of litigation. The finding of fact of the Court below that the money was borrowed to meet the expenses of a cattle trespass case brought against the defendant No. 1, the karta of the family, that the family was benefited by this loan, and the family property was liable disposes of this appeal.

It is, however, contended that the purpose set forth above, namely, to defray the expenses of a criminal case against the defendant No. 1, was not a legitimate purpose for which the family property could be liable and that the loan in question did not in fact benefit the other members of the family, notably the appellants in this case.

The point seems to have been settled by the decisions of several High Courts and particularly of this Court. In the case of Beni Ram v. Man Singh (1) it was held that the necessity of raising money to pay for the defence of the head member of a joint family committed to the Court of Session on serious criminal charges of forgery and fabrication of documents under sections 467 and 471, Indian Penal Code, was valid and legal, such as would support a mortgage of the family property executed by the father and one of the sons as security for the debt incurred. It was there pointed out that according to the Mitakshara Law one member of a joint family may effect a gift, mortgage or sale of the family property in time of dis ress and for family purposes. The stigma of a criminal charge against a member of a joint family is regarded among the Hindus as a disgrace to all the members of the family and any expenses incurred to protect the family from such a threatened disgrace would necessarily be in the interest of all the members of the family.

The principle was reiterated in the case of Ramalingam Pillai v. Muthayyan (2). The early authorities on the subject have all been cited in the aforesaid two cases. No doubt in the case of Nathu Rai v. Dindayal Rai (3), decided by a Division Bench of this Court on the 4th January 1917, it was held that the manager of a Hindu joint family is not entitled to spend the family funds in his own defence to a criminal charge, nor is he entitled to hypothecate the family property in order to raise money to meet the expenses of such a defence, except upon the ground of consent of the members of the joint family or upon the ground that from the circumstances it could be inferred that the other members of the family had consented. In that case no family property was, however, hypothecated in the bond, nor was there anything in the bond to shew that the debt was incurred by the manager of the family in his representative capacity. Upon the facts of that case the manager of the family intended that the debt should be his own personal debt. If the decision, however, intended to lay a general proposition that in no case the karta of a joint Mitakshara family can bind the other members in respect of debts incurred by him in defending himself against a criminal charge, its authority would be liable to objection. It is obvious, however, that there was no such intention of the learned Judges in that case to lay down such a broad proposition, for the judgment of the Court was delivered by Mr. Justice Chapman, who only a few months later on the 22nd of March 1917 held in the case of Chuman Chaudhury v. Musammat Ram Sunder Chudhurain (4), which is on all fours with the present case, that the son would be bound to pay the debts incurred by his father in defending himself against a criminal charge, especially when the offence charged did not involve any moral turpitude.

This last case was, therefore, rightly followed by the Court below. The contention of the learned Vakil is, therefore, overruled and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O. II, r. 1—Res judicata—Suit to redeem as karnavan of tarwad, dismissal of—Subsequent suit to redeem as successor of tarwad, maintainability of—Joinder of causes of action in alternative when allowed.

LAXMAN v. GANPAT SURYABHAN.

A plaintiff is not entitled to set up a false case to the relief which he claims and when he has failed, to plead a fresh case If he be in doubt as to which case is true, he should set out the two cases in the alternative, each case being one which ought to be made a ground of attack, so as to afford ground for a final decision upon the subject in dispute.

Where the plaintiff filed a suit for redemption as karnavan of a tarwad, and on its dismissal for want of proof of the title set up, brought the present suit for the same relief as successor of the tarwad which had become extinct:

Held, that the suit was barred as res judicata

Masilamania Pillai v Thiruvengadam Pillai, 31 M. 385 and Gariya Rangaswamy Patruda v Majji Appalaswamy, 34 Ind. Cas. 456; (1916) 1 M. W. N. 286, followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tellicherry, in Appeal Suit No. 523 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Quilandy, in Original Suit No. 204 of 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Kuttikrishna Menon, for the Appellants.—The allegations in the two suits are different. In the prior suit the claim was as Karnavan of the Tarwad. In the present case the plaintiffs set up title as successors of the Tarwad. The evidence to substantiate the one is different from that of the other. The doctrine of res judicata cannot apply.

Mr. A. V. K. Krishna Menon, for the Respondents.—The relief claimed is the same in both suits. Plaintiff ought to have alleged the title now set up in the prior suit and made it a ground of attack. He set up a false case and when that was found against, he now sets up a new case. The suit is barred as res judicata.

JUDGMENT.—The question in the former suit was whether the plaintiff was entitled to redeem a mortgage, that is, the matter in issue was whether the rights of the mortgagor had passed to the plaintiff The same matter is in issue in the present suit. It is, however, argued that in the former suit the plaintiff set up a title as Karnavan of the Mundoli Madham Tarwad, but in the present suit the plaintiffs set up a title as successors of that Tarwad, which has become extinct. No doubt the averments of the facts which conferred title upon the plaintiff, and the evidence which would be given by him, differed in the two cases, but the relief claimed is the same.

We think that a plaintiff is not entitled to set up a false case to the relief which he claims, and, when he has failed, to plead a fresh case; if he be in doubt as to which case is true, he should set out the two cases in the alternative; each case is one which ought to be made a ground of attack, so as to afford ground for a final decision upon the subject in dispute. (Vide Order II, rule 1).

We think that the case falls within the decisions in Masilamania Pillai v. Thiruvengadam Pillai (1) and Gariya Rangaswamy Patrudu v. Majji Appalaswamy (2) and the observations at page 77[illegible] in Ramaswami Ayyar v. Vythinatha Ayyar (3). The actual decision in the last case does not apply The joinder of the two titles in the former suit would not have caused any embarrassment in the trial. We, therefore, agree with the lower Court that the present suit is barred by res judicata and dismiss the second appeal with costs.

So far as such a person is concerned, he is entitled to object to the delivery of possession of property under Order XXI, rule 100, of the Civil Procedure Code, and if such objection fails, a regular suit lies at his instance within the period fixed by the law of limitation. [p. 737, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 221 of 1917, decided on 28th February 1918, arising out of Civil Suit No. 92 of 1917, in the Court of the Additional Munsif, Amraoti, decided on the 21st October 1917.

Mr. G. V. Deshmukh, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. K. Gandhe, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent is a lessee from the original defendant No. 1, Musammat Rukhma, under a registered lease, dated the 24th September 1914. He sued for possession as also for a declaration that he has a right to have certain entries regarding the Patta made in the Register of Record of Rights. Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4, who are the appellants before me, had instituted a suit upon a mortgage (Suit No. 103 of 1912) in which they obtained a foreclosure decree. Neither the judgment nor the decree of the original Court in the mortgage suit has been filed, but from Exhibit D-8 it would appear that Musammat Rukhma had filed an appeal which was dismissed, upon an objection taken on behalf of the mortgagees, on the ground that there was no decree against her and that she had been discharged from the mortgage suit, as she had set up a paramount title and was not entitled to redeem. It does not appear when the decree was made final, but from Exhibit P-11 it seems that Rukhma put in a petition under Order XXI, rule 100, objecting to the delivery of possession of the field now in dispute. This was eventually dismissed, because she did not wish to proceed with her application (Exhibit D-2).

The argument on behalf of the defendants-appellants is that the plaintiff, being a transferee pendente lite, stands in no better position than Musammat Rukhma and it is urged that as a separate suit did not lie at her instance, the plaintiff also cannot maintain this suit. It seems to me that section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, as now amended, does not bar a suit by Rukhma. She was a party to the mortgage suit, but having set up a paramount title was discharged from the suit, and no decree was passed either in her favour or against her. The appellants rely upon the judgments of this Court in Vithal Mukund v. Ganesh Mal (1) and Balaram Kunbi v. Sadoba Mali (2). These cases were decided under the Code of 1882. But there was a conflict of judicial opinion as to the right interpretation of section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882. The matter has now been set at rest by the Legislature, and we have to look to the terms of section 47 as it stands now. The explanation attached to the section says that for the purposes of this section a plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed and a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed are parties to the suit. In other words, to constitute a person a party to a suit within the meaning of section 47, there must be either a decree dismissing the suit or decreeing the claim in favour of or against a party. But a defendant against whom the claim is neither dismissed nor decreed, but is discharged as a person not a proper party to the suit, ceases to be a party to the trial of the suit. So far as such a person is concerned, he is entitled to object to the delivery of possession of property under Order XXI, rule 100, and if such objection fails, a regular suit lies at his instance within the period fixed by the law of limitation. No objection can be taken so far as this case is concerned on the ground of limitation, the suit having been filed within three months of the dismissal of the petition under Order XXI, rule 100. If, therefore, Rukhma could file a suit for possession, it is obvious that her transferee Ganpat can equally file it. The view which I have taken is supported by the judgment of the Madras

High Court in Krishnappa Mudaly v. Periaswamy Mudaly (3).

Since the decree of the Munsif in this suit Rukhma died. The appellants, therefore, seek to raise the question whether her interest has ceased or not. It appears that the field in dispute was allotted to Rukhma by way of maintenance. The lower Appellate Court has correctly held that the plaintiff's right to possession must be determined with reference to the state of things at the date of the suit, which state of things continued right up to the date of the decree of the first Court. Ordinarily, any subsequent changes which may have taken place cannot be made the subject-matter of a fresh inquiry in an appellate or later stage of the case.

The plaintiff asked for a particular declaration which has not been given, and he has been given a declaration which he never asked for. I think it is unnecessary in this case to give the plaintiff any relief by way of declaration, certainly not the relief which the Munsif has granted.

The result is that the decree of the Munsif is modified by striking out the words "the plaintiff is entitled to hold the possession of the field survey No. 62 (whole) of Haturna, Pargana Badnera, Tahsil Amraoti, till the expiry of his present lease in the year 1928 (1338 Fasli) and." With this modification the decree of the lower Courts is upheld and the appeal dismissed with costs.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Mortgage, payment of part consideration for—Declaration, suit for that mortgage is good only to extent of consideration actually paid, maintainability of.

A suit by a mortgagor for a declaration that the mortgage is good only to the extent of the part consideration actually paid, is not barred under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act where the term fixed for redemption has not expired at the date of suit.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Palghat at Calicut, in Appeal Suit No. 299 of 1917 (Appeal Suit No. 603 of 1917, District Court), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Alatur, in Original Suit No. 289 of 1916.

Mr. K. V. Madhavan Nair, for the Appellants.—The suit is not maintainable under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act The plaintiff could have asked for consequential relief. He must have prayed for redemption or for payment of the balance of the consideration.

Mr. T. S. Anantarama Iyer, for the Respondents.—Plaintiff need not have asked for further relief. The period for redemption has not expired and he is not bound to redeem at any earlier date. He need not have sued for the deficient amount. What the mortgagee is entitled to is what he actually paid The suit is maintainable.

JUDGMENT.—The argument addressed to us is that the suit should have been dismissed, because it offended against section 42, Specific Relief Act, in that plaintiff could have claimed further relief than he did by suing either for redemption or for payment to him of the amount by which he alleged that the consideration already paid was deficient. The answer as regards redemption is that the term fixed in the suit mortgage had not elapsed. The answer as regards the deficient amount is that, as pointed out by Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in Abdul Hashm Sahib v. Kader Batcha Sahib (1), plaintiff cannot be compelled to receive or claim the balance payable, if he prefers to do without it, the amount eventually recoverable on the mortgage being only that actually advanced. The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

A question of estoppel can only be raised by pleading, and where no facts are pleaded which would enable a Court to come to a conclusion whether the principle of estoppel is or is not applicable to the suit, the Court will refuse to go into the matter. [p. 741, col. 1.]

An admission made by a landlord is not binding on his tenant, and this being so, a compromise entered into between the proprietors of certain land and others, whereby the parties to the compromise become joint proprietors of the land, has no binding effect upon tenants of the land. An auction-purchaser of land is not bound by a statement in the sale certificate as to the situation of the land purchased by him. [p. 741, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Shahabad, dated the 27th September 1917, affirming a decision of the Munsif, 3rd Court, Arrah, dated the 15th March 1917.

FACTS.—The village Mamani Upadhya was divided into 5 Touzis. Two of the Touzis were numbered 6057 and 6059. Touzi No. 6057 belonged to defendants Nos. 1 to 3, and Touzi No. 6059 belonged to defendants Nos. 5 and 6. The plot of land in dispute was Shamilat land between the two Touzis and defendant No. 4 was its tenant. In 1911 at the Survey Settlement there was a dispute among the proprietors of Touzi No. 6057, viz., defendants Nos. 1 to 3, and the proprietors of No. 6059, viz., defendants Nos. 5 and 6, as regards the disputed land, but ultimately the dispute was compromised and the disputed land was allowed to be recorded as Shamilat of both the Touzis. On 13th March 1912 the plaintiffs purchased the disputed land in execution of a simple money decree as against defendant No. 4, who was its tenant. In the sale certificate obtained by the plaintiffs the plot of land was described as Shamilat in both the Touzis Nos. 6057 and 6059. In 1915 the plaintiffs brought the present suit for a declaration amongst other things that this plot in dispute was situated only in Touzi No. 6059 and defendants Nos. 5 and 6 were its sole proprietors, and that the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had nothing to do with the land. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 entered defence amongst other things that the plaintiff was estopped from maintaining the present suit. The first Court decreed the plaintiffs' suit and the District Judge of Shahabad on appeal confirmed the decision of the Court of first instance. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Parmeshwar Dyal, for the Appellants, contended that the plaintiffs in any case were estopped from maintaining this suit. The plaintiffs had purchased the right, title and interest of defendant No. 4, who was a tenant of the land, in execution of a simple money decree. The plaintiffs were, therefore, representatives of defendant No. 4 and claimed title under him. Defendant No. 4 was the tenant jointly of the proprietors of both the Touzis Nos. 6057 ann 6059 at the time when his holding was sold off and purchased by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs, claiming their title under defendant No. 4 who was a joint tenant of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and 5 and 6, were estopped from seeking a declaration that defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had no title to the land. It was virtually the denial of title of some of the landlords by a person who claimed under the joint tenant of all the landlords. The plaintiff, could not do so under section 116 of the Evidence Act. He relied further on Bigelow on Estoppel, page 554; Casperez on Estoppel, 4th Edition, pages 608, 248; Doe v. Mills (1), Taylor v. Needham (2), Gulzari Lal v. Madho Ram (3).

The plaintiff's own title-deed, the sale certificate, described the plot he purchased as Shamilat in both the Touzis. He must rely on his title deed as a whole. He could not go behind it and say that it was not situated in Touzi No. 6057. Caspersz on Estoppel, Edition 4th, page 319.

Besides when the landlords of both the Touzis had compromised long before the plaintiff's purchase and had declared that the land was in the joint proprietorship of the Maliks of both the Touzis, it was not open to a tenant to come and say that it belonged only to the proprietors of one of the Touzis. The compromise amongst the landlords incorporated in the order of his Settlement Officer had the effect of transferance of the proprietary interest in the land from the proprietors of Touzi No. 6059 to the proprietors of Touzi No. 6057, in case the latter had no interest in the land prior to the compromise. The tenant could not come a year or so after the compromise and annul the effect of it. If instead of a compromise, the proprietor of Touzis No. 6059 had executed a registered deed transferring a portion of their proprietary interest in the land to defendants Nos. 1 to 3, the plaintiff who was a mere tenant could not come to seek a declaration that the transferees had no interest in the land after the transfer. The tenant is the holder of a subordinate interest in the land. He is concerned only with the payment of the rent and occupation of the land. He has got no interest in the proprietary title in the land. He could, therefore, maintain no suit which would have the effect of setting at nought the compromise arrived at amongst the proprietors in respect to their proprietary right.

Messrs. Kulwant Sahai and Shivanandan Rai, for the Respondents, not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the respondents against the appellants, who were defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 in the suit, for the following reliefs:—

1. That it may be decided that the disputed land, whereof boundaries and details are given below, forms the plaintiffs' Gujasta Kasht land as it was purchased by them in an auction-sale; that defendant No. 4 has no raiyati right therein; and that it is in Touzi No. 6059, the Milkiat of defendants Nos. 5 and 6.

2. That it may be decided that the said land is not in Touzi No. 6057, the Milkiat of defendants Nos. 1 to 3, that it is not in the joint Takhta, that the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 have no right to get rent for the said land, that the decree obtained by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 against defendant No. 4 for arrears of rent is fraudulent, and that defendants Nos. 1 to 3 have no right to get the disputed land sold in execution of the aforesaid fraudulent decree.

3. That on a consideration of the above the execution and sale proceedings in Execution Case No. 525 of 1915 be stayed until the disposal of this suit by sending a Rubkar to the 3rd Court of the Munsif therefor.

It will be noticed, therefore, that the plaintiffs in the action are seeking first of all to establish their raiyati interest in the land in dispute as against defendant No. 4 as the purchasers from him, secondly, to establish that their holdings are in Touzi No. 6059 and not in Touzi No. 6057, and, thirdly, they are seeking to get a declaration that the decree and execution proceedings obtained by defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 against defendant No. 4 are fraudulent.

Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 entered appearence, and they contested the suit on the ground that the decree obtained by the plaintiffs against defendant No. 4 was entirely fraudulent and that by virtue of the purchase made by the plaintiffs they never obtained possession of the holding belonging to defendant No. 4, and that the plaintiffs have never been accepted as tenants by the defendants. They put forward the title of defendant No. 4 to the land in dispute and they assert in emphatic language that in spite of the purchase made by the plaintiffs, they have a right to realise rent from defendant No. 4 so long as they do not admit the plaintiffs as their raiyats. This is how I read paragraph 12 of the written statement. Therefore, on the pleadings between the parties the whole question was, was the purchase made by the plaintiffs a genuine purchase and whether defendant No. 4 was a tenant in possession of the land in dispute. It is obvious to me that the plaintiffs have been put forward by defendants Nos. 5 and 6, whereas defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are championing the cause of defendant No. 4.

PURGAN PANDE v. DHANPAT TEWARI.

The lower Appellate Court has found that the land in dispute falls within Touzi No. 6059, the Patti owned by defendants Nos. 5 and 6, and is not included in Touzi No. 6057, the Patti owned by defendants Nos. 1 to 3, and that the plaintiffs have been recognized as tenants by defendants Nos. 5 and 6. The lower Appellate Court has come to this conclusion on a consideration of the Amin's report to which, it appears, no valid objection was ever taken by the appellants and on a consideration of oral evidence. The lower Appellate Court finds that the respondents are in possession of the land in dispute by paying rent to defendants Nos. 5 and 6. On these findings it would seem that there is no merit in this appeal and that the same ought to be dismissed by this Court. But the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the appellant has argued this appeal as a first appeal and has asked me to consider the various documents in the case, which he says were not considered by the lower Appellate Court.

His point is that the plaintiffs, having purchased the interest of defendant No. 4, are estopped in this suit from denying the title of defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 to the land in dispute. I have always understood that a question of estoppel can only be raised by pleading and that if no question of estoppel has been raised in the pleadings, the Court will refuse to go into the matter, because after all the doctrine of estoppel is merely an extension of the doctrine of admission which depends on the facts of each case, and that the Court is clearly unable to examine the facts unless those facts are pleaded. No doubt there is a stereotyped plea that the principle of estoppel is applicable to the suit, a plea which is to be found in every printed copy of written statement available in the Mofussil Courts, but no facts are pleaded in the written statement which would enable the Court to come to a conclusion whether the principle of estoppel is or is not applicable to the suit. On the contrary the whole written statement shows that the plaintiffs have no right at all to the land in dispute and that defendant No. 4, in spite of the purchase made by the plaintiffs, still continues as the tenant on the land and is liable to the defendants for rent. In my opinion it is not open to the defendants on this written statement to argue the question of estoppel. They emphatically assert that defendant No. 4 is still a tenant and that the plaintiffs have nothing to do with the land in dispute. I do not think that they can now turn round, because the findings of the Courts below are against them, and say that the plaintiffs are their tenants and must pay rent to them. But I do not propose to decide the question on a technical point. I desire to examine the ground on which it has been argued by the learned Vakil that the principle of estoppel is applicable to this suit.

He says, first of all, that the proprietors of the land, that is to say, defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 on the one hand and defendants Nos. 5 and 6 on the other hand entered into a compromise by which they became joint proprietors in respect of the land in suit. The argument is that the tenant is bound by the compromise entered into by the landlords. I am unable to agree with the learned Vakil that an admission made by a landlord is binding on the tenant at all. Secondly, it is argued by the learned Vakil that the sale certificate obtained by the plaintiffs shows that the land in dispute is situated in Touzi No. 6057 as well as in Touzi No. 6059. No doubt the sale certificate shows that, but I am unable to hold that because the sale certificate shows that the property in dispute is partly situated in Touzi No. 6057, therefore, the plaintiff, who is a complete stranger to the land, must be bound by a statement appearing in the sale certificate, especially when the Amin's report shows that no portion of the land is situtated in Touzi No. 6057. I do not think that even if the lower Appellate Court has misconstrued these documents, necessarily the judgment of the lower Appellate Court must and ought to be set aside. These are items of evidence which have to be considered along with the other evidence admitted or proved in the case. The lower Appellate Court has considered a very important piece of evidence, that is to say, the Amin's report, to which, as the lower Appellate Court says, no valid objection was taken at any time. The lower Appellate Court further considered the oral evidence in the case I cannot say reading the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that it did not consider the documents on which the learned Vakil so strongly relies.

In my opinion the finding of the lower Appellate Court, however erroneous it may be, is a finding of fact which is binding on me. I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 48, Sch. III, para. 11 (3), applicability of—"Period of limitation," whether includes period provided by s. 48.

The provisions of clause (3) of paragraph 11 of the 3rd Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code are wide enough to include the case of an application for the execution of a decree to which section 48 of the Code applies. The words "period of limitation" in the clause are intended to apply to the restrictions placed upon the right of a decree-holder to take out execution of his decree both by the Limitation Act and section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code. JUDGMENT.—This and the connected appeal arise out of execution proceedings in connection with a simple decree for money passed on the 18th of December 1897. Various applications for execution were made between that year and the year 1906. In 1905 the property of the judgment-debtors in the District of Hamirpur was taken charge of by the Collector, apparently under the provisions of section 326 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. The management of the Collector continued down to 1917, when he released the property. On the 4th of April 1917 the Court of Wards, now in charge of the estate of the decree-holder, applied for attachment and sale of the property situated in the Hamirpur district. This application was resisted by the judgment-debtors on the ground of limitation. They contended that the application was barred by the three years' rule of limitation prescribed by the Limitation Act and also under section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The objection was allowed by the Court of first instance, which held that having regard to the fact that more than twelve years had elapsed since the date of the decree, section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure was applicable and the present application for execution could not be maintained. This decision has been overruled by the lower Appellate Court, which has held that the application for execution is within time.

The learned Vakil for the appellants has conceded that the three years' rule of limitation under the Limitation Act would not apply to the present case in view of the provisions of clause (3), paragraph 11 of the 3rd Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. He contends that section 48 is applicable and as more than twelve years have expired since the date of the decree, the present application cannot be granted. There can be no doubt that the present application is a substantive application and a fresh application for the execution of the decree. It is not an application in continuance of any previous application for execution. The question to be decided is whether clause (3) of paragraph 11 of the 3rd Schedule is applicable to the present case, so far as the question of the bar of section 48 arises. Clause 2 of paragraph 11 provides that during the period that the property of the judgment-debtor is under the management of the Collector, no Civil Court shall issue any process of execution either against the judgment-debtor or his property in respect of any decree for the satisfaction whereof provision has been made by the Collector under paragraph 7. Clause (3) provides that the same period shall be excluded in calculating the period of limitation applicable to the execution of any decree affected by the provisions of this paragraph in respect of any remedy of which the decree-holder has been temporarily deprived. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that this clause applies to the period of limitation prescribed by the Limitation Act for the execution of a decree and that the period after which an application for execution cannot be made in view of the provisions of section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure is not a "period of limitation" within the meaning of this clause. We think that the words "period of limitation applicable to the execution of any decree" in clause (3) have been used in a general sense and that they are intended to apply to the time beyond which an application cannot be made for execution of a decree. This was the view taken by the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Oudh in Mohammad Abdul Karim Khan v. Nawaz Singh (1). In that case a question similar to the one which arises in this appeal was considered and decided. The learned Judicial Commissioners were of opinion that clause (3) of paragraph 11 was wide enough to include the case of an application to which section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies. As the learned Judicial Commissioners point out in that case, there are two descriptions of limitation provided for applications for execution. One is that prescribed by the Indian Limitation Act and the other is that provided in section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 48 forbids the granting of an application after the expiry of 12 years from the date of the decree except in the cases specified in the section. This provision lays down a limitation to the right of the decree-holder to execute his decree as much as the Limitation Act prescribes different periods of limitation for repeated applications for execution. It seems to us that in clause (3) of paragraph 11 the words 'period of limitation' are intended to apply to both kinds of restrictions placed upon the right of the decree-holder to take out execution of his decree, and in this sense that clause would be applicable to a case to which section 48 applies. Much reliance was placed on behalf of the appellants upon certain observations contained in the judgment of this Court in Jurawan Das v. Mahabir Dube (2). In that case the real question to be decided was whether section 15 of the Limitation Act was applicable to the case and whether the word 'prescribed' in section 15 of that Act could be construed as including any period of limitation prescribed otherwise than by the provisions of the Limitation Act. It was held that the word 'prescribed' in section 15 meant prescribed by the Indian Limitation Act. In the course of the judgment, however, it was stated that "section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not in a strict sense provide a 'period' of limitation." These observations are relied upon in support of the contention that the words "period of limitation" mentioned in clause (3) do not include cases to which section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies. No doubt in a strict sense section 48 does not prescribe a period of limitation, but in a general sense it imposes a "limitation" on the right of the decree-holder to apply for execution after the expiry of twelve years from the date of the decree. In that general sense, although by section 48 a "period of limitation", strictly so-called, is not prescribed, the twelve years' rule in effect lays down "the period of limitation applicable to an application for execution." Those are the words used in clause (3) of paragraph 11 of the 3rd Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure. We think, therefore, that the case relied on by the learned Vakil for the appellants is not in conflict with the view which we have expressed above and with the decision of the Oudh Court to which we have referred. For these reasons we hold that the decision of the Court below is right and these appeals must fail. We accordingly dismiss them with costs including fees on the higher, scale.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Nainar, in Appeal No. 67 of 1918, dated the 22nd July 1918.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Gupta and W. R. Puranik, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which this second appeal arises are fully stated in the judgments of the lower Courts. The plaintiff in the suit purchased on the 26th February 1917 a certain house, the value of which is Rs. 100, from Raoji. This Raoji had become the owner of the house by virtue of a gift from his wife Maina Bai, who died on the 14th February 1917. Maina Bai was the daughter of one Motiram, who owned besides the house a malik makbuza plot in Mouza Chulkhan, an occupancy field in Mouza Jhiri and an occupancy field in Mouza Nimbola. Motiram, who died in 1912 or 1913, left all three fields and the house to Maina Bai and his sister's grandson Deoram. It is common ground that Maina Bai and Deoram represented by his father Totaram held the property covered by the Will jointly until the 1st February 1916. According to the plaintiff a partition was effected on the 1st February 1916, by virtue of which the house and the malik makbuza plot fell to the share of Maina Bai, the two occupancy fields going to Deoram.

The plaintiff came into the Court claiming possession of the house on the strength of the partition which is evidenced by the registered deed (Exhibit P-1), on the allegation that after he obtained possession Totaram on behalf of Deoram ejected him. The defence set up is contained in a written statement, which denied the partition and contended inter alia that the division was not binding on the defendant as it was illegal, invalid, unequal, inequitable and unjust. The trial Judge found that the partition took place and that Maina Bai and Deoram held possession in accordance with it. The defendant's evidence attacked the partition solely on the ground of unfairness and the trial Judge held on consideration of all the evidence that it was fair. The plaintiff accordingly obtained a decree for possession.

The defendant, who is represented not by his father but by a paternal uncle as guardian ad litem, appealed to the District Court, contending that the partition was unfair and praying that the trial Judge's decree might be modified so as to entitle the plaintiff to joint possession to the extent of a half share only. The District Judge held the partition to be fair and dismissed the appeal.

In second appeal several new points are taken on behalf of the defendant-appellant. The first is that inasmuch as occupancy fields cannot legally be devised by Will under the decision in Laxmi Bai v. Alyar Khan (1), Maina Bai must be deemed to have become the sole tenant on Motiram's death and the partition of 1916, therefore, amounted to a transfer which is prohibited by sub-section (3), section 46, C. P. Tenancy Act, 1898. On being pressed to state whether Deoram has any title to the occupancy land and, if so on what that title is based, his Pleader accepted the position taken up for the plaintiff-respondent which is supported by entries in the village papers, namely, that the malguzar recognised Maina Bai and Deoram as joint tenants on Motiram's death. Had the present contention of the appellant been raised in the first Court, further evidence would doubtless have been adduced to establish this recognition of Deoram as a tenant by the landlord. It might also have been shown that a new tenancy was created, the landlord not being content to treat Maina Bai the rightful heir as merely taking herself a co sharer. If there was a new tenancy, then Deoram may have been a person in favour of whom the right of occupancy originally arose and to such a case the proviso to sub section (3) of section 46 would apply, if a partition be regarded as a form of transfer which is ordinarily prohibited. I think then that this new contention of the appellant cannot be regarded as raising a mere question of law. It should have been advanced in the Court of first instance and is hereby overruled as not entertainable at this stage.

The next contention pressed for the appellant is also a new one, being to the effect that sub-section (5) of section 46 precluded the Registering Officer from registering Exhibit P-1. This contention appears to me to be entirely without substance. The partition deed expressly represents Maina Bai and Deoram as having jointly succeeded under Motiram's Will and so might reasonably have been regarded by the Registration Officer as putting Deoram in the position of a co-sharer by succession. Sub-section (5) is worded in a way which to my mind indicates that the Registering Officer was not expected by the Legislature to decide as to the soundness of the recitals in the document presented for registration. If the document contains a recital of any of the kinds mentioned he is not precluded from effecting registration. I hold that the partition deed was not unjustifiably registered so as to be void within the principle recognized in Nilkant v. Ghulya (2).

Thirdly it is said that the partition is on the face of it unfair, inasmuch as an occupancy holding is not transferable and is consequently much less valuable than a malik makbuza plot or a house and that the lower Appellate Court has altogether overlooked this feature of the case. That the District Judge was fully aware of the difference in respect of alienability between a malik makbuza plot and an occupancy holding appears plainly from the sixth paragraph of his judgment. Both the lower Courts were indeed impressed with the fact that Totaram being indebted Deoram's position would be safer if he took the occupancy land. Moreover, it appears from the evidence of the defendant's own witness Sampat Lala (D. W. No. 4) that this consideration was put forward while the negotiations for the partition were going on. All the fields were inspected by the plaintiff's witness Sakharam (P. W. No. 7), whose evidence both the trial Judge and the lower Appellate Court have accepted and who, having had long experience in the Land Record and Settlement Departments, was not without substantial qualifications for reporting on their market-value. It must also be remembered that the occupancy rights may be surrendered for value to the landlord or sold to the heir-apparent, so that they cannot be regarded as altogether inalienable.

It remains to notice the contention that the lower Appellate Court wrongly threw upon the appellant the burden of showing that the partition was unequal and unjust. This contention is based upon the first sentence in the seventh paragraph of the lower Appellate Court's judgment, which runs thus:—

"The burden of proving that the partition was unequal and unjust and brought about by undue influence and fraud lay heavily upon the defendant and he failed to discharge it."

It is admitted for the respondents, who are the widows of the original plaintiff, that the plaintiff had the burden of showing that the partition was fair and so binding on the minor. The statement above quoted is certainly worded with some looseness, but no question of burden really arises at this stage, inasmuch as the Courts below have both accepted the evidence adduced by the plaintiff as to the values of the respective shares allotted at the partition. Moreover, the fact that Totaram signed the partition deed on behalf of his son was rightly regarded as some guarantee for the fairness of the transaction, and it is significant that Totaram was not into the witness-box to explain how he came to assent to the division evidenced by Exhibit P-1.

The appeal could in no view succeed with regard to the entire house in dispute, inasmuch as the appeal to the District Court did not seek the entire reversal of the trial Judge's decree. For the reasons above given I consider that the partition is binding on the appellant and that it is not open to him to contend at this stage that the Will conferred on him no right in respect of the occupancy holding. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs. In the Courts below costs will be paid as already ordered.

(2) 42 Ind. Cas. 384; 13 N. L. R. 165.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 18—Execution of decree—Cross-decrees—Set-off, direction as to, in one decree—Application for execution, whether necessary before set-off can be allowed.

Where a landlord holds a decree against his tenant for rent, and the latter holds a decree against his landlord for mesne profits, but there is a direction in the decree for rent that execution is not to issue until the amount due under the decree for mesne profits is ascertained, the intention is that the decrees should be set off against each other. It is not necessary, in such a case, that the decrees on both sides should be before the Court for execution as required by Order XXI, rule 18 of the Civil Procedure Code, in order that a set-off might be claimed.

Miscellaneous appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Patna, dated the 9th January 1915.

Mr. Kulwant Sahai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Lachmi Narain Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

CHAMIER, C. J.—The respondent held decrees for rent amounting to Rs. 2,000 against his tenant Tipan Prasad Singh. The latter, who held a decree against the respondent for Rs. 11,123 on account of mesne profits, sold it to the appellants who applied for execution by sale of some property of the respondent. The Court below has held that the amount due on the decree held by the respondent should be set off against the amount due on the decree held by the appellants and that the latter should be allowed to execute their decree for the balance only. Hence this appeal.

The appellants are, prima facie, bound to allow the set-off, but they contend that the set-off should not be allowed inasmuch as the respondent has not applied for execution of his decrees. Order XXI, rule 18, no doubt contemplates that the decrees on both sides are before the Court for execution, i.e., that both sides shall have taken out execution. But the circumstances of the present case are peculiar. The High Court, when affirming one of the decrees for rent, said that execution should not issue until the amount of mesne profits due under the decree in favour of the appellants had been ascertained. Evidently the intention was that the decrees should be set off against each other. If the Court below had ruled that a set off could not be allowed inasmuch as the respondent had not taken out execution, the respondent would have taken out execution at once. In consequence of the decision of the Court below the respondent has not taken out execution. It is quite clear that the decrees held by the parties should be set off against each other as far as possible and all parties understood that this would be done. In these circumstances we dismiss this appeal but we make no order as to costs.

SHARFUDDIN, J.—I agree.

FACTS.—Plaintiff took a mortgage from 3rd defendant of his $\frac{1}{3}$rd share in the family property. The other defendants were his co-parceners. In a suit to enforce the mortgage it was pleaded that a mortgage by one co-parcener of his undivided share is invalid according to the Mitakshara School. JUDGMENT.—The second of the cases relied on by the District Judge, Lachhman Prasad v Sarnam Singh (1), was decided with reference to the law in Allahabad, and in Anant Ram v. Collector of Etah (2), the Judicial Committee in referring to the same case quote it as being authority for that province.

The fact that the law on this point is different in Madras and Bombay from the law in Allahabad and Calcutta was recognised by the Privy Council so long ago as Lakshman Dada Naik v. Ramchandra Dada Naik (3) and Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (4). This being so, we are not prepared to apply Lachhman Prasad v. Sarnam Singh (1) as it is opposed to the ruling of the Full Bench of this Court in Chinnu Pillai v. Kalimuthu Chetti (5), which confirms the current of previous decisions in this Presidency. Under this ruling, plaintiff is entitled to a decree against his mortgagor's 1/3rd share of the property mortgaged and there will be a decree accordingly. RAKHAL CHANDRA PURKAIT—APPELLANT

SUDHINDRA NATH BOSE, RECEIVER TO THE ESTATE OF BROJO NATH DAS, INSOLVENT—RESPONDENT.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 16 (6), 36—Order of adjudication, date of operation of—Property transferred by insolvent within two years before presentation of petition of insolvency, whether liable to claims of creditors—Transfer, validity of.

Section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act should be read along with section 16 (6) of the Act. Therefore, for the purpose of making the properties of the insolvent liable to the claims of his creditors, an order of adjudication relates back to, and takes effect from, the date of the presentation of the petition for insolvency. [p. 749, col 1.]

Under the provisions of section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, read with section 16 (6) of the Act, a transfer made by an insolvent more than two years before the date of the adjudication order out within two years before the date of the presentation of the petition for insolvency, may be void against the Receiver and annulled by the Court. [p. 749, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, 24 Pergannahs, dated the 12th June 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter (with him Babu Banku Behari Mullik Choudhury), for the Appellant.—In this case the order of adjudication was made on the 25th July 1915, and the property in question was transferred on the 9th July 1913. In other words, the property was transferred more than two years before the order of adjudication. Hence the transfer cannot be said to be void as against the Receiver. Moreover, section 16 (6) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, which lays down that an order of adjudication shall relate back to and take effect from the date of the presentation of the petition, does not apply to a case like this. That section refers to other cases of relation back. Here the transfer, being made more than two years before the order of adjudication, is not within the purview of section 16 (6), Provincial Insolvency Act. Therefore the validity of the transfer cannot be questioned.

Babu Bepin Bihari Ghosh (with him Messrs. Narendra Nath Mukerjee and Ashutosh Ghose), for the Respondents.—It appears from the judgment of the Court below that transfer is a sham transaction. There is no actual transfer by the insolvent to the appellant, no change of possession, and no change of title. There is no evidence to shew that the appellant paid the consideration money. By virtue of the adjudication order the Receiver is entitled to get possession of the property which belongs to the insolvent.

As regards the question of relation back, we find that under the English rule, the order of adjudication relates back to the date when the insolvent commits an act of bankruptcy. Again under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act the relation back refers to the date when an act of bankruptcy is committed. But the Provincial Insolvency Act has fixed the time to which the order of adjudication should relate back, namely, the time of the presentation of the petition of bankruptcy. Here the relation back is restricted to the date of the presentation of the petition of bankruptcy. Here the period is made certain, so that perjury may be prevented, which sometimes takes place to prove that an act of bankruptcy was committed on a certain day. Refers to sections 36, 16 (6), Provincial Insolvency Act, Pollitt, In re, Minor, Ex parte (1) and Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume II, page 61.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is against an order of the District Judge of the 24-Pergannahs under section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, by which he held that the alleged transfer of certain property made by an insolvent in favour of the appellant was void as against the Receiver.

The insolvent Brojo Nath executed a deed of sale in favour of the appellant Rakhal on the 9th July 1913. Brojo Nath applied to be declared insolvent on the 7th May 1915 and the order of adjudication was made on the 25th July 1915. The Receiver in insolvency applied to the District Judge on the 11th April 1916 for avoiding the transfer. The learned District Judge held that the transfer was void having been made within two years before the date of the presentation of the petition for insolvency, and upon the evidence he found that the transfer was without consideration and did not pass any title to the appellant.

Now, section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act lays down that any transfer of property, not being a transfer made before and in consideration of marriage or made in favour of a purchaser or encumbrancer in good faith and for valuable consideration, shall, if the transferor is adjudged insolvent within two years after the date of the transfer, be void a against the Receiver and may be annulled by the Court.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the transfer in the present case, having been made more than two years before the date of the adjudication order, is not void against the Receiver.

Section 16 (6) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, however, lays down that an order of adjudication shall relate back to, and take effect from, the date of the presentation of the petition on which it is made.

It is contended that section 16 (6) of the Act does not affect any transfer made two years before the order of adjudication, but that the relation back has reference to other matters. We are of opinion, however, that an order of adjudication relates back to, and takes effect from, the date of the presentation of the petition for the purpose of making the properties of the insolvent liable to the claims of the creditors. Under the English Law, an order of adjudication relates back to, and takes effect from, the date of an act of insolvency but under the Indian law (section 16 (6) of the Provincial Insolvency Act), an order of adjudication operates only from the day when the petition of insolvency is presented to the Court. It follows that from that time the property of the debtor is made available for payment of the debts. If the contention of the appellant were accepted, the provisions of the Act might be defeated in some cases. After the petition for insolvency is made, the order of adjudication may be delayed in some cases for more than two years, for instance, where the matter goes up to the Privy Council on appeal, and in such a case any transfer made by the insolvent within two years before the date of presentation of the petition of insolvency, but more than two years before the order of adjudication, would become valid. We do not think that such a result was contemplated and we are of opinion that the provisions of section 36 are to be read with section 16 (6) of the Act.

The next question is whether the learned Judge was right in his finding upon the evidence in the case.

It appears that the transfer was made by the insolvent in favour of his sister's son and it is found that notwithstanding the transfer the insolvent was in possession of the property, and although it appears that the rent receipts stand in the name of his sister's son Rakhal, the insolvent mortgaged the property to a third person after the date of the transfer, and Rakhal himself was an attesting witness to the bond. Having regard to these facts and others mentioned in the judgment of the learned Judge, we think that his finding is correct.

The appeal must accordingly be dismissed with costs, one gold mohur.

A surrender by a Hindu widow to her reversioners of practically the whole of her husband's estate is valid, though the actual consideration paid is small and very much below the value of the estate and though a part of the consideration is an agreement to reconvey the property to third parties. [p. 754, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

APPEAL No. 373 OF 1915.

The object of the suit in which these appeals arise was to obtain a declaration that the 1st defendant was not the adopted son of one Gopalakrishnayya and that the plaintiff was entitled to 1/15th share of the property in Schedule A to the plaint, to recover the same from the defendants, to obtain an apportionment of the property with reference to bad and good soil and for other reliefs. The 84th and 85th defendants, unless the 93rd defendant was validly adopted by Manikyam, the 92nd defendant, would be the nearest reversioners of Gopalakrishnayya and the plaintiff, who is the remoter reversioner, claims 1/15th share of the estate under a deed of arrangement entered into between the 84th and 85th defendants, who had obtained a surrender of the properties from Gopalakrishnayya's mother Rangammah on 23rd November 1911, and the rest of the presumptive reversioners living at the time. Gopalakrishnayya had died on 30th July 1895 leaving a widow Ammama, who died subsequently on 3rd November 1911 whereupon the properties devolved on Gopalakrishnayya's mother, Rangamma, who would be about 90 years old and is still alive. The main contest was between the whole body of reversioners on one side basing their title on the surrender by Rangamma and on the other the 1st defendant claiming to have been validly adopted by the widow Ammama and the 93rd defendant claiming to have been adopted by Manikyam, the 92nd defendant, the widow of one Koniah, a deceased first cousin of Gopalakrishnayya and who would, therefore, have a better right to the reversion than the 84th and 85th defendants. The defendants in the suit are, besides the reversioners other than the plaintiff, various other persons who are in possession of different items of property under some claim or other, either by transfer from the reversioners or from the widow or otherwise. The 91st defendant, it may be mentioned, is the National College of Masulipatam to which a gift was made of 1/15th share by the reversioners. A large number of issues were tried and in the result the learned Subordinate Judge decreed the plaintiff's claim. We shall deal with the different questions argued before us in the several appeals and memoranda of objections in their order.

On the question relating to the authority alleged to have been given by Gopalakrishnayya to his widow Ammama to make an adoption, we have no hesitation in agreeing with the conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge. The burden of proving that the adoption was made under proper authority lay upon the 1st defendant, but having considered the evidence of the defendant's witness on this point, we are not at all satisfied that Gopalakrishnayya gave authority as is alleged. Gopalakrishnayya died on the 30th July 1895 and the case of the defendant is that the authority was given to the widow on the same day. It is not clear upon the evidence what he actually died of. The evidence adduced in support of the authority to adopt is that he died suddenly, and that the illness, whatever it was, only occurred on the very date of his death. The man who is alleged to have treated him, the defendants' 14th witness Amba Narasayya, says that he hardly knew what the matter was with this man, but however that may be, the most important evidence on which Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar naturally relies in support of his case is that of the 13th witness for the defendants, a second grade Pleader. He says that he came to know Gopalakrishnayya as both of them were fond of music and used to meet at music parties and theatres. The learned Subordinate Judge has discussed this evidence at great length and his conclusion is that the testimony of this witness cannot be acted upon. He points
